Pesky Devils Quietus
P. D. Q.

P. D. Q., Pesky Devils Quietus, is the name of the new chemical that actually ends the bug family, Bed Bugs, Roaches, Ants and Fleas, as P. D. Q. kills the live ones and their eggs and stops future generations. Not an insect powder but a chemical unlike anything you have ever used.

A 35 cent package makes one quart and each package contains a patent spout, to get the Pesky Devils in the cracks and crevices.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Should Use Swamp-Root

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview of the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing, be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

A Social Error

Donald had fidgeted at the table, fussed to go out to play again and had been a rather naughty boy, so it was with a little sigh of relief that his mother said he might be excused.

At the sound of the clatter of the dishes that announced the taking out of the plates preparatory to the serving of the dessert, Donald came in. The big shortcake, smothered in luscious berries and whipped cream, he eyed with delight, and coaxingly approached his mother, saying: "Mother, may I be unseused?"—Exchange.

Don't chuckle if you put over a substitute when an advertised product is called for. Maybe your customer will never come back.

Record Farm Crowd Gathers At M. A. C.

The largest crowd of farm people that ever gathered for a single meeting of its kind in the history of Michigan agriculture attended by the seventh annual summer Farmer Day at M. A. C. on August 1.

Official attendance figures given out by E. B. Hill, chairman of the college farm day committee, placed the crowd at 6,000, an admittedly conservative estimate. Other estimates made by officials and visitors ran up to 8,000 and even 10,000.

After inspection of the college farm and experimental plots in the morning and a general visit to the buildings and barns, the crowd gathered under the campus trees for a basket picnic lunch at noon. Neighborhood and county groups from all sections of the state were in evidence during the luncheon hour.

Following inspection of the specially prepared agricultural exhibits the crowd gathered in the outdoor meeting ground at one thirty for the big afternoon conference. A special system of amplifiers carried the speakers' voices to all corners of the assemblage, which was spread out on the slope of the campus near the home economics building.

G. I. Christie, of Purdue University; H. T. Horner, of the M. A. C. economics department; and A. M. Brown, of Schoolcraft, former secretary of the college, were the principal speakers. A special livestock "style review" of college animals featured the meeting, which was presided over by acting president Robert S. Shaw, dean of agriculture at M. A. C.

What do you think of a man walking from his home to a hospital complaining of pains in his back and then upon examination the doctors find he is suffering from a broken spine. This happened at Grand Rapids and the doctors are figuring to fix this fellow up so he can if necessary shoulder 2½ bushels of wheat with ease.

Old Timers Swing Educated Scythes

Old-timers at the farming game in the state whetted up their favorite scythes on August 1 and demonstrated to the younger generation at the M. A. C. Farmers Day the way in which hay was made in the early days of Michigan Agriculture.

Thirty one pioneers, gathered from many sections of the state, entered the contest, which was part of the special hay day demonstration put on in the morning of Farmers Day. Many brought their own scythes along, and the exhibit of old time scythes was as interesting as the contest itself. Each contestant was "turned loose" in a field of heavy alfalfa and given five minutes in which to demonstrate his skill.

The all-around champion cup for best scytheman went to P. E. Waldron, of Grand Ledge, Michigan, a 68 year old contestant. A cup for the neatest work was won by E. Judson, of Durand. E. S. Goodlin of Bath, in Clinton County, was awarded a prize for cutting the most hay the fourth cup went to I. P. Mosely of Onondaga, the oldest contestant in the contest. Mosely is 90 years of age.

Honorable mention was given to six other contestants for excellence of work done. They are: N. Snyder, of East Lansing; A. F Hanton, of St. Louis; D. P. Ashley, Dimondale; W. F. Root, Swan Creek; Wm Lears Saginaw.

The judges for the contest, themselves old-times in state farming circles, were; I. H. Butterfield, of Detroit, father of Kenyon Butterfield, president elect of M. A. C.; Jason Woodman, of Paw Paw; H. F. Probert, of Jackson; and W. F. Johnson, of Wexford County. The farm crops department at M. A. C. supervised the staging of the contest.

What Do the Bankers Mean, "Eighteen Billion Dollars in the Savings Bank"?

By JOHN OAKWOOD

The bankers keep telling us that the savings accounts of the American people total eighteen billion dollars. I asked a dozen people what that meant to them. Most of them seemed to see visions of endless stacks of coins and bales of currency stowed away in the vaults of fine looking granite bank buildings.

* * *

Now, as a matter of fact, there is less than nine billion dollars' worth of money in the country all told, including gold, silver, nickel and paper money of all kinds. That is less than half the eighteen billion. Therefore there must be something wrong with the vision of eighteen billion dollars in stacks and bales in the bank vaults. More than that, there probably is not more than one dollar for every twent of that eighteen billion actually in the savings bank.

* * *

But the eighteen billion in savings bank is no myth just the same. Suppose all the savings depositors could demand all their money all at once, and that they insisted on immediate settlement one way or another when they found they could not get it all in cash. What would happen would be that they would come into possession chiefly of bonds—Government, state and municipal bonds and the best railroad, equipment, public utility and other corporation bonds. The savings depositors are really the owners of all this vast real wealth.

* * *

What the bankers really mean, therefore, is that the savings depositors, so far as money is concerned, have deposited eighteen billion dollars more than they have drawn out and therefore have credit for that much in their savings accounts. The dollars, themselves, that they handed in, have flowed right on through the banks—have been sent out to buy the bonds. That is, the money deposits have been used in behalf of the depositors to buy the safest forms of investments. When a man buys a bond, he really rents his money out—puts it to work to earn him more money. The savings banks have done this for their depositors.

* * *

So the picture of idle piles of money is all wrong. Even a picture of piles of bonds is wrong if it stops at that. The bonds represent two things. First, since they are readily saleable for cash, they mean that any individual can get his savings out again in the form of money within a reasonable time. Secondly, and more important, behind those bonds loom up the railroads, factories, businesses and public works that the money invested in them set going for the benefit of everyone, including the depositors themselves. Saving, therefore, is not merely accumulating money—it is accumulating real wealth. The money flows on like water to turn other wheels—the real wealth and savings of the country are the accumulated factories and other enterprises evidenced by the bonds.

* * *

Therefore the true picture of what the bankers mean when they say the savings accounts of the American people total eighteen billion dollars, instead of piles of money in vaults, would be factories, railroads and public works in action.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON INVESTING THE LEGACY

"I really wish I could understand investments, Aunt Emmy," said Jane. "Since we received that legacy I have tried to get some money sense into my head. The financial pages in the papers are just a jumble of words to me. I can't make out the difference between stocks and bonds nor for the life of me see what makes one thing an investment and another a speculation."

Aunt Emmy laughed. "Lots of people puzzle over those things, my dear. But your first problem is simple enough," she said. "Suppose you buy a bond, a $100 Liberty Bond. What you really do is to lend Uncle Sam $100 on his promise to pay that money back on a given date and to pay you a specified sum each year—that is, interest—for the use of your money. If your $100 bond pays four and a quarter per cent you get four dollars and a quarter every year you hold it until it reaches maturity—that is, the date when the time of your loan is up and Uncle Sam returns your money.

"When a bond reaches maturity it should be turned over to your bank for collection, because after maturity you will get no more interest on the money invested. Therefore when a bond matures take it to your bank, have the money placed to your account and consult your banker about reinvesting it.

"Of course all bonds are not good securities. If you buy the bonds of a sound government or of a sound corporation you are safe. Bonds vary in price, even good ones, according to conditions. Unless you really know about the condition of the concern or government offering bonds do not buy them without consulting your bankers.

"When you buy stocks you buy a share of a business. Corporations issue stocks as well as notes and bonds, but governments only issue bonds or notes. You do not get any promise that your money will be paid back when you buy stock. To get your money back you have to find a buyer for your stock. If the business prospers you participate in the profits according to the amount of stock you hold. If the business suffers losses you share the loss with the rest of the stockholders. So again it is not wise to buy stock in a company you do not know all about unless you first get your banker's advice."

"Thanks, Aunt Emmy. I think I know the difference between stocks and bonds now," Jane said. "If you buy stock you buy a share of a business and take your chances with that business for success or loss. If you buy a bond you really don't buy at all, only get a sort of receipt for your money and promise that you will get it back at a given time and receive interest meanwhile."

"Yes—but remember the promise behind a bond is good only if the government or the corporation issuing the bond is good," said Aunt Emmy. "Next time you come I'll tell you more about money and finance."—ANNE B. AYMES.

Michigan's Last Hanging

The advocates of capital punishment for murder in Michigan are at times quite active and we hear considerable comment as to the feasibility of sudden death for criminals. However, it is probable that no such law will ever be passed in the state except perhaps in extreme cases.

It would hardly seem so long since Michigan had such a law but it is nearly 94 years since the law was abolished. September 24th marks the anniversary of the last public hanging in the state.

Owing to fear of lawless robbers who ranged the country side in southern Michigan at the time many road-side taverns or road houses were kept at short intervals on the highways. At what is now Eloise was such an institution run by Stephen G. Simmons, a man of massive build and fine appearance. He was possessed of a good education which was rather out of the ordinary for that day and when sober was surely an ornament to any society, but had become a hard drinker as did many in those times. When intoxicated Simmons was a terrible man to deal with by reason of his gigantic strength and it is related that four husky officers as Detroit afforded had a tough time getting him into safe keeping. He was quarrelsome and dangerous at such times and his delicate wife and daughters lived in constant fear One night he went to the room where his sickly wife lay in bed carrying a jug of villianous whisky and insisted that she drink with him which she did to the extent of several glasses. When she refused more he struck the woman a blow with his fist that killed her. The daughters were witnesses of the crime but could do nothing.

The awfulness of his crime came to him even in his drunken condition so that he was penitent. He was arrested and taken to Detroit, tried by fair jury his own daughters being the star witnesses. B. F. Witherell, a noted lawyer conducted the case and succeeded in convicting his man no cognizance being taken in those days of the irresponsible acts of drunkenness. The unfortunate man had so many enemies it was almost impossible to find jurors who were not prejudiced, over 300 talesmen being sworn all of whom were prompt to declare Simmons should be hanged. It is said that Simmons made such a good appearance when the whisky was out of his system, that most of the lawyers and court attaches looked like third raters in comparison, but the sympathy for such a man was very meager.

Thomas Knapp, then sheriff of Wayne county, lost his nerve and positively refused to conduct the execution. There was a lively discussion about the matter at "Uncle Ben" Woodworth's Hotel, and Woodworth stated he would take the job. Governor Cass had a long talk with Woodworth and eventually appointed him Sheriff Ex officio. In the center of what is now Library Park a scaffold was put up of heavy timbers, and the day before the roads leading to Detroit were black with teams and riders for miles around all headed to the scene.

"Uncle Ben" had called out the regimental band to add to the impressiveness. Presently the jail door opened and Simmons appeared walking arm in arm with Woodworth. He never lost his self possession for one moment but made a creditable speech warning all young men to abstain from liquor, then in a strong baritone voice sang a favorite hymn of the day. Simmons weighed 250 pounds and his neck was broken instantly. "Uncle Ben" Woodworth having demonstrated his ability as an officer, was soon appointed Sheriff by the Governor in place of Knapp.

Mississippi Levee System Completed

Those indefatigable workers on behalf of civilization, the United States Army Engineer Corps, announce the Mississippi River is for the first time confined by fool proof levees from Thebes, Illinois to the Gulf of Mexico.

This ends the efforts to confine the Father of Waters, begun in 1717 by De la Tour, the French engineer, who laid out the city of New Orleans. He constructed the first levee along the river front.

The original dikes were called "elevees" by the original French inhabitants and this was corrupted into "levees" pronounced "lev vies." Dictionaries fail to give this correct definition which the army engineers have run down.

The nature and tremendous extent of the problem the army engineers have been grappling with cannot be realized until the geological history of the Mississippi delta is considered.

Although the layman thinks of the Mississippi River delta as the present forked termini of the stream in the Gulf of Mexico quite a distance below New Orleans, geologists and engineers have to deal with the true delta through which the stream meanders under difficult control conditions. The delta of the Mississippi River started at Thebes, Illinois, above the junction of the Ohio, where the hills of the ancient continent met the Gulf of Mexico which covered much of what is now the south central states. As the muddy water was poured into the Gulf at this point sand and silt were deposited, gradually building up the sea bottom to the water level and extending the reach of the river further south until its present location. It is encroaching still farther into the Gulf. The process of land-building resulted in another feature that puzzles the average person. The river below Thebes is higher than the adjoining land through which it passes, instead of being in a depression lower than any part of the so-called valley.

However, the people in the Imperial valley in California will understand this, since the Colorado River whose delta is analogous to that of the Mississippi, is also much higher than the adjacent country. These rivers flow on top of the "made" land and their mud rims have had to be strengthened by man-made works. All the mouths of the Mississippi do not branch off far below New Orleans. The Atchafalaya River leaves the Mississippi 310 miles up-stream from the Gulf, has one third shorter route to the ocean than the main channel and frequently carries more water.

Some other mouths of the river have been cut off from the main channel by dikes across the upper ends. Bayous Lafourche and Manchac are examples of this kind.—Dearborn Independent

Grandstand Stuff

Senator Couzens is out with a statement saying that he is a candidate for the position he now holds but while he seeks the place on the Republican ticket he says he is not altogether in favor with the Republican presentation. He states that he may not always agree with the president. In other words, Mr. Couzens seeks to make it clear that he regards himself as greater than the president or his party. Occasionally one meets with such a character. Henry Ford drew Couzens from obscurity and made him so many millions that he feels that he can make any statement no matter how inopportune or inappropriate and get away with it. Millionaires sometimes get into this frame of mind, believing their great wealth will permit such expressions. It is more to get the attention of the people than to prove his real value. He is the sort of Republican who should be defeated.—Ishpeming Iron Ore.

Brooklyn Michigan will have New School

The little village of Brooklyn down east of us will soon blossom out with a brand new school building with a gymasium 'n everything and then the citizens can look for a few years of grinding taxation. There is a heavy movement on all over the country to consolidate the country districts and most of these new houses are being built with an eye to this requirement. The Brooklyn Exponent editor says in part:

"Steel eye beams 52 feet in length and three in number have been received for construction of the new Brooklyn school building. The beam will span the 72x50 foot gymnasium and uphold the big study room above. The piers will be ready and the big girders raised to place some day this week. The school board at their usual Tuesday evening meeting with the contractor took up roofing specifications and bids. It was decided to completely face the east side of the old building with new brick. The board also considered new seating necessary for recitation rooms and additional seats for study rooms. It was decided that tuition for pupils from outside the district would be $45 per year for the grades and $60 for the high school."

The Diabolical Ray is a "Fake"

The inventors who have lately been working in the line of perfecting some kind of hot electric ray which could be shot several hundred feet and thus burn a plane or anything that travels in the air, have been obliged to confess at last there is nothing in it. So far as science knows now there is no way of sending heat rays of sufficient intensity to burn anything. Probably the day is coming when a device of this kind may be useful for a short distance.

Tragic Death on Amusement Device

How many of our readers have ever ridden on the "Jack rabbit" or the "aeroplane swing" at Hague Park? We'll venture to say a number of them have and also we'll guarantee those who rode experienced one of the most hair-raising thrills in their whole life. Of course after becoming accustomed to this sort of thing probably most of the younger ones are seasoned enough to take it as a matter of course. However, it is sometimes asked by the novice if there is not some danger in connection with the devices. The managers always tell you that there is absolutely none, a statement which is overdone very handsomely. The flying tram car known as "Jack rabbit" is not fastened to the track in any way and is held down only by weight, so there is no doubt but that it is very dangerous. Yet we all know the nearer we can approach to real hazard without getting hurt the better the thrill.

Up at St. Joseph little 5 year old Henry Lund was literally torn asunder by a device known as the "caterpillar" While the machine was at high speed his foot caught something outside and in a twinkling he was dismembered. Sixty children had been brought from Mishawaka Indiana orphans' home for an outing and he was among the number. There is some question whether the guardians and managers could not be held for criminal negligence in allowing a child of this age to ride on such machines alone or unattended.

Woman Fined For Public Nuisance

Mrs. Florence Nicolai, wife of Wm. H. N. Nicolai, was sentenced yesterday morning in Justice Sawn's court to pay a fine and costs of $61 45 or spend 60 days in jail for participating in the lighting of a fiery cross on the corner near Baunow's Drug Store last Friday evening. The fire departmennt was called out to extinguish the blaze. Mrs. Nicolai was taken into custody Monday after her identity was established by four boys who witnessed the blaze. She pled not guilty, and demanded trial.

Mrs. Nicolai was charged with violating the city ordinance against public nuisances, prohibiting bonfires being built on the streets. City Attorney Clifford John called to the witness stand Wilbur Klein who on being questioned said that he and Joseph Stork, Edwin Klochow and Harold Frederick, all of Mt. Clemens, were driving on New street at about 10;45, Friday night. They saw the structure burning on the corner, and saw two women running away. The women ran up New street to Cherry to Macomb street, where they hid in the doorway of the Prieh's store. Klein identified one of the women as Mrs. Florence Nicolai. It was brought out in the testimony that Mrs. Nicolai asked the boys to take her to a place on Grand avenue, which the boys refused to do.

At the trial Mrs. Nicolai did not take the stand and had nothing to say in her defense. Eye witnesses of the disturbance, who did not know the women, say that they saw them running down New street with the contrivance between them and that after it burst into flame they ran into the shadows of the street before they could be apprehended.

Mrs. Nicolai's fine was paid and she was released yesterday morning

Jack and Solomon exercised unusual care in guarding the camp and organizing for defense in case of attack. It was soon after Washington's departure that Arnold went away on the road to the South. Solomon followed, keeping out of his field of vision. The general returned two days later. Solomon came into Jack's hut about midnight of the day of Arnold's return with important news.

Jack was at his desk studying a map of the Highlands. The camp was at rest. The candle in Jack's hut was the only sign of life around headquarters when Solomon, having put out his horse, came to talk with his young friend. He stepped close to the desk, swallowed nervously and began his whispered report.

"Suthin' neevarious be goin' on," he began. "A British ship were lyin' nigh the mouth o' the Croton river. Arnold went aboard. An' officer got into his boat with him and they pulled over to the west shore and went into the bush. Stayed thar till mos' night. If 'twere honest business, why did they go off in the bush alone fer a talk?"

Jack shook his head.

"Soon as I seen that I went to one o' our batteries an' tol' the cap'n what were on my mind.

"'D—n the ol' British tub. We'll make 'er back up a little,' sez he. 'She's too clus anyhow.'

"Then he let go a shot that ripped the water front o' her bow. Say, Jack, they were some hoppin' eround on the deck o' the big British war sloop. They h'isted her sails an' she fell away down the river a mile 'er so. The sun were set when Arnold an' the officer came out o' the bush. I were in a boat with a fish rod an' could jes' see 'em with my spy glass, the light were so dim. They stood thar lookin' fer the ship. They couldn't see her. They went back into the bush. It come to me what they was goin' to do. Arnold were a-goin' to take the Britisher over to the house o' that ol' Tory, Reub Smith. I got thar fust an' hid in the bushes front o' the house. Sure 'nough!—that's what were done. Arnold an' t' other feller come erlong an' went into the house. 'Twere so dark I couldn't see 'em but I knowed 'twere them."

"How?" the young man asked.

"'Cause they didn't light no candle. They sot in the dark an' they didn't talk out loud like honest men would. I come erway. I couldn't do no more."

"I think you've done well," said Jack. "Now go and get some rest. Tomorrow may be a hard day."

Jack spent a bad night in the effort to be as great as his problem. In the morning he sent Solomon and three other able scouts to look the ground over east, west and south of the army. One of them was to take the road to Hartford and deliver a message to Washington.

After the noon mess, Arnold mounted his horse and rode away alone. The young brigadier sent for his trusted friend, Captain Merriwether.

"Captain, the general has set out on the east road alone," said Jack. "He is not well. There's something wrong with his heart. I am a little worried about him. He ought not to be traveling alone. My horse is in front of the door. Jump on his back and keep in sight of the general, but don't let him know what you are doing."

A little later Mrs. Arnold entered the office of the new brigadier in a most cheerful mood.

"I have good news for you," she announced. "A British officer has come in a ship under a flag of truce to confer with General Arnold. I sent a letter to Margaret Hare on my own responsibility with the general's official communication. I invited her to come with the party and promised her safe conduct to our house. I expect her. For the rest we look to you. Let us have a wedding at headquarters. On the night of the twenty-eighth, General Washington will have returned. He has agreed to dine with us that evening."

"I think that she must have observed the shadow on my face for, while she spoke, a great fear had come upon me," he testified in the court of inquiry. "It seemed clear to me that, if there was a plot, the capture of Washington himself was to be a part of it and my sweetheart a helpful accessory.

"'You know much that I am eager to know,' I said. 'The general has not told me that he is to meet the British. May I know all the good news?'

"'Of course, he will tell you about that,' she assured me. 'He has told me only a little. It is some negotiation regarding an exchange of prisoners. I am much more interested in Margaret and the wedding. I wish you would tell me about her. I have heard that she has become very beautiful.'

"I showed Mrs. Arnold the miniature portrait which Margaret had given me the day of our little ride and talk in London and then an orderly came with a message and that gave me an excuse to put an end to this untimely babbling for which I had no heart. The message was from Solomon. He had got word that the British warship had come back up the river and was two miles above Stony Point with a white flag at her masthead.

"I went out of doors. Soon I met Merriwether coming into camp. Arnold had returned. He had ridden at a walk toward the headquarters of the Second brigade and turned about and come back without speaking to any one. Arnold was looking down as if absorbed in his own thoughts when Merriwether passed him in the road. He did not return the latter's salute. It was evident that the general had ridden away for the sole purpose of being alone.

"I went back to my hut and sat down to try to find my way when suddenly the general appeared at my door on his bay mare and asked me to take a little ride with him. I mounted my horse and we rode out on the east road together for half a mile or so.

"'I believe that my wife had some talk with you this morning,' he began.

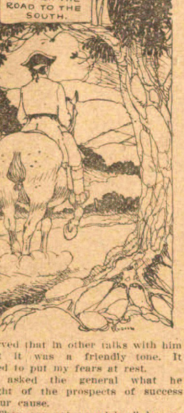
"'Yes,' I answered.

"'A British officer has come up the river in a ship under a white flag with a proposal regarding an exchange of prisoners. In my answer to their request for a conference, some time ago, I enclosed a letter from Mrs. Arnold to Miss Margaret Hale inviting her to come to our home where she would find a hearty welcome and her lover—now an able and most valued officer of the staff. A note received yesterday says that Miss Hare is one of the party. We are glad to be able to do you this little favor.'

"I thanked him.

"'I wish that you could go with me down the river to meet her in the morning,' he said. 'But in my absence it will, of course, be necessary for you to be on duty. Mrs. Arnold will go with me and we shall, I hope, bring the young lady safely to headquarters.'

"He was preoccupied. His face wore a serious look. There was a melancholy note in his tone—I had observed that in other talks with him—but it was a friendly tone. It tended to put my fears at rest.



ARNOLD WENT AWAY ON THE ROAD TO THE SOUTH.

"I asked the general what he thought of the prospects of success for our cause.

"'They are not promising,' he answered. 'The defeat of Gates in the South and the scattering of his army in utter rout is not an encouraging event.'

"'I think that we shall get along better now that the Gates bubble has burst,' I answered."

This ends the testimony of "the able and most valued officer," Jack Irons, Jr.

CHAPTER XXVIII

As an Army With Banners.

The American army had been sold by Arnold. The noble ideal it had cherished, the blood it had given, the bitter hardships it had suffered—torture in the wilderness, famine in the Highlands, long marches of half naked men in mid-winter, massacres at Wyoming and Cherry Valley—all this had been bartered away, like a shipload of turnips, to satisfy the greed of one man. Again thirty pieces of silver! Was a nation to walk the bitter way to its Calvary? Major Andre, the adjutant general of Sir Henry Clinton's large force in New York, was with the traitor when he rowed from the ship to the west shore of the Hudson and went into the bush under the observation of Solomon with his spy-glass. Arnold was to receive a command and large pay in the British army. The consideration had been the delivery of maps showing the positions of Washington's men and the plans of his forts and other defenses, especially those of Forts Putnam and Clinton and Battery Knox. Much other information was put in the hands of the British officer, including the prospective movements of the commander in chief. He was to be taken in the house of the man he had befriended. Andre had only to reach New York with his treasure and Arnold to hold the confidence of his chief for a few days and, before the leaves had fallen, the war would end. The American army and its master mind would be at the mercy of Sir Henry Clinton.

Andre would have reached New York that night if The Vulture had not changed her position on account of a shot from the battery below Stony Point. For that, credit must be given to the good scout Solomon Binkus. The ship was not in sight when the two men came out in their boat from the west shore of the river while the night was falling. Arnold had heard the shot and now that the ship had left he feared that his treachery was suspected.

"I may want to get away in that boat myself," he suggested to Andre.

"She will not return until she gets orders from you or me," the Britisher assured him.

"I wonder what has become of her," said Arnold.

"She has probably dropped down the river for some reason," Andre answered. "What am I to do?"

"I'll take you to the house of a man I know who lives near the river and send you to New York by horse with passports in the morning. You can reach the British lines tomorrow."

"I would like that," Andre exclaimed. "It would afford me a welcome survey of the terrain."

"Smith will give you a suit of clothes that will fit you well enough," said the traitor. "You and he are about of a size. It will be better for you to be in citizens' dress."

So it happened that in the darkness of the September evening Smith and Andre, the latter riding the blazed-face mare, set out for King's Ferry, where they were taken across the river. They rode a few miles south of the landing to the shore of Crom pond and spent the night with a friend of Smith. In the morning the latter went on with Andre until they had passed Pine's bridge on the Croton river. Then he turned back.

Now Andre fared along down the road alone on the back of the mare Nancy. He came to an outpost of the Highland army and presented his pass. It was examined and endorsed and he went on his way. He met transport wagons, a squad of cavalry and later, a regiment of militia coming up from western Connecticut, but no one stopped him. In the faded hat and coat and trousers of Reuben Smith, this man, who called himself John Anderson, was not much unlike the farmer folk who were riding hither and thither in the neutral territory, on their petit errands. His face was different. It was the well-kept face of an English aristocrat with handsome dark eyes and hair beginning to turn gray.

A little out of Tarrytown on the highway the horseman traveled, a group of three men were hidden in the bush—ragged, reckless, unlettered country lads waiting for cows to come down out of the wild land to be milked. They were "skinners" in the patriot militia, some have said; some that they were farmers' sons not in the army. However that may have been, they were undoubtedly rough, hard-fisted fellows full of the lawless spirit bred by five years of desperate warfare. They were looking for Tories as well as for cattle. Tories were their richest prey, for the latter would give high rewards to be excused from the oath of allegiance.

They came out upon Andre and challenged him. The latter knew that he had passed the American outposts and thought that he was near the British lines. He was not familiar with the geography of the upper east shore. He knew that the so-called neutral territory was overrun by two parties—the British being called the "Lower" and the Yankees the "Upper."

"What party do you belong to?" Andre demanded.

"The Lower," said one of the Yankees.

Rare Sea Shell

In a specially provided case in the foyer of the American Museum of Natural History, there was exhibited recently for the first time one of the most highly prized cone shaped shells ever found in the world. According to scientific authorities, it is properly called "The Glory of the Sea."

It is about five inches in length, of peculiarly slender appearance, graceful proportions, and has a tapering spire. It suggests an unfolding rosebud. The ground color is pale ivory, overlaid with a mosaic of thousands of triangular figures ranging from an eighth of an inch to almost microscopical size. These triangles are outlined in chrome yellow or deep chestnut brown.

Lip Reader Says New Yorkers Talk to Selves

New Yorkers talk to themselves more than residents of any other city, according to an observer who is a lip reader. The habit is due, he holds, to the terrific nervous strain under which New Yorkers live.

Loneliness plays a part also; there being no acquaintances with which to talk, the unfortunate is forced to hold conversation with himself.

"The subway is my favorite hunting ground," said the observer. "Those who talk to themselves think they are safe there, it being impossible to be overheard because of the noise. Also they have a few minutes of forced activity. Being able to read lips is most diverting. Recently, I discovered that one man whose lips were moving silently but steadily was adding up a long column of figures. A sour-faced man was swearing. Another was telling his wife what he thought of her demonstration of inferiority complex as he was alone.

"But a serene-faced grandmother was my greatest surprise. She was repeating a long formula which revealed a complete knowledge of the processes of distillation."—New York Letter to the Detroit News.

MRS. ADA FRICK
PERRYSBURG, OHIO

"YOU can be just as healthy, strong and happy as I am,' said one woman to her neighbor after listening to the description of her ailments,—'if you will take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. My condition was very similar to yours, I suffered from those awful bearing down pains, weakness, backache, nervousness and headaches until I could hardly drag around. Today I am strong, well and happy because I followed the advice of a friend who had been greatly benefited by this old-fashioned root and herb medicine."

Nearly fifty years ago Lydia E. Pinkham of Lynn, Mass. prepared from medicinal roots and herbs Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Its fame has spread from shore to shore. You will now find in every community or neighborhood some woman who has been restored to health by its use, or has some friend who has. Therefore ask your neighbor.

Mrs. Frick Tells of Her Experience

PERRYSBURG, OHIO—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I suffered with pains in my sides all the time. I can't remember just how long I suffered but it was for some time. One day I was talking with a neighbor and I told her how I was feeling and she said she had been just like I was with pains and nervous troubles and she took the Vegetable Compound and it helped her. So then I went and got some and I certainly recommend it for it is good. Whenever I see a woman who is sick I try to get her to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. ADA FRICK, R. The Toledo Blade says that the farmers of some of the western states are mad because LaFollette has selected a couple of Socialists for his campaign committee. In the first place, judging by newspaper history, it is probable that the farmers aren't mad at all, and in the second place why didn't the Blade tell us the cause of their madness?

The other day, we noticed an auto turning Wertenberger's corner and supposed at first glance that it belonged to Mr. Frantz, the wealthy Toledoan who has been spending the summer at Goose lake. Later, we found that it was in reality, Mr. Voorhees instead. We didn't ask the make of the car but it looks something like the one Roland Painter operates.

The Toledo Blade is apparently the friend of Big Biz and tries to convince its readers that the farmers of the west believe it a crime to be anything except a Democrat or a Republican. Here in Jerome we have an example of what one might term third rate socialism, The local school board purchasing a car of coal directly from the mines at $2.40 per ton plus freight of $2.70 per ton making the cost $5.10 per ton. The school board in this way probably saves about two dollars per ton in purchasing by the socialistic or co operative method. If the people owned both the coal mines and the railroads and the board should order a car directly from the mines, the method would be considered 100 percent socialism, and we can't see anything very dangerous about it, unless it be dangerous for the profiteers.

To Show Experiments On Vegetable Day

Extensive experimental work now being carried on with vegetable varieties in the horticultural garden at M. A. C., including work with tomatoes, sweet corn, and other market garden crops, is to be exhibited and explained as a part of the program of "Market Gardener's Field Day", on Wednesday, August 20.

More than 50 varieties of extra early sweet corn, selected from strains grown all over the country, will be grouped in one test plat. In another an extensive test of extra early varieties of tomatoes, showing by comparison the most profitable for the Michigan grower, will be shown.

One experiment, in which two early varieties have been crossed, has produced a very heavy yield of early tomatoes, and will prove of interest to market gardeners.

The trip is a prize for selling a certain amount of insurance. The steamer "Queen" will clear for Sitka and Skagway, Alaska and all way points. The party will be away from the United States two or three weeks and the junket will give them a good inside look at our North-west possessions

How About You

When Abraham Lincoln was a young man he ran for legislature in Illinois and was badly swamped. He next failed in business and spent 17 years of his life paying up the debts of a worthless partner.

He was in love with a beautiful woman to whom be became engaged—and then she died.

Entering politics again he ran fo Congress and was badly defeated He then tried for an appointment in the United States land office but failed. After this be became a candidate for the Senate and was defeated.

In 1856 he became a candidate for the vice presidency but lost the race. In 1858 he was once more defeated this time by Stephen Douglas

In the face of all this, he eventually became one of the country's greatest men, if not the greatest.

How would you stand in the face of such setbacks? Think it over.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Allies and Germans Getting Together to Put Dawes Plan Into Operation.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

CHANCELLOR MARX and his German colleagues, called to London to confer with the allies on measures for putting the Dawes plan into operation, showed so sincere a desire to reach an agreement that hopes for the restoration of Europe were high. After being given a friendly reception by Prime Minister MacDonald, Premier Herriot and the other allied representatives, the Germans were handed the documents comprising the plans adopted before their arrival and were requested to examine them speedily and make reply. This they did, and their "observations" regarding the work of the conference, 60,000 words in length, were submitted the next day. In general, and so far as the Dawes plan is concerned, these appeared quite satisfactory for a starter and it was believed the committees of experts to which the German documents were handed for careful examination would be able to revise and alter them so that they would accord with the British and French proposals. The Germans reserved the right to supplement their first statement after more detailed consideration of the allied propositions.

Accompanying the German documents was a covering letter saying that there were certain questions outside the scope of the Dawes plan and the conference which must be settled. Chief of these were the matter of the military evacuation of the Ruhr and the personnel of the German railways in the occupied territory. Dispatches from London said that the French already had begun negotiating with the Germans concerning the evacuation of the Ruhr, offering to carry this out if the Germans would agree to the continuance of German armaments by the military control mission. Marx also demanded that persons expelled from the Ruhr be permitted to return, and the French were willing to concede this if the Berlin government would agree not to persecute those Germans in the occupied region who had co-operated with the forces of occupation.

David Lloyd George and other political opponents of Prime Minister MacDonald have been attacking his policy in the conference, but he has held his own in the debates. He informed the house of commons that if the conference were finally successful, these three agreements were to be expected:

1. An agreement between the German government and the reparations commission regarding matters within the competence of the reparations commissions.

2. An agreement between the allied governments and the German government regarding matters requiring to be settled by direct agreement.

3. An agreement between the allied governments themselves regulating matters of interallied concern.

In the main Premier Herriot's course was approved in France, especially his refusal to permit any discussion of war guilt in the conference.

QUITE unexpectedly, the Anglo-Russian conference, which has been going on in London intermittently for months, has resulted in a measure of success. Early last week the British foreign office announced the parley had failed and was broken off, but MacDonald at once got into action, invited the Russians to resume the conference, and brought about an agreement for the signing of two treaties, one of commerce and one general. Rough drafts of these pacts were drawn up and initialed, and the prime minister insisted on signing them without waiting for the approval of parliament. The treaties were bitterly attacked by the opposition. David Lloyd George denounced them as "fakes."

It is understood at this writing that the treaty of commerce gives British goods most favored nation treatment in Russia and that Great Britain recognizes the soviet trade monopoly and agrees to give diplomatic immunity to a certain number of Russian trade representatives. Details of the general treaty are not known, but it is believed it provides for British guarantee of a loan to Russia of between £30,000,000 and £40,000,000. Undersecretary Ponsonby told the house that, regarding the claims of British bondholders, the soviet government had given an expression of liability and an assurance that the Russians would negotiate with the bondholders.

Prime Minister MacDonald is exceedingly anxious for consummation of these treaties with Russia, for the trade unions believe that they will mean more work and greater prosperity for the British workingman. They constitute an important part of the labor government's foreign policy, which is being vigorously attacked by the opposition.

Re-establishment of relations with Russia is a very live question in France. It is favored by certain financial interests which seek control of the Chinese Eastern railway, and of course by the Communists. But the Socialists of France are against it and Premier Herriot has become lukewarm toward Russian negotiations, presumably to obtain and keep Socialist votes. The Communist press blames Secretary of State Hughes, repeating the denied story that he told the premiers in London that so long as Europe countenanced bolshevism, America could not help it.

BULGARIA on one side and Yugo-Slavia and Greece on the other are still sniping at each other across the borders, and the danger of an outbreak of war has not been removed. Last week Bulgaria called 3,000 reservists to the colors and Serbia put up a loud wail. The French and British governments are doing their best to prevent actual hostilities.

AMERICA'S globe-circling air squadron had both good and bad luck last week. First, Lieut. Erik Nelson successfully flew from the Orkneys to Hoefn Hornafjord, Iceland, but Lieuts. Lowell Smith and Leigh Wade were forced by dense fogs to turn back. Next day Lieutentant Smith made the flight all right, but Wade's machine was forced down by engine trouble when about half the distance had been traveled, and then was hopelessly wrecked during attempts to salvage it. Wade and his mechanic were taken aboard the cruiser Richmond, and it has been decided in Washington to send another plane to Pictou Harbor, Nova Scotia, so that they may continue the flight from there with the squadron. From Hornafjord the two planes still in commission flew to Reykjavik, capital of Iceland, 310 miles, in the face of a 50-mile wind and over land and water where a forced landing would have meant disaster and death. Their course from there takes them to Angmagsalik, Greenland, but ice conditions along the coast of Greenland are such that it was announced that the aviators might be compelled to wait in Reykjavik for a week.

THERE are indications that the La-Follette-Wheeler ticket will not get the unanimous support of organized labor by a long ways, but it is considered formidable enough to occupy a major place in the strategy of both the Republicans and the Democrats. The former have adopted a policy of conceding nothing to LaFollette even in the several states of the middle Northwest which many have conceded to him. In these states the Coolidge leaders will make perhaps their hardest fight.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, added to his indorsement of the LaFollette-Wheeler ticket last week by further praise of the Wisconsin senator as the friend of organized labor, and made a lively attack on John W. Davis, Democratic Presidential candidate. He denied that any acts of Mr. Davis have shown him as friendly to the wage earner, and told how Mr. Davis last month sought secret interviews with him and asked him to file with Gompers a "statement of questions in which labor is chiefly interested at this moment." All this, and more, was in a reply from Gompers to William B. Wilson, former secretary of labor, who had asked that the federation's executive council defer action on the proposed indorsement of LaFollete.

Matthew Woll, spokesman for Gompers, followed up this with a broadside directed at Charles G. Dawes, Republican vice presidential candidate, whom he denounced for alleged anti-union activity and especially for his organization of the Minute Men of the Constitution. "This organization," said Woll, "has concerned itself chiefly fighting the organizations of labor and in upholding the right of judges to issue injunctions which have no warrant in law or in the Constitution, and which, as used in industrial disputes, order workers to do what they have a lawful right to refrain from doing, and order them not to do things which they have a lawful right to do."

Returns from the Oklahoma primaries at this time indicate that former Gov. J. C. Walton has won the Democratic nomination for senator over Congressman E. B. Howard. The latter was supported by the Ku Klux Klan and Walton says he will demand an investigation of alleged corruption by the Klan. W. B. Pine was nominated for senator by the Republicans.

MRS. ROSALIE EVANS, American widow of a British ranch owner in Mexico, who for many months made a determined fight to keep her great estate there from expropriation by the agrarians, has been murdered, probably by emissaries of the men who had been unable to get hold of her land. The British government, through the American State department, made upon the Mexican government the demands usual in such cases, and President Obregon ordered that the assassins be apprehended. It is now announced that the murderers, 17 in number, have been captured and jailed in Puebla. The incident, however, is not yet closed. Mrs. Evans' sister, wife of an American marine officer, has gone to Mexico to carry on the fight for retention of the estate.

Charles B. Warren has resigned as American ambassador to Mexico, and his successor will soon be appointed. Mr. Warren in his letter of resignation blamed the Wilson administration for much of our recent troubles with Mexico, and added that relations between the two countries have now been "readjusted to the satisfaction of both governments, and I feel that means have been found to protect American property and rights in Mexico, without offending the Mexican people or interfering in any way in her domestic policies and affairs."

MOST notable of the deaths of the week was that of Joseph Conrad, the eminent writer of sea tales, who passed away suddenly at his home in Bishopsbourne, England. Of Polish birth, he was a sailor for many years and began writing while serving as a sea captain. He wrote in English and was considered one of the foremost literary figures of the day.

Dr. Robert Grier LeConte of Philadelphia, internationally famed surgeon, committed suicide in his home, leaving a note ascribing his act to financial troubles. He was a former president of the American Surgical association, and during the war was a member of the advisory medical board for the American expeditionary forces.

SOME 5,000 delegates attended the national convention of the Knights of Columbus in New York last week. The pope sent his apostolic benediction in a letter. Bishop Mahoney of South Dakota in an address to the convention bitterly denounced the Klan and scored the conventions of both the great political parties for making "a concession of cowardice because of the fear that the quest for votes might suffer by an expression of opinion on the movement abroad that would eliminate Catholics from the privileges of citizenship and the emoluments of public life."

Lake, Long Dried Up, Sticks on the Maps

San Francisco.—Makers of maps have been for some years a source of amusement to the people at the southern end of the San Joaquin valley of California. Their maps of the state invariably show a large blue circle, about half the size of San Francisco bay and bearing the caption "Lake Tulare." The fact is, there is no such lake, and hasn't been for s[illegible] that it is difficult for the oldest inhabitants even to remember it.

Years ago, when the first pioneers invaded the San Joaquin valley, there was a real Lake Tulare. It covered approximately 108 square miles. Geologists are of the opinion that at one time in ancient history it covered 1,000 square miles.

The early settlers started reclaiming the shallow parts of the lake by levees. Later on higher levees were erected. Slowly the old lake was encroached on until it was squared and resquared by levees thirty feet high. The reclaimed lands were exceedingly fertile, and wheat was grown on them.

Much of the water from the Kern and Kings rivers, which formerly flowed into Lake Tulare, are impounded far up in the mountains for irrigating the eastside lands. The Tulare wheat area is spotted with cotton fields, which are increasing in number.

The old lake bed is so dry that in some places the farmers have to pump to a depth of 2,100 feet to get water.

Iron Mountain—The City of Iron Mountain is 'broke" and notice has been given banks of the city that loans will be necessary to finance the city for the next year, it was stated at the treasurer's office. Failure of the city council to provide sufficient funds by appropriation last year is blamed for the financial straits the city finds itself in.

Lansing—Permission to consolidate a number of railways, largely Ohio properties, has been granted in an order issued by the Michigan Public Utilities Commission. The roads interested are the Pennsylvania, Detroit Railway Co., the Cincinnati, Lebanon & Northern Railway Co., the Cleveland, Akron & Cincinnati Railroad Co., the Toledo, Columbus & Ohio River Railway Co., and the Manufacturers Railway Co.

Lansing—Statistics made public by the State Department of Agriculture recently disclose that the purchasing power of the farm dollar is rapidly increasing in value in Michigan. Taking 1913 as an average year, and reckoning the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar at 100 cents for that year, the department's figures show that it dropped to 67 cents in 1921, was 69 cents in 1922, 72 cents in 1923, and now stands at 79 cents.

Grand Rapids—An authorization for the payment of a final dividend of 10 per cent to creditors of theFarmers' and Merchants' Bank has been granted the Michigan Trust Co., assignee, by Circuit Judge Willis B. Perkins. Dividends amounting to 60.5 per cent had previously been paid. The bank's total liabilities, when it closed in March, 1921, were $729,413. Depositors will lose about $215,000. The bank was organized in 1914 with 60 stockholders and William McCrodan was president and Frank J. Cook, cashier.

Grand Rapids—That he was sleepy, and not intoxicated as charged, was the contention of Herbert W. Burke, 24 years old, of Muskegon, in Justice Harry L. Cresyell's court, where he was tried on a charge of driving an automobile while under the influence of liquor. He succeeded in convincing a jury when he swore he had been unable to obtain sleep for 48 hours prior to his arrest. Officer Stanley Wallace, who arrested Burke, said he held eight separate charges of traffic violations against his prisoner.

Kalamazoo—A special session of the county board to consider a $1,000,000 mistake in the total assessed valuation of Kalamazoo Township, as reported by Supervisor Percy L. Davis, will probably be called. The error, caused by Mr. Davis having struck the wrong key on an adding machine, was found by Davis himself, who reported it to the chairman of the taxation committee and to Prosecutor Stephen Watties. Mr. Davis reported the equalization of the township at $12,866,700, when it should have been $13,866,700.

St. Joseph—Three persons were injured, telephone and electrical service impaired and many trees blown down in a heavy wind storm that swept over the Twin Cities.

Fremont—Excessive heat contributed to the recent death of Theodore Johnson, 40 years old, a farmer residing near Sand Lake, who died while mowing hay. He had been subject to attacks of heart disease.

Albion—A $15,000 fire entirely destroyed the Frank Martin creamery at Deverux, a village six miles north of here. Overheated exhaust pipes of gasoline engines used to run the machinery are held responsible for the fire.

Jackson—John J. Barlow, prominent farmer near here, was found dead in a field where he was cultivating potatoes. He had evidently had some trouble with his horses and had been killed when the cultivator was dragged over his body.

Bay City—Lyle Morrison, 19 years old, of Saginaw, was drowned when the car in which he and three companions were riding, broke through the guard chain and plunged into the Saginaw river through the open draw of Belinda street bridge.

Manistee—Injunction proceedings invoked against a newly organized union by the Filer Fibre Co., whose employes walked out two weeks ago, have barred picketing of the plant. A troop of State police, sent here when mild sabotage followed the importation of a number of strike breakers, restored quiet.

Bay City—Fred Zingg, city employe, and Peter Palasz, 15 years old, were burned to death when an interurban car of the Michigan Railway struck a truck in which they were riding. The truck caught fire and the occupants, unable to get out, were burned to death before help could reach them.

Owosso—The fact that bonded indebtedness of the Owosso water water works department is $293,000 has made it necessary to increase the minimum rate to $14 per year, to meet interest charges, according to Commissioner John Rosevear. The increase went into effect June 1, but the public was not informed.

Lansing—Twenty counties will have their claims against the State settled in full, so far as road award money is concerned, through action of the State Administrative Board in setting aside highway funds to pay each county in the State $10,000 if the State is indebted to them for State road awards for this amount.

Detroit—Cartridges placed by boys on the Grand Trunk tracks near St. Joseph street, recently, are believed responsible for the shot which pierced the right leg of George Rowell, 34 years old, as he was walking near the track while a train passed him. Several exploded shell jackets were found at the side of the track.

Detroit—Acting Mayor Joseph A. Martin has resigned to become a candidate for Mayor at the Sept. 9 primaries, to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Mayor Frank E. Doremus. Following Martin's resignation, John C Lodge, president pro tem of the Council, became acting Mayor until the vacancy is filled.

Holland—Thirty-five carloads of cherries were sent in one consignment to Detroit from the local orchards to be made into pies for the people of that city. The cherries were purchased by a Detroit pie company. Every year this company makes 10,500,000 pies for Detroit residents. The 35 carloads of cherries cost $60,000.

Marquette—George Shiras, former justice of the supreme court, who died recently in Pittsburgh, Pa., came to Marquette in 1859. He was born in Pittsburgh in 1832 and was on the supreme court bench from 1892 to 1902. He is survived by two sons, George Shiras, 3rd, of Marquette, former congressman from Pennsylvania, naturalist and writer on constitutional law, and W. K. Shiras, prominent Pittsburgh attorney.

Saginaw—The sailboat of Floyd J. Rieder, Saginaw, was capsized a mile off Linwood Beach in Saginaw Bay when it was caught in a sudden squall. Accompanying Rieder were his son, R. C., and Walter and Jack Qualman, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Qualman, of Saginaw, and John Nagel, of Detroit. Rieder's presence of mind in keeping the boys held fast to the overturned boat saved them until motorboats put out from shore and picked the party up.

Muskegon—An assembly plant of the Donelson Walker Roller Manufacturing company, which holds American manufacturing rights to patents owned by the Donelson Manufacturing Company, Ltd., of Edinburgh, Scotland, will be established within a few weeks at Muskegon Heights, it was announced by D. R. Walker, a representative of the company. The company will manufacture parts for a new design of window shade roller which needs no springs, tacks or glue to hold the shade in place.

Three Rivers—Oliver B. Kline, well known farmer residing north of Three Rivers, died from injuries received, when crushed by an automobile, he was repairing. Kline had raised the front of the car, using a rope tied to the branch of an old apple tree in his yard. The front axle and wheels had been removed and Kline was working under the car when the limb broke, letting the car down upon him. Although badly crushed, he retained consciousness, and spoke to his wife and daughter while they released him.

Lansing—Secretary of State Charles J. De Land, in his annual report, states that he conducted his department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, at a saving of $37,870 under the $267,250 appropriated for expenses of his department by the legislature. In the face of this saving, his department did the largest amount of business in its history, Mr. De Land says, taking in $19,352,783, exceeding the 1923 receipts by $2,603,595. Automobile licenses netted the state $11,787,979, and the corporation tax, $6,518,017.

SUFFERED TWELVE YEARS WITH STOMACH TROUBLE

"My recovery has been a surprise to myself and all my friends," recently declared Jacob Ferdinand, R. F. D. 2, Fond Du Lac, Wis., a prominent citizen of this city, in relating his remarkable experience with Tanlac.

"The suffering I went through from stomach trouble for 12 or 13 years simply can't be described. In my efforts to find relief I spent over one thousand dollars, but kept getting worse instead of better. A large part of two years I was laid up in bed and for four months of that time I couldn't get up at all.

"Finally I sent my daughter for a bottle of Tanlac with the result that I found immediate relief, and seven bottles made a well and happy man of me. I will gladly talk to anyone personally and answer all letters regarding my experience with Tanlac. It proved a godsend to me."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 million bottles sold.

USE CONCRETE FOR PERMANENCE

Concrete Pavements Remain True and Even

Right here in your own state you as a motorist have abundant opportunity to know the advantages of concrete pavements.

Wet or dry, Concrete Pavements are skid-proof. They are free of bumps and holes. Built according to present-day high standards, they withstand the pounding grind of the heaviest traffic.

You will find that even under the heat of desert sun, their surface remains true.

And should night overtake you, you can follow the light gray surface of Concrete easily and with every sense of security.

Think, too, of the all around economy of Concrete Roads and Streets—the saving in gasoline, the longer life of your car—repairs built out, maintenance built in.

Remember that standard Concrete Pavement is made of a definitely proportioned mixture of sand and pebbles, or broken stone, held together by the everlasting grip of that tenacious binder, portland cement.

KATHLEEN NORRIS

Not so many years ago, in San Francisco, a young woman had achieved considerable local success as a writer. She decided to assault the literary citadels of the East. It wasn't so much an assault as a surprise; for after one or two novels had appeared around Boston and New York, the established writers woke up one morning to find that a new member had joined the cult.

The acclaim of such an authority as William Dean Howells and of several other well-known novelists and literary editors made easier the success of Kathleen Norris. It was not long until her short stories were sought by the Atlantic Monthly and various other important magazines.

Such novels as "Sisters," "Harriet and the Piper," "Martie, the Unconquered" and "Josselyn's Wife" have given her a front-rank position. Read "Josselyn's Wife" as a serial in this paper and you will agree with the popular verdict as to her ability.

Husbands, Wives and Stepmothers! Read

Josselyn's Wife

By Kathleen Norris

In which a stepmother plays a new sort of role —that of an enchantress.

There are really two Josselyn's wives in Mrs. Norris' fascinating novel. One is the handsome young wife of the elder Josselyn; the other his son's wife. You will be interested principally in the latter and the manner in which she met her problem when her husband's attractive stepmother threatened too strong an influence upon him.

Another Sacrifice to the God of Speed

Neal H. Deeds of Toledo, Ohio, died in the receiving hospital at Hillsdale early last Sunday evening from terrible injuries received on the Wayne Highway south of Hillsdale Sunday afternoon when his car overturned four times after colliding with another car.

Deeds was dealing in death to the extent of about 60 miles an hour when the accident happened. Eye-witnesses claim Deeds' car appeared to leap into the air before making its final plunge. He is survived by his wife, father and mother, three sisters and three brothers.

The day is coming when very little sympathy will be expressed for men who die as this man did. It is a fact the whole auto world has gone mad and Deeds' episode is only one of thousands who are daily taking their own lives and the lives of innocent dependents, by such conduct. Deeds was a prominent business man of Toledo and while the terrible accident is to be deplored, it is with a feeling of relief that we know Deeds has gone to his reward. He will never again drive a Juggernaut.

If he could have saved a life by such speed, it would not have been justified. There is a speed which a man can maintain on a good gravel highway which any good car will stand—possibly between 30 and 40 miles per hour—and yet be within the bounds of safety, but above that no car will long endure, and those who drive often at 50 and 60 per hour should lose their licenses. Drunkenness and insanity alone are the only perogatives of such speed.

Among the list of candidates for the primary election who have filed in for Sheriff are only eleven men as follows: Benjamin C. Duel, Oscar Giauque, Orville Duryea, James H. Johnson, T. H. Midgley, Frank Potter, all of Hills dale. D. Mark Rutan, Somerset Hod Kime, Reading, all Republicans. Those on the Democratic ticket who would like a nomination are Fred Baker, North Adams; Fred Barron, Hillsdale; Earl H. Kerr, Somerset. Of course but one man can run and it is a pretty safe gamble the Republican nominee is the next sheriff, so the primary is mostly the election in the county anyhow.

The district mounted patrol of the Krugersdorp (Transvaal) in Africa while destroying locusts on the boundary of the West Rand noticed one locust with a white body. He captured it and found tied round its body a piece of paper bearing the message "Farmers do your best—26, 5, 24, Christiania." The distance between Christiana and the place where the locust was captured is more than 200 miles, and the locust dispatch flyer must have covered the distance with a swarm about a mile long in twenty four hours, which included a rest overnight.

New Farm Explosive To Replace Sodatol

A new supply of war salvage explosive, simiiar to the Sodatol distributed a year ago, will be made available for agricultural blasting work in Michigan in the near future, according to preliminary announcement made here this week by Harry F. Livingston, land clearing specialist with the extension staff of M. A. C., who was in charge of the Michigan distribution of Sodatol.

While detailed information as to the new agricultural explosive is not as yet available, it is known that it will be called "Pirotol" and that field tests have shown it practically as good, pound for pound, for the purpose of the ordinary farmer as was the Sodatol. Pirotol is made up of smokeless powder, sodium nitrate and a sensitizing agent.

It is decidedly a bulk powder, according to Livingston, and probably will run 300 sticks to each 100 pounds of explosive. It is presumed that an amount equal to the 1,500,000 pounds of Sodatol which was distributed in Michigan will be available, and the price will probably be two or three cents a pound higher than that of the original war salvage explosive. It will probably be available by this fall.

Plans for distribution are already completed, involving the use of practically the same machinery as was perfected in the first war salvage explosive work with Sodatol As the explosive is furnished by the federal government, it will be handled through the Extension Division of the state agricultural college rather than through commercial channels.

Sodatol, the cheapest agricultural explosive ever made available to the farmers of the country is given credit for an appreciable increase in the efficiency of agricultural operations over the state, both by making available new lands and by cleaning out stumps and boulders from lands already operated.

At the beginning of August, Calvin Coolidge completed his first year as President. Suddenly elevated to his high office by the death of President Harding, he entered as a quantity almost unknown to the nation at large. His conduct as Vice President had been merticulously modest. He knew his place and kept it. His new eminence did not change his nature but made his duties necessarily more public, the scrutiny of him more severe. Without noise or publicity seeking activity, he took up his task, and his method of letting the country know him was to let hundreds upon hundreds of citizens meet him and form their own opinions. From these it soon spread abroad that Calvin Coolidge was a man of character and purpose, a strong, quiet personality, a President who could be depended on to steer a straight course. This opinion, first expressed by a few hundreds, has been confirmed by the nation's observation of the man. In a short year he has not only become known, he has become trusted. This in itself is no small achievement.—Dearborn Independent.

Howard Belden Lige, formerly of Somerset Center, a member of the U. S. Marines, who is at present stationed at Santo Domingo, has qualified as an expert rifleman, according to an official target bulletin published by the Marine Corps. Lige succeeded during long range target practice to hit several bull's eyes at ranges from 200 to 600 yards Howard is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Lige, of Somerset, and joined the marines at Detroit in October 1922.

Mexico has compiled a list of 50 isolated cases of Mexican citizens killed in our border states during the years 1815-1921. Together with claims for damages, including losses to commerce and the killing of several hundred Mexicans during the occupation of Vera Cruz in 1914. This list will be presented to the Mexican-American Claims Commission which is about to meet in Washington.

What is the dominating purpose of your church? Has it a practical creed of service to its community and to the world? Several bulletins of local churches, indicating what they consider their aim and mission, have come to our attention. What similar statements have you observed? These declarations are as follows

"To all who are weary and seek rest; to all who mourn and long for comfort; to all who struggle and desire victory; to all who sin and need a Saviour; to all who are idle and look for service; to all who are strangers and want fellowship; to all who hunger and thirst after righteousness; and to whosoever will come—this church opens wide its doors and in the name of Jesus Christ, her Lord, and says, "Welcome."

We seek through proclamation and incarnation of the Gospel to place Jesus Christ at the center of life; to make faith a matter of adventure rather than assent; to modernize the religious vocabulary, to make the church the voice of the prophets, living and dead; to make the secular sacred and to bring in the reign of God.

Tremont Temple is the strangers Sabbath home, and to all who mourn and need comfort—to all who are tired and need rest—to all who are friendless and want friendship—to all who are lonely and want companionship—to all who are homeless and want sheltering love—to all who pray and to all who do not but ought—to all who need a Saviour, and to whosoever will, opens wide the doors and makes free a place, and in the name of Jesus the Lord, says: Welcome.

"To serve God and our community to the utmost through the ideals of Friendliness and Service."

Friendliness and Service! Could there be two words which would more fully express the personal side of the gospel of Jesus Christ? We have thought not and therefore have selected them in our desire to make our religion vital in our relationships with one another and with our community. Friendliness and Service stands, therefore, on the minutes of our official board meeting as the aim for the year.

We believe that the world must be brought under the sway of the Son of man. To this end we dedicate ourselves and our church to that religion which is service to humanity; to the ideals of truth and freedom of speech as exemplified by Jesus of Nazareth; to hospitality to all men and women of the community, without regard to sect, class, nation or race; to the usage without fear or favor, of that spirit of communal love, which shall some day bring in upon the earth the ideal society, the kingdom of God.

The church making the last quoted declamation adds this further statement;

"Religion is not a creed, but an experience; not a restraint, but an inspiration; not an insurance for the next, but a program for the present world."

State Dairy Men Meet On Aug. 22

Dairymen of Michigan will gather at the M. A. C. on Friday, August 22, for a big state dairy day which promises to be one of the most important agricultural meetings of the year.

It will be the regular summer meeting of the Michigan Milk Producers Association, while the Allied Dairy Association will join in the conference on the 22nd, thus making the gathering representive of all dairy interests in the state.

A. J. Glover, editor of Hoard's Dairyman, and W. H. Miller, president of the National Milk Producers Association, will be speakers from outside the state on the program at the general afternoon meeting. Prof. O. E. Reed, head of the dairy husbandry department at M. A. C. will represent the college and the Michigan dairy interests.

The morning, according to the program announced, will be given over largely to inspection of the college dairy herds and of the extensive experimental work in dairy cattle feeding being carried on under the direction of the dairy division. Basket picnic lunches will be the order for the noon hour.

A special feature of the meeting which is attracting much attention from dairy farmers of the state, and creating no little good natured rivalry among friends of the contestants, will be a milking contest between N. P. Hull, president of the state Milk Producers Association, and M. L. Noon, President of the state Farm Bureau. These two well known Michigan agricultural leaders will meet in the battle of the milk pail at 12:30, in order to determine their superiority as "cow pumpers."

You would hardly believe that a printer was the father of the Sunday school system but its a fact. Robert Raikes, a Gloucester (England) printer and publisher, way back in 1780 noticed some ragged urchins playing in the street and was shocked (just notice the word "shocked") to hear their vocabulary of cuss words. He thought and thought and the more he thought the more he felt something ought to be done. So on a following Sunday morning he managed to coax them to come together in a class for religious instruction. This was the beginning of our latter day Sunday schools. The movement has enlarged until it is world wide although sad to relate not all Sunday school teachers are models of proprietiveness. It is not always possible to secure the best models of manhood and decency to teach the Sunday school, because many times people of the most exemplary lives are far from attractive to the younger generation, and often it is a fact that some blackguard fellow has a greater influence on the children. Human nature runs this way. However, it is possible in a general way to hold teachers and officers to the lines of real earnestness and christian duty in most cases while serving in these capacities.

Mexico Shows Us How

It is not often that the flea bitten greasers below the Rio Grande can instruct the United States Government how to shoot but we must confess that a few of their methods if carried out in Washington right now would increase our public utilities one hundred percent. Mexico has ruled that any of its military commanders must not remain in any certain location of command longer than one year but must be changed from one precinct to another so they cannot get too influential. The step is aimed at preventing political machines and also is a damper on most of the hatching up of revolutions which is a favorite amusement with the gringoes. When a famous general in Mexico has won a couple of battles he goes into the revoluting business on his own hook and is supposed to be against every other fellow who commands in the surrounding districts, at least he is bound to go after their scalps anyhow. The interesting game of hide and seek that the different guerrilla bands play among themselves down below the Rio Grande is much like the school boy games up here. If they don't happen to have any cannons handy some genius will get busy and rig up a set of ordnance from a section or two of old oil well tubing and mount it upon a pair of cart wheels. This dummy answers very well for light charges. Once in a while some wild-eyed vaquero will get drunk and overload his ordnace—then there is usually a loud report and not much left to tell the story except a few brass buttons hurtling through the air. How much longer America is going to allow this foolery and boy play down in Mexico is a question, but it looks as if we had taken the job of furnishing a Kindergarden for the world's amusement.

Michigan State Fair

Again the cycle of the seasons are rolling around to where it is time to hunt out your winter overcoat and give it a good dusting. It won't be long till you will note a long sultry afternoon followed by a sudden change sometime in the night and you will arise in the morning cursing your carelessness in leaving the house windows open all night. Then it is the autumn steals upon us all unwelcome. Most of us are very loth to give up the pleasures of mid-summer in Michigan, they are too brief anyhow—and resume the hustle and bustle for fuel to keep the house comfortable and (stuffy) the coming winter Every paper you pick up contains fair advertisements. Michigan State Fair occurs this fall from August 29 to September 7 with the same old bluff at new things and new buildings. Hillsdale Fair occurs September 22 to 27, and Jackson fair comes in between.

As a matter of fact if you are any kind of a citizen you can't afford to miss any of these fairs. The showing of high bred stock at all of these shows will surely appeal to your sense of business if you are a farmer; the manufactured products will draw you if a merchant and for everybody there are big days of meeting relatives who come but once a year. Surely breathes there a man with a soul so dead who has not desired to see the auto show?

The small minority today who aren't interested in automobiles somehow are seldom seen at the fair—they are lying in the cemetery or about ready for it.

The general manager of the Clifton Hotel at Niagara Falls says that sixty percent of his guests are "honeymooners" from the west. They come to the Falls expecting to see the wonders of Niagara and as a rule they don't ask much to eat, most of them don't eat much and don't care what they eat. He says it is so easy to please them he hardly knows they are about. Light lunches, no other attention and a general letting alone is about all they require.

When asked by a fellow passenger why, after spending millions of dollars in advertising, he did not stop and add the money thus saved to his profit, Mr. Wrigley, of chewing gum fame, said, "We are traveling west at sixty miles an hour. Where would we be tomorrow at this time if we took the engine off the train?"

Thirty years ago in a native hospital on the Portguguese island of Macao, off southern China, Sun Yat-Sen, the first president of China performed operations that seemed to the natives like black magic, when he cut men's bodies open and applied the knife to their organs then sewed their bodies up. At that time he was a successful surgeon.

Perseverance of Party Bosses

It is refreshing at least to observe the perseverance of politicians who have decided that certain of our big men must run for office whether these men want to or they don't. Ticket fixers around the state have been putting good natured Henry Ford on the ballot again this fall as usual and they have been a little more insistent, if possible, than before.

For several weeks back the newspapers have been telling us that Henry Ford was running for Senator, and that his campaign managers were all in the harness his majorities figured up, etc., all of which is the simplest "bosh." Mr. Ford is so busy with his great manufacturing enterprises he does not even know what these wire pullers are trying to put over. It has just come to Mr. Ford who is in the east, and the private secretary has been instructed to deny all such rumors and go out and head off the crazy politicians who are bound to put Henry on the ticket at any cost Repeatedly, Mr. Ford assures the public he has no use for political offices; continually he has come out with flat denials and publishes his absolute aloofness from office.

With the millions which his automobile plant is rolling up month after month it is not likely the sordid thrills of campaigns would appeal to Mr. Ford—anyhow his business needs him at all times, and we should say that as plain Henry Ford, the World's largest maker of "gas buggies" he would shine with far greater lustre than in any wind-jamming, pap-drawing job with an "Honorable" hooked up to it.

Mr. Ford is the one cool-headed big man of good judgment that this country has, and whose mind has not been turned by flattery or riches. Long may he wave!

HOW THIS WOMAN GOT STRENGTH

Put Up 300 Quarts Fruit, 500 Glasses Jelly and Took Care of Four Children

Norwalk, Iowa.—"I have been meaning for some time to write and tell you how much good your medicine has done me. When I started to take it I was almost bed fast and would have been in bed all the time if I had had any one to care for my children. There was so much swelling and pain that I could hardly take a step. I took seven bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash, and found that so healing. I am not entirely well yet for I was in bad shape when I started your medicine, but I am so much better that I am not afraid to recommend it, and I think if I keep on taking it, it will cure me. I have done my work all alone this summer, caring for four children, and I canned 300 quarts of fruit and made 500 glasses of jelly, so you see I must be better. I feel pretty good all the time and I am glad to tell others about the medicine."—Mrs. C. J. WENNERMARK, Box 141, Norwalk, Iowa.

Women can depend upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve them from female troubles. For sale by druggists everywhere.

It was, no doubt, a deliberate lie calculated to inspire frankness in a possible Tory. That was the moment for Andre to have produced his passports, which would have opened the road for him. Instead he committed a fatal error, the like of which it would be hard to find in all the records of human action.

"I am a British officer," he declared. "Please take me to your post."

They were keen-minded men who quickly surrounded him. A British officer! Why was he in the dress of a Yankee farmer? The pass could not save him now from these rough, strong handed fellows. The die was cast. They demanded the right of search. He saw his error and changed his plea.

"I am only a citizen of New York returning from family business in the country," he said.

He drew his gold watch from his pocket—that unfailing sign of the gentleman of fortune—and looked at its dial.

"You can see I am no common fellow," he added. "Let me go on about my business."

They firmly insisted on their right to search him. He began to be frightened. He offered them his watch and a purse full of gold and any amount of British goods to be allowed to go on his way.

Now here is the wonder and the mystery in this remarkable proceeding. These men were seeking plunder and here was a handsome prospect. Why did they not make the most of it and be content? The "skinners" were plunderers, but first of all and above all they were patriots. The spirit brooding over the highlands of the Hudson and the hills of New England had entered their hearts. The man who called himself John Anderson was compelled to dismount and empty his pockets and take off his boots, in one of which was the damning evidence of Arnold's perfidy. A fortune was then within the reach of these three hard-working men of the hills, but straightway they took their prisoner and the papers, found in his boot, to the outpost commanded by Colonel Jameson.

This negotiation for the sale of the United States had met with unexpected difficulties. The "skinners" had been as hard to buy as the learned diplomat.

CHAPTER XXIX

Solomon's Last Fight.

Meanwhile, Margaret and her mother had come up the river in a barge with General and Mrs. Arnold to the house of the latter. Jack had gone out on a tour of inspection. He had left headquarters after the noon meal with a curious message in his pocket and a feeling of great relief. The message had been delivered to him by the mother of a captain in one of the regiments. She said that it had been given to her by a man whom she did not know. Jack had been busy when it came and did not open it until she had gone away. It was an astonishing and most welcome message in the flowing script of a rapid penman, but clearly legible. It was without date and very brief. These were the cheering words in it:

"My dear friend: I have good news from down the river. The danger is passed. HENRY THORNHILL."

Jack being out of camp, Margaret had found Solomon. Toward the day's end he had gone out on the south road with the young lady and her mother and Mrs. Arnold.

Jack was riding into camp from an outpost of the army. The day was in its twilight. He had been riding fast. He pulled up his horse as he approached a sentry post. Three figures were standing in the dusky road.

"Halt! Who comes there?" one of them sang out.

It was the voice of Margaret. Its challenge was more like a phrase of music than a demand. He dismounted.

"I am one of the great army of lovers," said he.

"Advance and give the countersign," she commanded.

A moment he held her in his embrace and whispered: "I love you."

"The countersign is correct, but before I let you pass, give me one more look into your heart."

"As many as you like—but—why?"

"So I may be sure that you do not blame England for the folly of her king."

"I swear it."

"Then I shall enlist with you against the tyrant. He has never been my king."

Lady Hare stood with Mrs. Arnold near the lovers.

"I too demand the countersign," said the latter.

"And much goes with it," said the young man as he kissed her, and then he embraced the mother of his sweetheart and added:

"I hope that you are also to enlist with us."

"No, I am to leave my little rebel with you and return to New York."

"Will you give me a ride?" Margaret asked her lover. "I'll get on behind you."

Solomon took off the saddle and tightened the blanket girth.

"Thar, 'tain't over clean, but now ye kin both ride," said he.

Soon the two were riding, she in front, as they had ridden long before through the shady, mallowed bush in Tryon county.

They dismounted at Arnold's door.

"For a time I shall have much to [illegible] soon I hope for great promo[illegible]" he said.

"I expect to be the happiest man in the army, and the master of this house and your husband."

"And you and I shall be as one," she answered. "God speed the day when that may be true also of your people and my people."

He kissed her and bade her goodnight and returned to his many tasks. He had visited the forts and batteries. He had communicated with every outpost. His plan was complete. About midnight, when he and Solomon were lying down to rest, two horsemen came up the road at a gallop and stopped at his door. They were aides of Washington. They reported that the general was spending the night at the house of Henry Jasper, near the ferry, and would reach camp about noon next day.

"Thank God for that news," said the young man. "Solomon, I think that we can sleep better tonight."

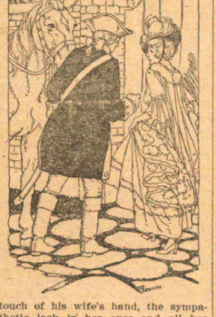
Jack was awake for an hour thinking of the great happiness which had fallen in the midst of his troubles and of Thornhill and his message. He heard the two aides going to their quarters. Then a deep silence fell upon the camp, broken only by the rumble of distant thunder in the mountains and the feet of someone pacing up and down between his hut and the house of the general. He put on his long coat and slippers and went out of doors.

"Who's there?" he demanded.

"Arnold," was the answer. "Taking a little walk before I turn in."

There was a weary, pathetic note of trouble in that voice, long remembered by the young man, who immediately returned to his bed. He knew not that those restless feet of Arnold were walking in the flames of hell.

Had some premonition of what had been going on down the river come up to him? Could he hear the feet of that horse, now galloping northward through the valleys and over the hills toward him with evil tidings? No more for this man was the comfort of restful sleep or the joys of home and friendship and affection. Now the touch of his wife's hand, the sympathetic look in her eyes and all her babble about the coming marriage were torture to him. He could not endure it. Worst of all, he was in a way where there is no turning. He must go on. He had begun to know that he was suspected. The conduct of the scout, Solomon Binkus, had suggested that he knew what was passing. Arnold had seen the aides of Washington as they came in. The chief could not be far behind them. He dreaded to stand before him. Compared to the torture now beginning for this man, the fate of Bill Scott on Rock creek in the wilderness, had been a mercy.



THEY DISMOUNTED AT ARNOLD'S DOOR.

Soon after sunrise came a solitary horseman, wearied by long travel, with a message from Colonel Jameson to Arnold. A man had been captured near Tarrytown with important documents on his person. He had confessed that he was Adjutant General Andre of Sir Henry Clinton's army. The worst had come to pass. Now treason! disgrace! the gibbet!

Arnold was sitting at breakfast. He arose, put the message in his pocket and went out of the room. The Vulture lay down the river awaiting orders. The traitor walked hurriedly to the boat landing. Solomon was there. It had been his custom when in camp to go down to the landing every morning with his spy glass and survey the river. Only one boatman was at the dock.

"Colonel Binkus, will you help this man to take me down to the British ship?" Arnold asked. "I have an engagement with its commander and am half an hour late."

Solomon had had much curiosity about that ship. He wished to see the man who had gone into the bush and then to Smith's with Arnold.

"Sart'n," Solomon answered.

They got into a small barge with the general in the cushioned rear seat, his flag in hand.

They came up to the Vulture and made fast at its landing stage where an officer waited to receive the general. The latter ascended to the deck. In a moment a voice called from above:

"General Arnold's boatmen may come aboard."

A British warship was a thing of great interest to Solomon. Once aboard he began to look about him at the shining guns and their gear and the tackle and the men. He looked for Arnold, but he was not in sight.

Among the crew, then busy on the deck, Solomon saw the Tory desperado "Slops," one time of the Ohio river country, with his black pipe in his mouth. Slops paused in his hauling and reeving to shake a fist at Solomon. They were heaving the anchor. The sails were running up. The ship had begun to move. What was the meaning of this? Solomon stepped to the ship's side. The stair had been hove up and made fast. The barge was not to be seen.

"They will put you all ashore below," an officer said to him.

Solomon knew too much about Arnold to like the look of this. The officer went forward. Solomon stepped to the opening in the deck rail, not yet closed, through which he had come aboard. While he was looking down at the water, some ten feet below, a group of sailors came to fill in. His arm was roughly seized. Solomon stepped back. Before him stood the man Slops. An insulting word from the latter, a quick blow from Solomon, and Slops went through the gate out into the air and downward. The scout knew it was no time to tarry.

"A night hawk couldn't dive no quicker ner what I done," were his words to the men who picked him up. He was speaking of that half second of the twenty-fourth of September, 1780. His brief account of it was carefully put down by an officer: "I struck not twenty feet from Slops, which I seen him jes' comin' up when I took water. This 'ere ol' sloop that had overhauled us goin' down were nigh. Hadn't no more'n come up than I felt Slop's knife rip into my leg. I never had no practice in that 'ere knife work. 'Tain't fer decent folks, but my ol' Dan Skinner is allus on my belt. He'd chose the weapons an' so I fetched 'er out. Had to er die. We fit a minnit thar in the water. All the while he had that d—n black pipe in his mouth. I were hacked up a leetle, but he got a big leak in him an' all of a sudden he wasn't thar. He'd gone. I struck out with ol' Dan Skinner 'twixt my teeth. Then I see your line and grabbed it. Whar's the British ship now?"

"'Way below Stony P'int an' a fair wind in her sails,' the skipper answered.

"Bound fer New York," said Solomon sorrowfully. "They'd 'a' took me with 'em if I hadn't 'a' jumped. Put me over to Jasper's dock. I got to see Washington quick."

"Washington has gone up the river."

"Then take me to quarters soon as ye kin. I'll give ye ten pounds, good English gold. My God, boys! My ol' hide is leakin' bad."

He turned to the man who had been washing and binding his wounds.

"Sodder me up best ye kin. I got to last till I see the Father."

Solomon and other men in the old army had often used the word "Father" in speaking of the commander in chief. It served as no other could, to express their affection for him.

The wind was unfavorable and the sloop found it difficult to reach the landing near headquarters. After some delay Solomon jumped overboard and swam ashore.

What follows he could not have told. Washington was standing with his orderly in the little dooryard at headquarters as Solomon came staggering up the slope at a run and threw his body, bleeding from a dozen wounds, at the feet of his beloved chief.

Beef for 5,000 People Roasted by Electricity

A new and unusual application of electric heating was made recently when electrically barbecued beef was served to five thousand people at the annual round up and celebration at Ephrata, Washington. We learn from Electrical World that four steers weighing about two thousand pounds each were dressed and prepared for the barbecue and roasted in a large electrically-heated pit built especially for the occasion. The improvised oven was 32 feet long, 4 feet wide and 6 feet deep. Twelve heating elements each of 3 kilowatt capacity and consisting of about 150 feet of No. 14 iron wire were placed one foot above the bottom of the pit. Sheet-iron heat deflectors were placed one foot above the heating elements, and a foot and a half above the deflectors were placed iron bars to hold the beef. Thermostatic control was provided to maintain an even heat in the pit.

The meat was first roasted at a temperature of 550 degrees for two hours. The heat was then reduced to 350 degrees and maintained at this point for four hours. For the next six hours the temperature ranged from 250 degrees to 300 degrees. At midnight the meat had been roasting for twelve hours, and the temperature was then reduced to 200 degrees and held there for twelve hours until the time of the barbecue.

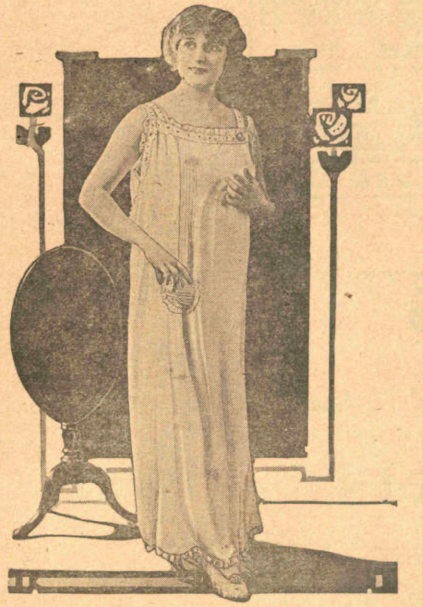
He Was Satisfied

The prince of Wales at an informal dinner was behaving so naturally that some of those present forgot the distinguished company they were in. Presently a speaker arose and began an oration. "Gentlemen—" he started. Then he paused and his face colored. "I beg your royal highness' pardon," he said in confusion. "Carry on, sir," laughed the prince. "I'm quite content to be called a gentleman."

LURE OF DAINTY LINGERIE; WIDE-BRIM DRESS HAT NEXT

THE lure of dainty lingerie abates not. Where is she whose repose is not sweetened by the touch of a soft silken nightrobe lace-edged and beribboned? Or whose waking hours are not filled with dreams of a hope-chest, which shall be the receptacle for delectable garments as lovely as the one shown in the picture?

It is fine detail which counts in the making of one's lingerie. A touch here and there bespeaks individual charm. such as, for instance, the little pocket on the silken gown of this illustration. Then, too, the lace-trimmed scallops at the hem line suggest a clever finish.



LACE-EDGED AND BE-RIBBONED

Ever so many attractive materials are available for lingerie sets just now. There is a very lovely small figured jacquard crepe and a fabric highly commendable is what is called triple voile, the same in dainty shades, leading among which are palest green and the handsome peach tones. Crepe-back satin is also a favorite, and it launders to perfection.

Collectively one's lingerie represents a rainbow of enchanting flower shades. Even the lace trimmings are dyed to match in some instances. Novelty is registered in the trimming of narrow black lace edgings and insertions which adorn colorful garments.

Lingerie sets in flower-like colors have little hand-work bouquets done in natural colorings. Here is where home talent finds opportunity to create garments at minimum cost.

New in the lingerie class is the nightrobe of glove silk. Models include the simple strap design with tiny venise lace edge, and round neck types which show insets of lace.

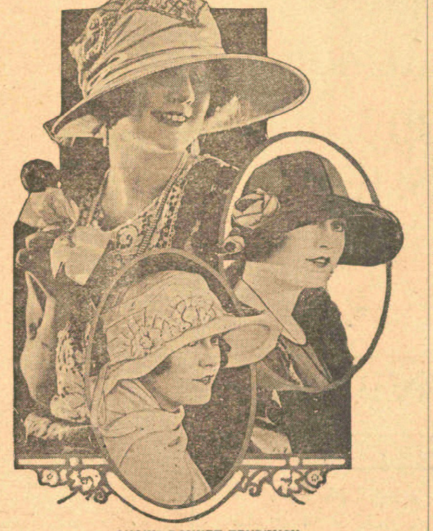
Lavish detail work which some of the handsomest garments boast stresses drawn threads with incrustations of net or lace.

It would almost seem as if the little cloche has had most of us hypnotized into wearing it, and it only, for these several seasons past. However, with the coming of summer, the spell was broken, and the wide-brim dress hat has come into its own once more. At least, the honors are divided between narrow cloche brims and the wide picturesque bonnet kind, such as are grouped in the illustration.

Very advance models include for late summer or midseason wear a few wider-brimmed models of black velvet, faced with white straw. One very choice model of this description had a broad sash of white organdie tied about the crown, brought to a huge bow of many loops at the front.

Peach color is such a favorite millinery shade, and has been throughout the summer season. Taffeta silk in this delectable color tops the large leghorn mushroom worn by the charming young woman with the parasol in the picture. There is a handsome multi-colored chenille embroidery covering the crown tip. The parasol is also of peach-colored silk.

Just the type of hat which most of us consider ideal for occasions formal and informal, is the black satin, wide-brimmed bonnet shown to the right in this group. A swish of malines across the brim front and roses of deep pink radiance add to its charm.



SHOWS BONNET TENDENCY

Picot ribbon fashioned into flat roses, and floating into streamers at one side, makes beautiful the large citron yellow chiffon chapeau, pictured in the oval below.

Large dressy hats of transparent hair and lace will hold good until the finale of the summer season. The fact that so many of the lace models are in cocoa color or darker browns presages their favor until cool weather.

Smart Summer Color

For frocks, sports suits and hats a deep canary yellow is extensively featured as one of the smartest colors for summer. Entire costumes carry out this single color scheme and it is also used in conjunction with white.

Girdles of Kid

The wide leather belt is coming more and more into favor. At first an experiment, it has steadily gained since Paris sanctioned it. The kid from which these crushed girdles are made is imported French skin, soft and pliable. One model is of dull red suede, with vague patterns in blue and black sprawling over it, batik fashion. In plain red, green and white these belts are working toward the restoration of the normal waistline.

For Tailored Suits

The tailored suit today has taken unto itself a new idea in blouses. This is a tunic blouse of dimity or organdie very long and often worn without a belt.

Dennis Clancy For Representative

Most of us know Dennis Clancy of Hillsdale a former townsman and native of Somerset. Mr. Clancy at the earnest request of many friends has filed his application to go on the Republican ballot at the Primaries for Representative from this district to Lansing and we believe he has good reasons for expecting to win out at the ballot box. The other candidate Floyd Rowe has served the state at Lansing. while we are not personally acquainted with Mr. Rowe we believe Mr. Clancy should be given the preference, for various reasons. One reason is he is very highly qualified for the job; he has been in politics in this county for several years and another is he understands the problems and needs of the people of this district to a tee. In the many years we have been acquainted with Mr. Clancy we have always found him prompt on any job he was interested in, and strictly candid in all things. In other words he says just what he means to do and does just what he has promised without fear or favor.

The attendance at the movies on Wednesday evening was not as heavy as it would have have been had the weather been warmer, but the seats were comfortably filled. The speech by Mr. Waller on the Anti Parochial Amendment was well received and we hear it quite generally commented upon. At the present time there does not seem to be the feeling on the Amendment which was noticeable the last time it was brought up.

Ralph Trumble and family and the Misses Hill and guests were in Jackson Thursday afternoon.

John Corbett Married to New Haven Girl

From the New Haven (Connecticut) "Register" we copy the following account of the marriage of John Corbett, formerly of this place, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Corbett:

"Miss Doris Hosley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Hosley of Main street, East Haven, and Mr. John Herman Corbett of Putnam, son of Mrs. C. A. Corbett of Michigan, were united in marriage at a pretty summer wedding on Thursday evening at 6:30 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents. The Rev. Daniel J. Clark performed the ceremony. The bride wore a beautiful gown of white satin with a veil of rose point lace and carried a shower of gardenias and roses. Miss Dorothy Scoville, Vassar '24, who was maid of honor, wore a bouffant gown of peach colored lace and carried a colonial bouquet. There were two ribbon bearers, Dorothy Hosley and Eunice warner who wore white organdie frocks and carried colonial bouquets. M. R. B. Boyes of Toronto was best man and the ushers were Charles Hosley and Ralph MacKinnell. The house was attractively decorated with gladiolas. Following the ceremony a reception was held and later Mr. and Mrs. Corbett left on a wedding trip to Michigan and Lake George They will be away a month."

MRS. BUSH TELLS OTHER WOMEN

How Pains in Side and Dragging Down Feelings Were Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Massena, N.Y.—"I had terrible pains in both my sides and a dragging-down feeling that affected me so that I could hardly walk, and I got run-down. A friend who had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advised me to try it and I have taken it with the best results. I do my housework and also some outdoor work on the farm. The Vegetable Compound has given me back my health and I can not praise it enough. I am perfectly willing that you should use these facts if my letter will help other women who still suffer."—Mrs. DELBERT BUSH, R. F. D. 1, Massena, N.Y.

The spirit of helpfulness shown in the letters we are constantly publishing is worthy of notice.

These women know by experience what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will do. Your troubles are the same as theirs. Isn't it reasonable to expect the same results?

If you have pains and a dragging-down feeling and are nervous and irritable, profit by Mrs. Bush's experience and give the Compound a trial.

Ale Once Labeled Poison

Years ago in the merry days of the English tavern there was a turmoil among radicals over the "poisoning" of the ale drunk by the common people. The trouble was caused when some one learned that in making ale sulphuric acid, made from Spanish pyrites, was used and that this contained arsenic. It was a tempest in a teapot, however, because it would have taken five barrels of ale to contain enough arsenic to hurt one individual.

Charity in Judgment

Those who themselves need the charitable judgment of other people should above all things be lenient in their own judgments. For my part, I consider the best and most finished type of man to be the person who is always ready to make allowances for others, on the ground that never a day passes without his being in fault himself, yet who keeps as clear of faults as if he never pardoned them in others.—Pliny the Younger.

Jackson—According to the will of the late Senator Charles E. Townsend the bulk of his estate, valued at $50,000, will go to his widow, Mrs. Nanette Loomis Townsend.

Grand Rapids—Henry Van Denbery, of Beverly, a suburb of Grand Rapids was killed when the oil truck on which he was riding was struck by a Pennsylvania passenger train.

Lake Odessa—Recent clear weather means thousands of dollars to the farmers of this community in saving the wheat crop. A large portion of the oat crop is cut. Corn and potatoes are making rapid progress.

St. Joseph—Emil Zupke, of Benton Harbor, and Florence McKinney, of Bainbridge, his sweetheart, have confessed to the slaying of Cora Raber, of Glendora, whose body was found near here. She was choked to death.

Kalamazoo—The 1925 convention of the International Typographical Union will be held in this city, according to a telegram received from Walter A. Landon, delegate from Kalamazoo to the annual meeting of the body being held in Toronto.

Perry—John Proctor, 62 years old, was gored by a bull at his farm here and died from the injuries. His chest was crushed in, causing internal hemorrhage. Mr. Proctor was a noted stock man and one of the prosperous farmers of this section.

Adrian—The county highway department is completing a program of summer oiling and is now working on roads entering Ohio. While the roads are not closed, detour signs are erected to prevent motorists from getting their cars spattered with fresh tar.

Iron Mountain—The continued rains and cool weather which the upper peninsula has experienced the past several weeks, has placed every potato field in Dickinson county in grave danger of the ravages of late blight, according to A. J. Lonsdorf, county agriculturist.

Caro—Mrs. Earl Foster and Mrs. Leo Powers, Detroit, returning from Saginaw in an automobile turned turtle in a deep ditch near Munger. Both women were seriously injured. Mrs. Powers was thrown through the windshield and Mrs. Foster was pinned under the car.

Edmore—Mrs. G. H. O'Brien, wife of the Edmore Times, was injured in an airplane crash at the annual street fair and homecoming here. Mrs. O'Brien, who was a passenger in the plane, and Pilot Kitchen were forced by engine trouble to land. The plane struck a tree on its journey earthward.

Flint—Flint taxpayers authorized a bond issue of $1,219,000 and the transfer of $86,129.91 from previous bond issues to finance a program to construct sewers, pavements and water mains. With a three-fifths vote necessary to carry the issues, the vote stood better than three and one-half to one to carry the proposition.

Pontiac—The laying of the last concrete on the 10-mile stretch of Dixie Highway between Drayton Plains and Potter's Corners, has been completed and the road will be open to traffic early in September, according to announcement by the Oakland county road commission. The stretch will complete the paving between Detroit and Flint on this road.

Ann Arbor—Having studied for eight weeks at the U. of M., the educators are leaving to enjoy a brief vacation ere school opens in the fall. With the going of the teacher-students go the younger students in the hope of jamming a whole summer of play into the short month remaining before the opening of the fall term. September 15 fall registration begins.

Detroit—The paning mill of the Dwight Lumber Co., at the Michigan Central Railroad and River Rouge, was burned to the ground. The damage was estimated by John C. Lodge, acting mayor of Detroit, and vice-president of the lumber company, at about $500,000. The flames started, it is believed, from the fire in the drying kilns. About two years ago a similar fire did a like amount of damage on the same site.

Kalamazoo—The second annual county fair is being held here. Entries in the live stock are 300 per cent more than the 1923 fair. A two-day society horse show with $3,500 plate and ribbon money prizes, has been arranged; a dog show with 200 entries; a farm implement show that covers four acres of ground and plenty of free acts and fireworks day and night feature the fair. The state departments that are exhibiting are M. A. C., health, state industries (prison) conservation, state tax commission and secretary of state.

Lawton—Contracting for the grape crop at fixed prices will be discontinued if the Southwestern Michigan Fruit Growers' Exchange has its way. At a meeting of 800 members of this organization and the Paw Paw Co-Operative Association here, it was decided to hold out against the practice, which had been almost universal in past year. The change in the attitude of the two associations resulted from the loss incurred by the members during the last three years, because market prices invariably have been in excess of contract prices.

Mt. Clemens—Vivian Persinger, 7-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Persinger, was burned to death in her bed in the Persinger home.

Davis and Coolidge Deliver Acceptance Speeches—Deadlock in London.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

JOHN W. DAVIS and Calvin Coolidge were formally told last week that they were the Presidential nominees of the Democrats and the Republicans, respectively. It has not been necessary to tell Senator LaFollette that he is an independent candidate, for he really nominated himself.

Mr. Davis got the word first, at his home in Clarksburg, W. Va., where some 50,000 people gathered for the ceremony and sat through a driving rainstorm while the candidate delivered his speech of acceptance. The address was broadcast by radio so that all the country had a chance to hear it. For that reason any extended summary of it would be superfluous. Having given the Democratic platform his "hearty approval," Mr. Davis declared the supreme need of the hour "is to bring back to the people confidence in their government," and in this connection he referred caustically to the relations between the President and congress and said the Republican party was a "leaderless and incoherent mob." He then proceeded to indict the Republican party "in its organized capacity for having shaken public confidence to its very foundations. I charge it with having exhibited deeper and more widespread corruption than any that this generation of Americans has been called upon to witness."

To the farmers he promised to remove tariff discrimination, enlarge their foreign markets and assist them in marketing plans. Labor, he said, should not suffer impairment of its rights by injunction or any other device. The eighteenth amendment, he declared, being the law, he would no more think of ignoring its enforcement than he would ignore the Ten Commandments. His declaration in favor of religious freedom was strong, but he did not mention the Ku Klux klan by name. As for foreign entanglements, he said he would sincerely favor the world court and did not regard the League of Nations as a dead incident, but he did not believe the entrance of America into the league can, will or should occur until the common judgment of the American people is ready for the step. Mr. Davis announced that he had just severed his connection with the New York law firm, but declared he had no apology to offer for his career and conduct as a lawyer.

Leaders of both parties professed to be highly pleased with Mr. Davis' address. The Democrats called it frank, courageous and unequivocally progressive. The Republicans said it drew definite campaign lines which are just what they wish as issues.

THURSDAY evening Calvin Coolidge stood before a throng that filled Continental Memorial hall in Washington and delivered his address accepting the Republican nomination. Much of it was devoted to an exposition of the country's progress in the last four years, under Republican rule. He told of the resumption of friendly relations with foreign governments, the liquidating of more than 40 per cent of the foreign debt due us, providing funds for great reduction of our national debt; of the revival of industry, "which is spreading to agriculture," the decrease of unemployment and the increase of wages. He defended the immigration law and protective tariff, and cited the economies worked in national government expenditures. He did not claim for the Republican administration too much credit for the recent upturn of prices for agricultural products but did assert that the government had rendered much assistance to the farmer, and promised more. He warmly commended the proposed child labor amendment, and said of prohibition that he would do his best to enforce the dry law. Like Mr. Davis, he declared in favor of membership in the world court, but reaffirmed his opposition to entrance into the League of Nations. He had a good deal to say about the probable success of the plan to settle Europe's tangled affairs laid down by the commission headed by his running mate, General Dawes.

When the Dawes plan is in operation, he promised, he will approach the great powers on the subject of holding another conference for further limitation of armaments and for the codification of international law.

It was noted that neither Mr. Davis nor Mr. Coolidge alluded directly to the candidacy of LaFollette. The former merely said the people must choose between "the delusive panaceas of the dreamy radical and the smug complacency of the conservative," and the latter said: "We are likely to hear a great deal of discussion about liberal thought and progressive action. It is well for the country to have liberality in thought and progress in action, but its greatest asset is common sense."

THE Democratic national committee completed its reorganization by electing Clem Shaver as chairman, Mrs. Emily Newell Blair of Missouri, Frank S. Hague of New Jersey and Samuel Amidon as vice chairmen; James W. Gerald of New York as treasurer and Charles Greathouse as secretary. Jesse Jones, a Texas banker, was made chairman of the finance committee. Mr. Shaver then went to Chicago to open western headquarters.

SENATOR JIM REED of Missouri has announced that he will support the candidacy of John W. Davis, which may or may not help the Democratic nominee. In Illinois the executive board of the state Federation of Labor has indorsed the candidacies of LaFollette for President and Len Small for re-election as governor. Ohio Democrats renominated Gov. A. V. Donahey, and the Republicans nominated former Gov. Harry L. Davis.

THERE is no good reason to believe that the London conference on the Dawes plan will not result in full agreement, but at this writing it is in a deadlock over the matter of the evacuation of the Ruhr. All other questions were virtually settled after the arrival of the German delegation but the Germans on the one hand and the French and Belgians on the other could not reach an accord on the evacuation, the point in dispute being the time when that should take place. Premier Herriot, who already has made so many concessions that his political position at home is imperiled, insists that the military occupation continue for 12 months after the application of the Dawes plan so as to insure the carrying out of its stipulations. The Germans demand complete evacuation not later than January, 1925, saying that nothing less will satisfy the reichstag and German public opinion. Really they fear that the Herriot cabinet will not last for 12 months and that it will be succeeded by a reactionary government that would find some excuse for refusing to carry out the undertakings of Herriot. Also, it is said, they have learned that British bankers would not lend money on a basis of evacuation of the Ruhr a year hence.

The French and German finance ministers, who are in London, have drawn up a Franco-German commercial treaty the signing of which is involved in the Ruhr evacuation. By it France would receive preferential treatment in many respects.

The "big fourteen," as the allied and German delegates are called, have been discussing the matter of reallocating the reparations to be recovered from Germany, and Ambassador Kellogg and Colonel Logan both informed them that the United States was deeply interested in this and would be represented at the meeting of financiers planned, if only for the purpose of enforcing its claims for army of occupation costs, Lusitania damages and other losses.

Secretary of State Hughes, on his return home from his European trip, said he was very hopeful of the situation abroad and believed the Dawes report would be accepted and put into effect within a short time.

HAVING received word that the harbor at Angmagsalik, Greenland, was comparatively clear of ice, the American flyers planned to make the jump from Reykjavik, Iceland, on Thursday. Then came a wireless report that the ice had again closed in, and the flight was postponed. The Danish steamer Gertrud Rask finally has forced her way into the harbor with supplies for the aviators. Lieutenant Locatelli of Italy, who is flying in the wake of the Americans, was prevented by fogs from making the jump from the Orkneys to Iceland. Major Zanni, Argentinian round-the-world flyer, has reached Rangoon.

FOR several weeks vague reports of severe floods in China have reached the western world. More definite stories are now coming, and these say the devastation is terrible. It is estimated that between 13,000 and 14,000 persons have been drowned and that nearly 15,000,000 are in peril of death from famine. The torrential floods were general throughout the country but the provinces of Chihli and Hunan were the worst sufferers. The American Red Cross chapters in the Far East already are doing what relief work is possible. The American legation at Peking says $10,000,000 will be needed.

OUTBREAKS in the Sudan which culminated in a fight at Atbara between Egyptian troops and British Sudanese soldiers are looked on in London as serious precursors of trouble and the government has sent warships to Egypt and reinforcements to Khartoum. The disturbances are said to have been stirred up by an Egyptian propagandist society with headquarters in Cairo, which aims to restore the former khedive, Abbas Hilmi. Control of the part of the Sudan affected is in dispute between Egypt and Great Britain.

THERE is grave trouble, too, in Spain, though the censorship keeps the details rather dark. The Moroccan army has demanded that the king dismiss Dictator Prima de Rivera and abolish the dictatorship, and wishes General Weyler to be the head of a new government. Since King Alfonso supported the revolution that overthrew the constitutional government and placed De Rivera in power, it is considered possible that he will abdicate.

In both the Spanish and the French protectorates of Morocco there has been sanguinary fighting and in the latter the Moors were temporarily successful.

"CONSTITUTION day," the fifth anniversary of the foundation of the German republic, was celebrated in Berlin and elsewhere last week, but with such a monarchist flavor that observers were led to remark that Germany was a republic largely without republicans, especially in the capital.

ENGLAND, France and Italy are determined that there shall not be a Balkan war, and have suggested to Greece, Yugo-Slavia and Rumania that they lay their grievances against Bulgaria before the council of ambassadors in Paris. Russia is said to have been fomenting the disputes between those smaller nations, but just now she is expecting credits from England, and so may be counted on to behave for the time being. None of the great powers will finance a war movement.

WHITE haired, feeble veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic, in national encampment in Boston, paraded bravely through a driving rain last Tuesday, and the throngs who watched them cheered and wept as the old soldiers passed. Not many of the boys of '61 are left, and it may be they will never have another annual parade.

On Thursday the veterans elected Dr. Louis F. Arensberg of Uniontown, Pa., commander in chief for the ensuing year and chose Grand Rapids, Mich., as the place for their next encampment. Among the resolutions adopted was one calling for increased pensions.

DR. OTTO WEIDFELDT, German ambassador to the United States, has been relieved at his own request and will return to private life. It is expected that Dr. William Cuno, former chancellor, will succeed him.

Most Forest Fires Laid to Negligence

San Francisco.—The great forests of firs, pines, spruces, hemlocks, redwoods and sequoias that stretch over the states of the Pacific coast have been menaced more seriously by fires this summer than at any time in recent years. California, in the grip of a protracted drought, was the worst sufferer.

Despite the tinder-like condition of the California national forests, where the most disastrous of the fires have burned, Paul G. Redington, United States district forester, is of the opinion that there would have been virtually no fire hazard, and would not be at any time, if human carelessness could be eliminated.

"About 80 per cent," he said, "are caused by careless campers, motorists and others who frequent the forests. It is true that every summer a certain number of fires are started by lightning, but we do not fear the lightning fires. Generally they are started in exposed places, spots easily discerned by our lookout men. It usually is a much simpler matter to put them out than to check those of human origin. Campers are apt to cause blazes along stream beds, in places less cool and less accessible."

So serious has the situation been in the California forests that the federal forester arranged for soldiers to patrol certain districts of the national reserves where the hazard was greatest.

Bells Restored to Churches of Poland

Bells, great and small, chimes carillons, heavy booming bells and light tinkling silvery bells, 4,000 of them arrived in Warsaw a few weeks ago. They came from Russia. When Poland was still Russian territory and the Germans were advancing during the war, the bells were taken from the towers and churches and shipped to the Russian interior, for it was known that the Germans had stripped every invaded country of its brass bells. Now the bells have come back. The new chimes in the Warsaw cathedral pealed a merry welcome. The Warsaw opera gave a special concert consisting of selections all related to bells. Twelve thousand bells are still in Russia, but they are on their way and the Polish villages which have not heard that sweet melody of their merry carillons for nearly seven years, will rejoice with special celebrations when they arrive. Carillons and chimes are often a matter of great local pride. In Flanders and Holland there exists often a centuries-old naive rivalry among the different communities over the most beautiful bells.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best—Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says, "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by parcel post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

Entrenched Prejudice

Most nations, like most men, are docile only in youth; they become incorrigible as they grow old. When customs are once established and prejudices rooted, it is a dangerous and useless enterprise to try to reform them, the people will not permit their misfortunes to be touched upon, even for their instruction—like the stupid and cowardly sick who shudder at sight of a physician.—Jean Jacquès Rousseau.

Envy Well Defined

Envy is a littleness of soul which cannot see beyond a certain point, and if it does not occupy the whole space feels itself excluded.—Hazlitt.

KATHLEEN NORRIS

Not so many years ago, in San Francisco, a young woman had achieved considerable local success as a writer. She decided to assault the literary citadels of the East. It wasn't so much an assault as a surprise; for after one or two novels had appeared around Boston and New York, the established writers woke up one morning to find that a new member had joined the cult.

The acclaim of such an authority as William Dean Howells and of several other well-known novelists and literary editors made easier the success of Kathleen Norris. It was not long until her short stories were sought by the Atlantic Monthly and various other important magazines.

Such novels as "Sisters," "Harriet and the Piper," "Martie, the Unconquered" and "Josselyn's Wife" have given her a front-rank position. Read "Josselyn's Wife" as a serial in this paper and you will agree with the popular verdict as to her ability.

There are really two Josselyn's wives in Mrs. Norris' fascinating novel. One is the handsome young wife of the elder Josselyn; the other his son's wife. You will be interested principally in the latter and the manner in which she met her problem when her husband's attractive stepmother threatened too strong an influence upon him.

Freaks of Nature

Those of our subscribers who witnessed the big Hagenbeck-Wallace shows at Hillsdale last week will call to mind the fact the wonderful spread of canvas under which this great aggregation of people are housed and where they operate.

But the tremenduous cost of maintaining such any army of performers, stake drivers, guards, musicians, electricians, machinists, and managers is beyond comprehension. The amount of food required for one meal alone would stagger the average person. Added to this is the grain and hay for the horses, elephants and various other ruminants the ice for the hippos, the raw meat for the jungle animals such as tigers lions, leopards etc, and all together it is not surprising or strange the the show authorities actually have to transport their dollars and half dollars to the bank in bushel baskets as reported. The usual collection of human freaks accompanied the Wallace shows. There was the gaint eight foot Texan who weighed something like 480 pounds, the fat lady whose arms and legs were vertible saw logs and the strong woman who had lifted 3250 pounds on her husky back. This lady is probably 45 years of age and we suppose has been most of her life in sight of the sawdust ring. Constant practice wears away the hardest obstacles and when she stated she as a child was sickly and puny it seemed unbelievable. This lady with ease lifted the weight of twelve men plus platform on her broad shoulders, and iron dumb bells were as corks in her hands. She also said she had lifted a small elephant likewise. A thonsand Amazons like her trained for Uncle Sam's army we calculate could lick the whole German crowd.

The good natured giant from Texas seemed quite young; our only remark concerning him would be "what a snap for the tailor." The silver ring which this man wears on his finger would pass a quarter dollar inside its circumference easily.

If this chap attained his great size by eating tortillas and hot tamales then we'd say that's the diet for us. Its mighty lucky for him he lives in this day instead of the times of Frederick The Great. That highly omnipresent Monarch delighted to go out and kidnap such men and force them into his personal body guard where they spent the remainder of their lives, practically slaves to his insane whims. The ladies in beads who adorned various parts of the side shows also came in for their share of the attention from the younger generation. They are very vain of their appearances and seek to sell photos to all. We should presume they have reason to be proud of physical proportions but how in the name of common sense they can stand these old mornings is more than we can figure out. The fire eater from South America seemed hungry for "hot stuff" and he constantly daubed the curling flames into his mouth, then just for a novelty he'd light faggots from the smouldering embers and feast on melted sealing wax. When he dies he'll make a standing joke of the Inferno.

Then there was the usual Albino lady who can't stand the light—in fact we often wonder if in this great age of surgery the oculist could fix this unfortunate class of people with binoculars. Last but not least the fortune teller told a lot of 'em what they were coming to, and judging from the expressions on some of their faces they have already entered into the experiences which she prognosticates.

Our impression of the big show proved highly satisfactory from the outside anyhow.

Novel Use of Sawdust

Michigan's sawdust mountain, covering 13 acres of land here is being moved. It is reputed to be the largest sawdust pile in the world and is estimated to contain 125,000 tons. Six carloads a week are being shipped from this heap to two of the sheetrock mills of the United States Gypsnm Company, one at Grand Rapids, the other at Fort Dodge, Ia,.

Should all of the sawdust prove usable, the pile would produce 1,666,000,000 square feet of Sheet rock—which shows that sawdust comprises such a minute percentage of the board, the rest being pure gypsum rock, that it does not lower the board's fire resistance. But this tiny proportion of sawdust is important because it makes possible to saw and nail the rigid fibre bound sheets of rock just like wood.

Out of each carload of sawdust more than 200,000 square feet of wallboard will be manufactured. But, although this provides for nearly a million and a quarter feet weekly production at each of these two mills, it is not enough. Saw dust is also shipped from other places to supply them—and these are only two of the seven Sheetrock mills of the United States Gypsum Company in various parts of the country which are supplying the demand for a fire proof, insulating economical, non warping, permanent wallboard that can be papered calcimined, painted or treated with the new wallboard decorator called Textone.

No contract exists between the Gypsum Company and the owners of the sawdust mountain for the outright purchase of the material or for the continuous shipment of it. The wallboard factories will continue to use Cheboygan sawdust so long as its quality continues high. Should all of it prove usable the resultant 1,666,000,000 feet of Sheetrock would supply the country for less than two years.

A Cold Night in Michigan

Right in these August days, when for the nonce the coal man has ceased to be worry, it might be refreshing and consoling to tell the story we heard the other day about a certain winter night in a little Northern Michigan town; we think it might have been Iron Mountain—it was snowing the 21st day of May when we spent something like ten or twelve hours there as the guest of Editor Pat O,Brien.

The night we speak of the furnace in the hotel had broken down and there were no stoves in the rooms. One big cannon stove in the office was supposed to furnish heat for the whole building. A Grand Rapids salesman was there one blizzardy night. He was so cold he got up and dressed, went back to bed, and still shivered. In desperation he went down to the office at 2 a. m. and began poking the fire. While thus engaged, and unknown to him, the village doctor entered to warm himself, having just returned from a long country drive. Suddenly the salesman looked up and saw the man with ice covered whiskers. Thinking the ice covered one was another frozen guest tne gadder from the Furniture City exclaimed: "My Good Gosh, what room did you have?"—Ionia News.

Big Salaries And Small Bank Accounts

One of the powerful lures of the large city is the promise of big money. Many of the young people of North Adams no doubt have been fascinated at times by large salaries paid in big cities. They have heard about fabulous sums of money easily earned—to work at nine o'clock, through at five, Saturday afternoons off, etc. No wonder they grow restless!

Well, what is the truth? Some time ago we requested a former small town citizen now at the top of a large wholesale house in Chicago, to say something on the subject for the benefit of discontented young people in this vicinity, and this is the way he put it: "Tell the young folks of your little town this: If they should come to Chicago or any other large city they may receive a larger income than they do now, but they will buy less with it and get less out of it, and save less of it (if any.) Instead of finding themselves richer, they will find themselves poorer than before. For two small rooms and a still smaller kitchen they will pay $75 to $100 per month rent—and it wont be much of a home. They will pay from $15 to $30 per month garage rent if they own a car.

They will pay 34c per dozen for eggs and 5c per pound for potatoes (they sell them by the pound here) 8c per pint for milk, 32c per pound for pork chops.

They will have to pay out money every time they want to go anywhere, or see anything or do anything. Anybody who thinks the city is a round of enjoyment from morning till night is fooling himself. It is one round of paying out money. This is why you see so many men in large cities earning $10,000 per year and living in small apartments—they are doing a mighty small business on a big scale and they have to in order to make both ends meet.

Lots of these chaps dont feel they are able to own and maintain cars and dont have bank accounts. They are constantly put to it to pay expenses and dress as is necessary to hold their jobs where they happen to be employed. These men don't enjoy life one-half as much as the person living in North Adams and earning $1500 per year and banking some of it. Tell the young people to consider the number of dollars they earn, as much as what they must pay to exist and tell them to remember old Cincinnatus who when he was through bossing Rome, retired down on the farm to really enjoy life."

What this man said has been repeated hundreds of times concerning city life and even then many of the poor suckers who have somehow managed to live in Detroit and Chicago most of their lives in spite of strikes, starvation, and crime, are still sticking like a sand burr. We might add that living in the big city is similar to camping in the rear of your neighbor's hog pen—you get most of the odors and garbage thrown in your face—but the excitement of life more than offsets the smells and the varicolored events of the city life is for some people ample reward.

Every time the big fire engine rumbles down the street pell mell followed by every conceivable vehicle, from a push cart to a bicycle, they get an instalment of the thrills. Over on the corner some night a little after 1:30 a. m. the dim glow of the arc fails to penetrate the alley. The sound of a pistol shot is heard. ;You slip out of bed and get there just in time to see the blood dripping form of a murdered patrolman shoved into the ambulance and carted off to the morgue; another instalment perchance tomorrow evening. On the same corner a motley crowd of the denizens of the Ghetto will congregote to be entertained by "Holy Rollers' or some other fanatical enthusiasts of various colors, and so it goes!

For a person who has no particular aim in life, other than to be "amused" city life is the thing

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

On Investing in Mortgages

"Aunt Emmy, what do you think of mortgages as investments?" asked Ethel.

"First mortgages, generally speaking, are sound investments, but not all first mortgages are good," Aunt Emmy replied. "You must exercise care and discretion. If you know all about the property, or if you are dealing with a financial concern that has a reputation for success and honesty, you should be safe. But it is well to seek advice before investing. Go to your bank, talk the whole thing over and be guided by their advice. Real estate transactions are tricky. Better be safe than sorry. If there is any question as to party walls or if the building on property should be even a few inches over the lot line, you would undoubtedly have trouble.

"Even guaranteed mortgages should not be bought on faith. Never buy a mortgage without knowing the value of the real estate it covers and of the property in the vicinity. Be sure a good lawyer looks out for your interest. With your small capital there is too much risk in buying without every safeguard.

"Remember that taxes and insurance must be paid regularly when they are due. You must know that they are paid, and remember, too, that the property you lend money on should be worth considerably more than you are lending."

"What about second mortgages, Aunty, don't they earn more than first mortgages?" inquired Ethel.

"Sometimes they do. Second mortgages are good investments under certain conditions. But it is not advisable for an investor of limited means to buy them. In case the first mortgage should be foreclosed, the holder of the second mortgage should be in a position to protect his interests by being able to buy the first mortgage. That means you would have to have money on hand."

"Oh, Aunty," exclaimed Ethel, "you rather frighten me about mortgages."

"No, my dear, don't feel that way," said Aunt Emmy. "It's all a matter of care and knowledge of conditions. Even if you don't know about them yourself, you can protect yourself by taking the advice of your bankers. Don't trust too much to your own judgment."—ANNE B. AYMES.

Bankers of Lee County, Mississippi, are employing a dairy trained expert to give his whole time to the development of dairying. His salary and expenses are paid by the banks of the county in proportion to their deposits. This expert helps to arrange for loans to purchase cows, sees that the farmers have shelter and feed to care for the cattle, and advises with them in figuring out rations and in determining what crops to grow. He makes special engagements to attend scrub bull funerals.

"JUST TWENTY-ONE"

One of the important factors in the election of the man who is to be the next President of the United States, will be the young men and women who are just old enough to vote.

Some of these first voters are wage earners, others are still in college. They share a common responsibility, that of expressing the views and wishes of the youth of America.

Here and there when a young man or woman can be persuaded to talk about it, they are heard to say that they want to keep President Coolidge on the job at Washington for the next four years. They can do it.

COOLIDGE CHOICE OF WOMEN VOTERS

Mrs. A. T. Hert Praises Child Labor Policy.

"What the future holds for the wage earner and the wage earner's family, is of vital interest to the women of this country." Mrs. Alvin T. Hert, vice chairman of the Republican National committee, stated in a recent interview. "Therefore, the promises of the political parties on the subject of labor are of the greatest importance. When we reflect that there are eight and one-half million women wage earners including two million married women wage earners who are directly affected by labor legislation, as well as the wives of the laboring men who are interested in the protection afforded labor, the importance of the question can be plainly seen.

"Every woman in America is interested in the question of child labor and wants to see the children of this country safeguarded during the most important years of their lives.

"A fair deal to labor was assured by the Republican party in its platform accepted by the national convention in Cleveland. The platform pledges continued progressive reduction of taxes, rigid economy in government and promises protection against undue exactions."

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON PLAUSIBLE YOUNG MEN

"Isn't it dreadful about poor Mrs. Fuller, Aunt Emmy!" exclaimed Molly. "That company she bought those bonds in has failed and she has lost nearly every cent she had."

"Do you know how it happened?" asked Aunt Emmy. "She got a letter from some so-called 'investment house' she knew nothing about. She answered it and they sent a plausible young man to her and he persuaded her that the company he was selling bonds for was a seventh wonder. The carelessness of some people is really criminal. Mrs. Fuller might have gone to her bank, asked for reliable information and saved her money. Any bank has or can get the facts about business concerns showing their condition. Had she bought bonds in a company that the facts showed had been meeting its obligations for years, had a good surplus and good business prospects, she would not be in trouble today. Instead, she took the word of that plausible man who was either deceived himself, or who willfully deceived her, or at least was not so much interested in protecting her as in selling bonds to her. There is really very little excuse for the Mrs. Fullers of today because reliable information on financial matters may be had so easily."

"If she only hadn't put so much money in those bonds!" commented sympathetic Molly.

"That's another thing it is unwise to do," replied Aunt Emmy. "It is always foolish to carry all your eggs in one basket. Now if she had put only part of her money in those bonds instead of all she had, she could have stood the loss. As it is there is no telling what straits the poor little woman has got herself into. Like every one else Mrs. Fuller was too greatly tempted by the promise of a high rate of interest on her investment. Her extreme ignorance of finance coupled with the desire for high interest caused all her trouble.

"There are few things more dangerous than thinking you can do something you know nothing about as well as somebody who knows all about it. How foolish that sounds just to say it! Mrs. Fuller may be able to go to the butcher and because of her judgment of cuts of meat, get the very best and most for her money but that is no sign that she can judge securities. Buying bonds is no different from buying meat. You simply must understand your subject. You must know how to select good bonds, and you must know when to sell and when to buy. The only way you can do this is to take the advice of some one whose business it is to study the bond market. Any bank large or small will gladly discuss investments with its depositors. When you have learned enough to depend somewhat on your own judgment make your own decision as to what to buy,—then talk it over with your banker to make sure. Should he say, 'Don't buy,' abide by his decision."

"Mrs. Fuller's case has taught me a lesson, Aunty," said Molly, "I'll never take any chances like she did."—ANNE B. AYMES.

THE REWARD

The individual banker should be much more than a mere lender of money, much more than a mere collector of interest. More than any man in his community, he has the opportunity to guide the farmer along lines of safe progress and toward substantial achievement. The banker in an agricultural district must know agriculture if he is to loan money to farmers and upon agricultural security. In addition to that, the banker is in touch with the activities of the business world. He has correspondent banks in the larger cities; he must, of necessity for the protection of his own business, look beyond the horizon of his immediate vicinity in order to foresee imminent changes in business conditions. The banker has the opportunity to be the point of contact between the farmer and these many other activities of the business world with which the farmer's business is so closely connected. The field is wide, the opportunity is great, the reward of confidence of one's patrons and neighbors—gained by service in their behalf—is worth the effort.—Walter W. Head, President American Bankers Association.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

The Woman on the Bootleggers' Trail

Once upon a time (that is the way all good stories begin and we warn you in advance that this is a good story) a banker in a little country town in Michigan wanted his son to be a lawyer. This was not back in fairy tale times but just a few years ago. There was only one trouble about the matter. The son was a daughter and she had no brothers. That might have discouraged an ordinary father but it did not trouble Mr. Walker of Buckley, Michigan. He saw no reason why his daughter should not be a lawyer and when she was in high school he offered to study law along with her. She did not move in the direction of the law at first but in the more conventional field of school teaching. She taught school first in Michigan and later in Arizona and California, coming to be principal of the high school at Pasadena. Then the father's dream came back to her as a real ambition While she was still teaching she took a law course of two classes a day, one at eight in the morning and the other at five in the afternoon, winning her diploma as a full fledged lawyer in five years.

THE LEADING LEGAL LADY OF THE LAND

That woman, Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, has today the highest legal position of any woman in the land. As Assistant United States District Attorney she has charge of prosecuting the cases of violation of the prohibition laws which come before the Supreme Court. She has won the confidence of the court and her associates and has a conviction that the law will triumph over the bootleggers.

"Uncle Sam needs a wife," said Ida Clyde Clark in an address the other day in which she gave a vivid description of the red taped souls of men. Mrs. Willebrandt is answering that need. She is doing a vigorous piece of housecleaning for Uncle Sam. There are lots of obstacles in the way but she is bringing to her task an energy and pesistence such as has given millions of dining room rugs a thorough spring cleaning.

Mrs. Willebrandt was an unusual lawyer from the beginning. She decided at the start not to accept every client who came to her but to pick and choose those whom she would serve. In order to do this she worked as assistant principal of a night school during the early years of her practice. She would not take criminal or divorce cases. By a strange irony of fate she now specilizes in both. For as Assistant United States Attorney General she prosecutes criminal bootleggers and is seeking desperately to divorce her country from the liquor trade entirely. As one of the six Assistant Attorney Generals, Mrs. Willebrandt has her special field the prosecution of violators of the prohibition laws and her job includes other large and important matters that may be turned over to an assistant attorney general. When cases come up on trial before the Supreme Court, Mrs Willebrandt represents the United States. The Solicitor General does much of the actual appearance before the court but the Assistant Attorney General prepares the briefs and very often makes the argument before the court itself.

OBSTACLES TO LAW ENFORCEMENT

Mrs. Willebrandt is not a bit blind to the difficulties and failures of enforceing the Volstead Act but is, nevertheless, optimistic over the future. She says that prohibition never had a fair chance; that no earnest effort has been made to enforce the Volstead Law until recently. There has been a lack of cooperation between the States and Federal Government and there has been too much politics and too little merit in the appointment of enforcement agents.

In discussing the enforcement she gives high praise to Chicago. "I would cite Chicago as an example of what can be done. Mayor Dever of that city is a Democrat; Mr. Olsen, the United States District Attorney, is a Republican. Nevertheless, they joined forces and cleared up nearly 800 places. Then, on his responsibility, using city detectives and police, the Mayor closed up about 1,300 smaller places.

Kansas stands first for state enforcement", says Mrs. Willebrandt "Last year they handled all the cases except fourteen. The States in the Middle West have the best record for enforcing the law on prohibition. The worst situation is in the Northwestern States where smuggling over the Canadian border, rum running by sea and manufacture of liquor are constant factors. It is not only a matter of politics here, but a great commercial interest involving millions of dollars that has wound it tentacles about many forms of business."

HOPE FROM THE COAST GUARD

Mrs. Willebrandt is hopeful regarding the work of the Coast Guard. "We expect much more help from the Coast Guard because there has recently been a more encouraging co ordination between the Coast Guard, the customs officials and the federal agents."

Captain William V. E. Jacobs, Divisional Chief of the Coast Guard expects to have 363 new boats and 4,500 recruits. Among the new boats will be 72 foot launches armed with one pounders and launches armed with one pounders and Lewis machine guns, also 36 foot launches with a speed of 30 knots which is better than many of the rum runners. He also expects to have twenty destroyers at his call, and believes that with this equipment the Government can keep such a close guard of the rum fleet that its operations will be seriously cramped.

"Severe penalties for violation of the Volstead Act are urgently needed," is Mrs. Willebrandt's opinion Citing the large Savannah conspiracy recently discovered, she points out that four men, or rather families owned the town through mortgages and business deals. They had a fleet of ships that brought liquor to the coast and a flotilla of small craft that conveyed it to the shore. They had storage caves especially constructed, a small army of Negroes to load the stuff and they shipped the liquor in the refrigerator cars, disguised as fruit. These men, says Mrs. Willebrandt, admitted that they made millions, yet all we could do was to give them two years in jail. That is the greatest weakness of the Volstead Act—the penalty is insignificant. In its civil features it is fairly effective, but in its criminal it is the most futile, toothless, spineless of all laws. It should be strengthened so that the penalties are equal to those of other violations of Federal law.

There is a large field for women in law, Mrs. Willebrandt said. Sex is not the barrier; it is temperment. There are weak sisters among the men as well as the women.

The enforcement of prohibition provides a great opportunity for I agree with Mrs. Pinchot that the government must look to women for help in making the country dry.

There is much work in prohibition enforcement that women will be able to do conscientiously and carefully. I do not mean the work of a gunman.

It is unfortunate that to the public mind the term prohibition agent means gunman, or at least a detective who will be required to tackle a more or less difficult job. I believe, however, that as prohibition continues this feature of the work will become less and less in evidence.

To my mind the eventual key to enforcement will be in the issuance of permits for the withdrawal of intoxicants from federal warehouses In connection with granting of these permits there is much investigation work to be done and many reports to be made. There is follow up work, too. Women will be able to do these things efficiently.

Free Blasting Caps Are Again Available

Another supply of blasting caps for use with agricultural explosives has been made available to Michigan farmers, according to information received this week by Harry F. Livingston, M. A. C. landclearing specialist who is in charge of the distribution of war salvage explosives in the state.

900,000 caps are available, or a sufficient quantity to permit furnishing a box of 100 with each 200 pounds of Pyrotol, new war salvage agricultural explosive announced last week. Contracts for the cartridging and delivery of the 1800,000 pound Michigan allotment of the new explosive were placed last week and deliveries by the middle of September are expected.

While the price of the Pyrotol will be about two cents a pound higher than was Sodatol, the earlier explosive which was exhausted in the first part of the year, the availability of the free caps and the fact that Pyrotol will run about 300 sticks to the pound to 240 for Sodatol will result in virtually equalizing the cost. Pyrotol will sell in the Lower Peninsula at $9.50 per 100 pounds, delivered in one place in carload lots, with a small additional charge where reshipping is necessary.

Orders for ten carloads are already placed or being assembled in the various counties of the Upper Peninsula, where George Amundson in charge of distribution for that section, says at least 200,000 pounds will be used this fall. This will make a total of three quarters of a million pounds of war salvage explosives, including Sodatol, disposed of in the Upper Peninsula during 1924.

Justice Is A Myth

If there ever was a parody on Justice in this country it certainly has been in the murder trial in Chicago where two young men are ostensibly being tried for butchery as cold blooded as was ever perpetuated anywhere, but really these degenerates are on trial for the dollars of their daddies.

A couple of rich nabobs of the city whose millions can grease judges and lawyers palms to the extent of defeating the ends of justice. Such is the comedy of life. We ridicule the red tape of Soviet Russia and the quibblings of Turkish court yet in our own land the operations of the law are far more uncertain. Just imagine, if you wil the predicament of a pair of penniless criminals under the same indictment. How long do you suppose it would require to railroad their cases to the gallows? Not over a week at the outside, but these pampered sons of the rich are different clay—they must be handled with silk gloves.

The whole case is a good example of what money will do to defeat law. It is quite possible that neither Loeb or Leopold will ever see the inside of prison but will be incarcerated in some asylum for a few years after which the soft hearted keepers will release them as has been done with Harry K. Thaw, another degenerate. The education and life of both men (Leopold and Loeb) have been ideal for such a crime. Pampered and spoiled with riches they have come up to regard the rights of others and the value of human life as so small as to be unworthy of consideration. All the piffle and pollyrot of the famous medical men who have been called to the stand to testifiy as to the state of the prisoners' liver, and the little slips they make in common conversation spells "dollars" and don't you forget it.

It makes a mighty good joke for the medics and a lucrative one for the lawyers and a Judge sitting on the bench who would be heartless enough to wind up such a saturnalia of flowing gold would be a moss back for sure. Why not present the carcasses of Leopold and Loeb to the doctors for experimental purposes and let the Docs keep them in the laboratory for clinical work.

"Oh, my Father!" he cried in a broken voice and with tears streaming down his cheeks. "Arnold has sold Ameriky an' all its folks an' gone down the river."

Washington knelt beside him and felt his bloody garments.

"The colonel is wounded," he said to his orderly. "Go for help."

The scout, weak from the loss of blood, tried to regain his feet but failed. He lay back and whispered:

"I guess the sap has all oozed out o' me but I had enough."

Washington was one of those who put him on a stretcher and carried him to the hospital.

When he was lying on his bed and his clothes were being removed, the commander in chief paid him this well deserved compliment as he held his hand:

"Colonel, when the war is won it will be only because I have had men like you to help me."

Soon Jack came to his side and then Margaret. General Washington asked the latter about Mrs. Arnold.

"My mother is doing what she can to comfort her," Margaret answered.

Solomon revived under stimulants and was able to tell them briefly of the dire struggle he had had.

"It were Slops that saved me," he whispered.

He fell into a deep and troubled sleep and when he awoke in the middle of the night he was not strong enough to lift his head. Then these faithful friends of his began to know that this big, brawny, redoubtable soldier was having his last fight. He seemed to be aware of it himself for he whispered to Jack:

"Take keer o' Mirandy an' the Little Cricket."

Late the next day he called for his Great Father. Feebly and brokenly he had managed to say:

"Jes' want—to—feel—his hand."

Margaret had sat beside him all day helping the nurse.

A dozen times Jack had left his work and run over for a look at Solomon. On one of these hurried visits the young man had learned of the wish of his friend. He went immediately to General Washington, who had just returned from a tour of the forts. The latter saw the look of sorrow and anxiety in the face of his officer.

"How is the colonel?" he asked.

"I think that he is near the end," Jack answered. "He has expressed a wish to feel your hand again."

"Let us go to him at once," said the other. "There has been no greater man in the army."

Together they went to the bedside of the faithful scout. The general took his hand. Margaret put her lips close to Solomon's ear and said:

"General Washington has come to see you."

Solomon opened his eyes and smiled. Then there was a beauty not of this world in his homely face. And that moment, holding the hand he had loved and served and trusted, the heroic soul of Solomon Binkus went out upon "the lonesome trail."

Jack, who had been kneeling at his side, kissed his white cheek.

"Oh, general, I knew and loved this man!" said the young officer as he arose.

"It will be well for our people to know what men like him have endured for them," said Washington.

"I shall have to learn how to live without him," said Jack. "It will be hard."

Margaret took his arm and they went out of the door and stood a moment looking off at the glowing sky about the western hills.

"Now you have me," she whispered.

He bent and kissed her.

"No man could have a better friend and fighting mate than you," he answered.

"'We spend our years as a tale that is told,'" Jack wrote from Philadelphia to his wife in Albany on the 30th of June, 1787: "Dear Margaret, we thought that the story was ended when Washington won. Five years have passed, as a watch in the night, and the most impressive details are just now falling out. You recall our curiosity about Henry Thornhill. When stopping at Kinderhook I learned that the only man of that name who had lived there had been lying in his grave these 20 years. He was one of the first dreamers about liberty. What think you of that? I, for one, cannot believe that the man I saw was an imposter. Was he an angel like those who visited the prophets? Who shall say? Naturally, I think often of the look of him and of his sudden disappearance in that Highland road. And, looking back at Thornhill, this thought comes to me: Who can tell how many angels he has met in the way of life all unaware of the high commission of his visitor?

"On my westward trip I found that the Indians who once dwelt in the Long House were scattered. Only a tattered remnant remains. Near old Fort Johnson I saw a squaw sitting in her blanket. Her face was wrinkled with age and hardship. Her eyes were nearly blind. She held in her withered hands the ragged, moth-eaten tail of a gray wolf. I asked her why she kept the shabby thing.

"'Because of the hand that gave it,' she answered in English. 'I shall take it with me to the Happy Hunting Grounds. When he sees it he will know me.'

"So quickly the beautiful Little White Birch had faded.

"At Mount Vernon, Washington was as dignified as ever but not so grave. He almost joked when he spoke of the sculptors and portrait painters who have been a great bother to him since the war ended.

"'Now no dray horse moves more readily to the thill than I to the painter's chair,' he said.

"When I arrived the family was going in to dinner and they waited until I could make myself ready to join them. The jocular Light Horse Harry Lee was there. His anecdotes delighted the great man. I had never seen G. W. in better humor. A singularly pleasant smile lighted his whole countenance. I can never forget the gentle note in his voice and his dignified bearing. It was the same whether he were addressing his guests or his family. The servants watched him closely. A look seemed to be enough to indicate his wishes. The faithful Billy was always at his side. I have never seen a sweeter atmosphere in any home. We sat an hour at the table after the family had retired from it. In speaking of his daily life he said:

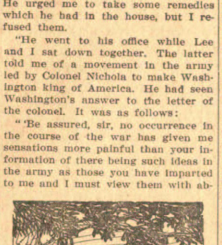
"'I ride around my farms until it is time to dress for dinner, when I rarely miss seeing strange faces, come, as they say, out of respect for me. Perhaps the word curiosity would better describe the cause of it. The usual time of sitting at table brings me to candle-light, when I try to answer my letters.'

"He had much to say on his favorite theme, viz.: the settling of the immense interior and bringing its trade to the Atlantic cities.

"I was coughing with a severe cold. He urged me to take some remedies which he had in the house, but I refused them.

"He went to his office while Lee and I sat down together. The latter told me of a movement in the army led by Colonel Nichola to make Washington king of America. He had seen Washington's answer to the letter of the colonel. It was as follows:

"'Be assured, sir, no occurrence in the course of the war has given me sensations more painful than your information of there being such ideas in the army as those you have imparted to me and I must view them with abhorrence and reprehend them with severity. I am much at a loss to conceive what part of my conduct could have given encouragement to an address which to me seems big with the greatest mischiefs which could befall my country.'



"NOW YOU HAVE ME," SHE WHISPERED.

"Is it not a sublime and wonderful thing, dear Margaret, that all our leaders, save one, have been men as incorruptible as Stephen and Peter and Paul?

"When I went to bed my cough became more troublesome. After it had gone on for half an hour or so my door was gently opened and I observed the glow of a candle. On drawing my bed curtains I saw, to my utter astonishment, Washington standing at my side with a bowl of hot tea in his hand. It embarrassed me to be thus waited on by a man of his greatness.

"We set out next morning for Philadelphia to attend the convention, Washington riding in his coach drawn by six horses, I riding the blaze-faced mare of destiny, still as sweet and strong as ever. A slow journey it was over the old road by Calvert's to Annapolis, Chestertown, and so on to the north.

"I found Franklin sitting under a tree in his dooryard, surrounded by his grandchildren. He looks very white and venerable now. His hair is a crown of glory.

"'Well, Jack, it has been no small part of my life work to get you happily married,' he began in his playful way. 'A celibate is like the odd half of a pair of scissors, fit only to scrape a trencher. How many babies have you?'

"'Three,' I answered.

"'It is not half enough,' said he. 'A patriotic American should have at least ten children. I must not forget to say to you what I say to every young man. Always treat your wife with respect. It will procure respect for you not only from her, but from all who observe it. Never use a slighting word.'

"My beloved, how little I need this advice you know, but I think that the old philosopher never made a wiser observation. I am convinced that civilization itself depends largely on the respect that men feel and show for women.

"I asked about his health.

"'I am weary and the night is falling and I shall soon lie down to sleep, but I know that I shall awake refreshed in the morning,' he said.

"He told me how, distressed by his infirmity, he came out of France in the queen's litter, carried by her magnificent mules. Of England he had only this to say:

"'She is doing wrong in discouraging emigration to America. Emigration multiplies a nation. She should be represented in the growth of the New World by men who have a voice in its government. By this fair means she could repossess it instead of leaving it to foreigners, of all nations, who may drown and stifle sympathy for the mother land. It is now a fact that Irish emigrants and their children are in possession of the government of Pennsylvania.'

"I must not fail to set down here in the hope that my sons may some time read it, what he said to me of the treason of Arnold.

"'Here is the vindication of poor Richard. Extravagance is not the way to self-satisfaction. The man who does not keep his feet in the old, honest way of thrift will some time sell himself, and then he will be ready to sell his friends or his country. By and by nothing is so dear to him as thirty pieces of silver.'

"I shall conclude my letter with a beautiful confession of faith by this master mind of the country. It was made on the motion for daily prayers in the convention now drafting a constitution for the states. I shall never forget the look of him as, standing on the lonely summit of his eighty years, he said to us:

"'In the beginning of our contest with Britain when we were sensible of danger, we had daily prayers in this room for Divine protection. Our prayers, sirs, were heard and they were graciously answered. All of us who were engaged in the struggle must have observed frequent instances of a directing Providence in our affairs. And have we forgotten that powerful friend? Or do we imagine that we no longer need His assistance? I have lived, sirs, a long time and the longer I live the more convincing proof I see of this truth that God governs in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without His notice is it probable that an empire can rise without His aid? We have been assured, sirs, that except the Lord build the house they labor in vain who build it. I firmly believe this and I also believe that without His concurring aid we shall succeed in this political structure no better than the builders of Babel; we shall be divided and confounded and we ourselves become a reproach and a byword down to future ages. And, what is worse, mankind may hereafter despair of establishing government by human wisdom and leave it to chance, war and conquest.'

"Dear Margaret, you and I who have been a part of the great story know full well that in these words of our noble friend is the conclusion of the whole matter."

[THE END]

Journalist in Church

A preacher, at the close of one of his sermons, said: "Let all in the house who are paying their debts stand up." Presently every man, woman and child, with one exception, rose to their feet.

The preacher seated them, and said: "Now, let every man not paying his debts stand up." The exception, a careworn, hungry-looking individual, clothed in last summer's suit, slowly assumed a perpendicular position.

"How is it, my friend," asked the minister, "that you are the only one not able to meet his obligations?"

"I run a newspaper," he answered meekly, "and the brethren here who stood up are my subscribers and—"

"Let us pray," exclaimed the minister.—Our Dumb Animals.

Lighthouses in Italy to Be War Memorials

While nearly every town and village in Europe has erected memorials of one kind or another in honor of the soldiers who fell in the World war, Italy enjoys the distinction of being the first of the nations to commemorate the heroism and sacrifice of life of their sailors by erecting lighthouses.

The funds for these appropriate monuments are being raised by a committee composed of the leading Italian admirals and officers of every rank representing the navy service, together with a picked number of army generals and statesmen, says the Washington Star. Thus far $600,000 has been subscribed, and by way of beginning three great lighthouses of the purest white marble, 80 to 100 feet high and Roman in style, are in the course of construction at the most conspicuous and useful points of the coast, dominating the Adriatic, the Tyrrhenian and the Ionian seas.

The very powerful lights will cast their rays through the bars of an ancient bronze "ara" or altar. It is intended to dot the whole coastline of the Italian peninsula, of Sicily and of Sardinia with memorial lighthouses of this kind.

Vanity Needed

Vanity isn't on the official list of virtues, yet unless a man has a good opinion of himself he will never amount to much.

Full Time

The majority of us would have to work twenty-four hours a day if we were to love our neighbors as they do themselves.

POULTRY

KEEP YOUNG MALES AND FEMALES APART

Unless the young males are of especially good breeding and show promise of exceptional merit, it is in the long run more profitable to sell them on the early market for fries than to hold them as breeders. The day of dollar and dollar-and-a-half cockerels for the farm flock is passing. There is no profit in hatching, rearing, holding for several months, possibly advertising, and selling at such prices. Let them go early, keeping only the best to make sure of one's own breeding stock and birds that are worthy a good price as breeders.

Separate these from the pullets. They do better when not running after the pullets, and the pullets make a quicker growth when separated.

Lack of shade will mar the plumage of all growing stock. The early fall fairs show up sunburned young stock which would have a better chance of winning if the owner had done his part. "A good bird in the hands of a poor breeder," an observer at a poultry show said of a sunburned cock. Little details add greatly to the chances of winning. We have heard breeders complain of prizes going to the back-yard poultry keeper, says the Indiana Farmer and Guide. These are without reason. The object of showing is to exhibit the chickens at their best—to show how perfect they may become. The handiwork of the back-yard poultryman is bound to show in the grooming, but the farmer has the advantage of range, live meat in the shape of bugs and worms, and variety of seeds, which gives him the advantage if he does not scorn the details such as separating the sexes, giving shade and more than stanchion room to his flock.

Feeding Young Turkeys During First Few Days

In order to prevent the heavy losses which occur among young turkeys, greater care is necessary, especially during the first four weeks. Poults should not be fed for 48 to 60 hours, then they should be given some fine grit or finely-chopped egg shell. Care should be exercised that an ample supply of sour milk, milk curd, or cottage cheese is available.

For feeding the first few days much the same feeds and methods as are used for baby chicks may be followed, the only difference being that in feeding little turkeys even greater care should be exercised not to overfeed. Oatmeal, hard-boiled eggs, crumbled shell and all, and johnny cake have been found satisfactory. The poults may be gradually changed to a good-grade chick scratch, sifted finely-cracked corn, cracked wheat and pinhead oats, with a mash mixture such as is used for little chicks.

Infertile Eggs Favored for Shipping to Market

Thousands of dollars' worth of eggs are needlessly lost during hot weather. It is the farmer and poultryman who bear the cost of spoiled eggs. It is not unusual for cases of eggs to contain a few hatched chicks when they reach the produce house, and for other eggs to be well on the way toward hatching.

Incubators and broody hens are not necessary to start the process of incubation. Fertile eggs will begin to develop chicks at a temperature of 70 degrees Fahrenheit.

The way to do away with fertility in eggs is to remove all males from the flock for two or three weeks previous to shipping eggs. An infertile egg will not hatch and will keep much longer than a fertile one.

Poultry Hints

Swat the males and produce infertile eggs.

* * *

Sour skim milk is one of the best feeds for small chicks.

* * *

Watch for lice and mites and get rid of them as early as possible.

* * *

Inbreeding has ruined many a flock or family of turkeys. Use strong, unrelated toms every year.

* * *

Don't crowd too many poults in a coop or in a brooder—and keep them warm and dry the first few weeks. Drafts and dampness cause most losses among young turkeys.

* * *

Ground that the adult fowls and early chicks have been running over gets foul and sour. It is of special importance that young stock as well as the old birds be gotten onto new ground or on renovated ground from time to time.

* * *

Eggs contain a large proportion of water. If you want your hens to lay heavily, see that they have all the water they can drink.

* * *

It is as easy to overfeed fowls as it is to underfeed them. The happy medium can be learned only by experience and close observation.

* * *

The best way to kill off lice is to prevent them from getting a start. This is much easier than it is to give them a chance and then fight them afterward.

* * *

There is mighty little money in fowls that are always kept hungry, but there is also a difference between well-fed and overfed hens.

* * *

The hen has not yet been invented that can make eggs without shell material to work on. Oyster shell or limestone will supply the need.

* * *

Parents of low vitality mean chicks of low vitality, a larger number of infertile eggs, chicks dead in the shell, weak and crippled chicks, and chicks that die soon after they are hatched.

Seems Like Good Idea

A western inventor has patented a system of building construction carried out on the principle of a thermos bottle. A building of any kind, bungalow, large house or commercial structure, has double walls with a vacuum between. The inventor claims that 50 per cent of the usual heating costs can be saved by his idea. The air space keeps the interior of the building warm in winter, cool in summer, damp proof and sound proof. Also, cheaper construction cost and upkeep are claimed.

Manure, Money— and Concrete

Every time you pitch manure out into the open barnyard, you throw away money. Your yearly loss amounts to about $13 per cow. That's no small sum when you come to figure it up.

You can save this money year after year by building a Concrete Manure Pit.

The Concrete Pit does not allow any of the valuable fertilizing elements to escape. And remember that two-fifths of the nitrogen in the manure is in the liquid.

A Concrete Manure Pit quickly pays for itself in the money it saves. And it keeps on earning dividends indefinitely. You can easily build one yourself.

Richards Family Reunion

The Richards held their annual family reunion at the home of Norris Richards of Moscow August 9th with 58 people present, including Mr. and Mrs. Mat Havens of North Adams who were guests.

The constituency of this Society consists of eighty people, the progeny of of Henry and Mary Richards who were among the early pioneers to Southern Michigan. The oldest members are John Spencer aged 91 years, of Chicago and Ellen Skinner, 86, of Hanover the newest arrival is Bruce Eslow Bennett of Belleville.

The officers for the following year are Fred Masker, president; Maud Masker, secretary. It was voted to hold the next meeting at Orrin Stone's in Hillsdale.

While driving near Adrian on M-50 on Sunday at nine o'clock in the evening Arthur J. Mumford and wife of Hillsdale and their guests collided with a car that had stopped by the roadside. The Mumford car turned bottom side up but none of the occupants were much hurt. Both machines were considerably bashed up.

Jack Haskell who lives west of North Adams has again figured in another serious auto mishap on Maumee street, Jonesville on Monday evening when his Ford coupe turned completely over end wise whoppem side knockabus. As usual his lucky star was with him and he and his girl crawled out of the splinters unhurt. The "flivver' was badly mussed. He will have to get a new car before he can repeat the performance. This, we believe, is his third or fourth accident this summer and the season is not yet half over.

One of the best authorities in the country on political subjects, declares that LaFollette had an excellent chance of winning the Republican nomination for president back in 1912 and big business was well aware of LaFollette's strength and at once sought for an opportunity to destroy his influence. The opportunity soon came along. LaFollette made a speech in an eastern city and several newspaper men at a conference, composed an article stating that the speaker was upon the verge of breakdown from over work; that it was LaFollette's intention to retire from politics; La Follette's mind seemed to be losing its vitality. Nearly all of the associated Press papers in the country published these false reports and of course, the Wisconsin senators fate was sealed. Here, we have a fine example of what Big business, big newspapers and big politics combined can accomplish in defeating the forces of righteousness.

Candidate for Congress

Republican Primaries September 9th, 1924, Respectfully asks your Support

This is the man who saved the State of Michigan $30,000 a year by defeating the plan to establish a salaried prison board of Control. He believes there are too many office holders now, and too much legislation.

He invites your investigation as to his character, his record and his qualifications.

Automobile Casualties on Sunday

The list of auto accidents keeps growing, especially on Sundays when large numbers of people are burning the grit.

Walter Losey of Rives Junction over in Jackson county was ambling along in his lil' ol' Ford just off M-14 near Pleasant Lake about ten a. m. when he suddenly shot out on the main trunk line and collided with Art Hoffman's new Hudson coach which was being driven at 30 miles per hour. The Ford drove its crank through the rear tire of the Coach, rebounding from the impact and sustaining small damages.

The Hoffman coach was bunted off the highway into the ditch that at this point is lined with large boulders. In the mix-up the coach turned over three times, landing on its wheels with motor running, but badly wrecked. Mrs. Hoffman was thrown through the side window and badly cut with glass about the limbs and her lip cut open to the jaw bone, shoes and stockings torn off and one foot severely wrenched. She also received a severe blow on tho skull, while Arthur was not seriously hurt. She was taken to the Foote hospital at Jackson and is expected to be out in a few days. The coach had recently been insured but Losey carried no insurance.

Two men riding in a car on M-14 between Lansing and Jackson came to grief on Sunday when their machine struck a telephone pole and snapped if off in two places. Both men were killed while a woman and her babe riding on the back seat escaped unhurt by slipping to the bottom of the machine. It is claimed liquor was responsible for the accident and a bottle of moonshine was found in the wreckage. It seems the driver had been having trouble with the machine and when he did get going, was so insensed that he put the speed up to 60 miles per hour.

Mrs. Lew Meeks and daughter Margaret, returned Tuesday from a week's visit with Edwin Morehouse and family at Battle Creek. She reports that Edwin is erecting a new residence in the city.

"Just as much" is not "Just as good"

Over one-third of all the tobacco chewers in the United States have proved that.

The demand for BEECH-NUT Chewing Tobacco alone is more than 250 million packages in a single year.

That's because we didn't let tobacco growers, labor, manufacturing costs, State, Federal and revenue taxes collect their increases from the quality or the weight.

BEECH-NUT Chewing Tobacco is the same in 1924 as in 1915. Still the most of the best for 10c—still the best chew at any price—still the favorite everywhere.

To the Voters of North Adams

The Southern Michigan Light and Power Company has presented a plan to the Village Council whereby the former will purchase the electric distribution system from the village and handle the lighting and power business direct. This plan is prompted by the belief that we can give the village of North Adams a broader and better service than they are now receiving.

Resolutions passed at a special Council meeting Tuesday night appear elsewhere in this week's paper, but the time was so short before the paper went to press that we did not have an opportunity to get up an article explaining the full text of the proposition. We will, however, have an article ready for next week's paper and hope to explain the proposition we are making this village so that it is perfectly clear to everyone.

We hope you will not pass judgment on the proposition until all the principles and details are fully explained. Respectfully,

Southern Michigan Light and Power Company.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Dawes Plan Soon to Be in Operation—Vice Presidential Nominees Notified.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

UNLESS the extreme nationalists and monarchists of Germany and France have their way—and they probably will not—the Dawes plan for the regeneration of Germany and the general recovery of the world's prosperity will soon be in operation. The agreement signed by the delegates to the London conference must be confirmed by the parliaments of France and Germany, as it already has been approved by the cabinets of those countries. There is little danger of its rejection by the French, and Chancellor Marx has warned the German reichstag that if it does not give its approval it will be dissolved and an election called.

The opposition in Germany complains that the Germans "remain at the mercy of the French militarists and are the losers in the compromise." This is because it was agreed that the evacuation of the Ruhr need not be completed until one year from now and because of the fear that France will find some excuse for remaining in the occupied territory even longer. The French objectors to the agreement, on the other hand, assert that France has obtained many promises in London, but nothing tangible, while Germany has obtained visible, tangible advantages in the liberation of the Ruhr within a year and the immediate evacuation of some important centers in the Rhineland.

Premier Herriot, however, explains that the Dawes plan does not eliminate sanctions in case of bad faith, and declares: "We have re-established the interallied front in the event of Germany's failing to keep her engagements." As an earnest of his own good faith, M. Herriot withdrew all French troops from two Baden towns within two days after the signing of the pact.

In connection with the results of the London conference a situation has arisen in England that is unprecedented. Chancellor of the Exchequer Snowden, without resigning from the cabinet, has come out with a severe criticism of the work of the conference. He warns British traders and manufacturers of the danger to them in the proposed Franco-German commercial treaty, and also attacks the policy of permitting the French to remain another year in the Ruhr. Snowden's attack angered the French and served to consolidate public opinion in favor of Herriot's course, bringing the people to an understanding of the great advantages they would gain by a commercial and industrial alliance with Germany.

Americans will have a vast deal to do in the operation of the Dawes scheme. Citizens of this country have been or will be named to fill the following important positions: Director of the new gold bank of Germany; agent general for reparations; permanent voting member of the reparations commission for the declaration of Germany's possible future defaults; member of a transfer committee, of which the agent general is president; unofficial observer on the reparations commission, representing Washington; arbiters for the questions of transfer of currencies and any mechanical troubles in the operation of the Dawes plan.

IT IS inevitable that the adoption of the Dawes plan should have its effects on the Presidential campaign. Both Republicans and Democrats profess to find in the results of the London conference support for their contentions concerning America's participation in foreign affairs. The view of the former may be expressed concisely and rather mildly in the words of President Coolidge:

"This is the most important result accomplished since the armistice. It demonstrates the wisdom of the American position and the effectiveness of the American method of co-operating. The end of the war has come at last and the beginning of an honorable and, we hope, a lasting peace is at hand."

John W. Davis, Democratic nominee for the Presidency, declared that the article in the plan providing for arbitration by the League of Nations in case of dispute as to the index figure of German wealth was but another evidence of the growing indispensibility of the league.

LAST week was the week of the vice presidential candidates. Both Governor Bryan and General Dawes were formally notified of their nomination, the Democrats getting in first as in the case of the heads of the tickets. Bryan in his acceptance speech at Lincoln, Neb., praised his party's platform as "broad, strong and progressive enough to justify the support of those who believe in equality before the law." He touched on many questions but paid especial attention to agriculture, accusing the Republican party of having changed the farmers' condition from prosperity to adversity. He promised the farmer a reduction of tariff rates to enable him "to buy in a competitive market at home and remove the restrictions which have injuriously affected the foreign market in which he sells his surplus products."

Without specifically mentioning Defense day, he took a whack at it by deploring war propaganda, mobilization, demonstrations of civilian and industrial resources as a "great economic waste, misleading and unnecessarily inflammatory."

GENERAL DAWES, in the presence of an immense throng at his home in Evanston, Ill., declared that this campaign is a campaign of domestic issues, and after discussing the League of Nations and the world court he entered on a fiery discussion of what he declared to be the most important of the domestic questions—"the formidable attack which has been launched on the fundamental principles of our Constitution." This, of course, meant LaFollette, his candidacy and his aims, and the speaker did not mince words in denouncing the Wisconsin senator.

"Robert M. LaFollette," he said, "leading the army of extreme radicals, has a platform demanding public ownership of railroads and attacking our courts which are a fundamental and constitutional safeguard of American liberties.

"Our nation is asked to leave important constitutional moorings to embark again into those contests through which it has fought up to the establishment of good government. Through the War of the Revolution, through the Civil war and the World war, our people have struggled to maintain our constitutional principles.

"They are asked to follow behind an aggressive personality, who has massed behind him a heterogeneous collection of those opposing the existing order of things, the greatest section of which, the Socialists, fly the red flag, and into what? Into confusion and conflict of ideas and into the reopening of war upon those same fundamental principles of liberty and the inalienable rights of man which are giving in this country, safety and opportunity to the humblest, and to establish which the blood of our forefathers was shed. This is the predominant issue in this campaign."

From the LaFollette-Wheeler headquarters in Chicago came this sole comment:

"Mr. Dawes in his acceptance speech violates the law which prohibits the use of the flag for advertising purposes. He maintains his standing as a profiteer in patriotism. The law will prevent printing pictures of Coolidge and Dawes on the American flag as a campaign banner, but they might appropriately raise a black flag bearing a four-leaf clover and an oil-can rampant."

Governor Bryan said: "The more Mr. Dawes speaks, the happier the Democrats will be. He is exhibit A of what reactionary policies mean."

SENATOR JONES of New Mexico, chairman of the Democratic senatorial campaign committee, does not see how his party can lose in November. He calls attention to the fact that 27 of the states have Democratic governors, and that seven other states elected Democratic senators in 1922. These states have 346 votes in the electoral college and only 266 votes are necessary to a choice. All of which does not seem to disturb the confidence of the Republican managers. This confidence was reinforced last week when a large number of prominent labor leaders conferred with National Chairman Butler in Chicago and assured him that a considerable number of the men in their unions would support the Republican ticket, refusing to be delivered to the LaFollette-Wheeler candidacy.

HAVING waited in vain for the harbor at Angmagsalik, Greenland, to be clear of ice, the American globe-encircling aviators decided last week to fly from Reykjavik, Iceland, to Fredericksdal, near Cape Farewell on the southern tip of Greenland. They made one false start, both planes being broken, and then on Thursday they made the jump of about 825 miles, the longest of their tour. With them was Lieutenant Locatelli, the Italian, who had flown alone from Pisa and caught up with them on Iceland. The Americans landed all right, but at this writing the Italian is missing.

Last week the ZR-3, the huge Zeppelin which Germany has been building for the United States, was completed and its 14 gas chambers filled with hydrogen gas for the trial trips. It is believed the airship will be ready for the flight across the Atlantic about the middle of September, but this may be delayed until October 5.

SERIOUS damage to crops and property has resulted from the unusually heavy rains that have fallen in the Mississippi river valley. Northern Illinois, southern and western Wisconsin and parts of Iowa suffered the most. The corn in some sections was nearly ruined. Roads and bridges were washed away, motor camps were wrecked and wind and lightning worked havoc.

TELESCOPES all over the world are turned just now on Mars, which is nearer the earth than he has been since 1804 or will be again for many years. The distance between the planets Saturday night was only 34,500,000 miles. Astronomers hoped to gain further knowledge concerning the nature of the so-called canals, and a few even had in mind the possibility of communicating with the red planet by radio.

AN ODD situation has arisen in Peking from the efforts of Karakhan, the new Russian ambassador to China, to recover possession of the Russian legation property there. According to the protocol of 1901, all foreign legation compound properties in Peking are under control of the diplomatic corps members. As acting dean, the American minister refused to turn the Russian legation over to the soviet ambassador except on certain conditions and then only with the understanding that such action did not constitute recognition of the soviet by the United States. Karakhan has refused to accept the conditions, and the various governments concerned are wondering what to do next.

LE BARON B. COLT, Republican, United States senator from Rhode Island, died on Monday at the age of seventy-eight years. His term would have expired next March and he was a candidate for re-election. The Democrats believe they now have an even chance to gain this senate seat.

Another who passed away last week was Miss Lucy Page Gaston of Chicago who for many years had devoted herself to the crusade against cigarettes. Before her death she named G. Henri DeRonche as her successor in that work.

FIERCE fighting has been going on in Trans-Jordania between the government troops and the Wahabis, who do not recognize the rule of Emir Abdullah, second son of King Hussein of the Hedjaz. The Wahabis seized several towns, including Tarash, but the government forces in a counter-attack drove them out, killed 300 and took many prisoners.

"Reds" Jubilant Over Treaty With Britain

Moscow.—The negotiation of a treaty between Soviet Russia and the British government at the recent conference in London was hailed as a triumph for the Red diplomacy, at a plenary meeting of the Moscow Soviet.

Christian Rakovsky, who headed the London delegation, and Foreign Minister Tchitcherin spoke at the meeting. M. Rakovsky, after recapitulating the progress of the negotiations and the terms of the agreement, said: "The treaty was not signed without scratches, as its birth was most complicated."

Its terms, he pointed out, did not infringe the principles of the Soviet laws regarding nationalization and the annulment of debts, as the concessions made were only of a practical character. Only claims which the government considered practical or acknowledged to be necessary in compensation to social justice would be paid.

Foreign Minister Tchitcherin said the treaty would serve as a basis to further relationships with other countries, would help consolidate the international situation of Russia, affirming at the same time the principles of the Bolshevik revolution. He attached great importance to the fact that a capitalistic country had agreed to guarantee a loan to Russia, which should be considered as backing up the credit of the Socialist federation.

PROPER BALANCE OF RATIONS IN SUMMER

Thousands of hens are practically forced to stop laying because of the fact that many farmers stop feeding mash and increase the grain feed of their flocks. To get the most eggs from the flock, it is just as necessary that the hens have dry mash in the summer as it is in the winter.

Laying hens should be forced to eat more dry mash than they do grain in summer. A good way to do this is to give the hens a supply of mash and keep them penned up until ten o'clock in the morning without any grain. If the hens cannot be confined they can still be forced to eat enough mash, if grain is fed only at night and the dry mash kept before them at all times in self-feeders or hoppers.

One of the main reasons for keeping up the feeding of mash during the summer is to insure the best results when the flock is culled in the fall. All flocks should be culled sometime between the middle of July and the first of September, but if the hens are not properly fed during the summer they will all stop laying, thereby making it impossible to tell the good layers from the poor ones at culling time.

A good dry mash can be made from 150 pounds of bran, 150 pounds of shorts, 100 pounds of cornmeal and 100 pounds of tankage containing at least 60 per cent protein. Some grain should be fed along with this mash. Corn alone will do, but if oats or wheat are available it is best to add 30 pounds of one of these grains to every 70 pounds of corn, to give variety in the ration. Oyster shells or ground limestone should be before the hens at all times, as they need this material in making the egg shell.

If as much milk as one gallon for every 30 hens is available, the dry mash can be omitted from the feed of the hens and only the grain and the milk fed.

Doctoring of Chickens Not to Be Recommended

The doctoring of poultry is not to be recommended except in case of a few diseases such as chicken pox, colds and cases of intestinal worms. There are two very good reasons for this belief: First, the unit of production of the individual bird is so small on the commercial plant that if a man's time is worth anything it is too valuable to spend treating sick chickens individually unless they are show specimens of great individual value. Second, the cured chicken is always a menace to the health of the flock, because its identity is likely to be overlooked or forgotten, and it goes into the breeding pen and may perpetuate through the offspring that constitutional weakness that was one of the primary causes of its being ill. The opinion of practically all poultrymen who rear large numbers of fowls is that in a large proportion of cases of disease the birds ought to be killed. The only treatment recommended for the poultryman is to give treatment when it can be applied to a flock conveniently and with reasonable expectation of beneficial results. Treat individuals only when the treatment is simple, easy and needs to be administered but a very few times.—Storrs (Conn.) Egg Laying Contest.

Egg-Eating Habit Quite Difficult to Overcome

The egg-eating habit is one easily acquired but very difficult to break, once it becomes firmly established. Often the hatchet is the best remedy. However, if one takes certain measures, it may often be stopped without resorting to the extreme penalty.

One should arrange all nests so that they will be quite dark by placing under dropping boards or by having entrance from back of nest. Catch birds that show egg stains about head and file or clip front of bill till quite blunt.

Feed birds plenty of oyster shell or lime and include some animal feed like milk, meat scrap, or tankage in the ration. A craving for substances in meat often leads to the habit.

The hens should be kept busy and interested by providing deep litter to scratch in. Let birds run out of doors whenever weather conditions permit.

Finish Broiler Cockerels

Finish the broiler cockerels by milk feeding, ten days or two weeks. While carrying on this feeding, take time to look up the best market outlet. This is best done by getting in touch with several poultry buyers in near-by cities. Tell them just what you have, and if you fit the broilers for market you can, as a rule, get top quotations.

Sunshine Hurts Chicks

Too much hot sunshine is not good for baby chicks and causes many inexplicable losses among birds that are apparently perfectly healthy in every way and ought to thrive but do not. For the first two or three days the little fellows should be sheltered from the sun entirely and given conditions of semi-shade thereafter. They should at all times have cool shade that they can run to whenever they want it. This, of course, applies to all classes of chickens.

Calcium Carbonate Helps

The importance of some form of calcium carbonate in the ration of a laying hen is emphasized in a bulletin just issued by the Kentucky experiment station. It states that a hen producing 300 eggs per year requires about three pounds of calcium carbonate or pure limestone. If this amount is not available the egg production will be curtailed. It is pointed out that the calcium in rock phosphate cannot be used for the production of eggshells.

AFRAID SHE COULD NOT LIVE

Operation Advised, But Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made It Unnecessary

Glasgow, Kentucky. — "I was rundown, nervous, with no appetite. My side had given me trouble for five or six years. At times it was all I could do to live, and the doctor said I couldn't live but a short time longer without an operation. That was two years ago. My sister-in-law recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She had never used it herself, but she said one of her neighbors suffered just like I did, and it cured her. After I had taken four bottles the pain left my side. I had a fine appetite to eat anything that was put before me, and I began to do all my work and my washing, something I hadn't done for years. I am a dressmaker, and this last fall I began suffering with my side again, so I began taking the Vegetable Compound again. I am on my fourth bottle, which makes eight in all I have taken. I feel so much better when I take it and everybody tells me I look better. My appetite improves and I feel stronger in every way. I am a very nervous woman and it seems to help my nerves so much."—Mrs. MAGGIE WALLER, Glasgow, Ky.

14K WHITE GOLD FILLED

KATHLEEN NORRIS

Not so many years ago, in San Francisco, a young woman had achieved considerable local success as a writer. She decided to assault the literary citadels of the East. It wasn't so much an assault as a surprise; for after one or two novels had appeared around Boston and New York, the established writers woke up one morning to find that a new member had joined the cult.

The acclaim of such an authority as William Dean Howells and of several other well-known novelists and literary editors made easier the success of Kathleen Norris. It was not long until her short stories were sought by the Atlantic Monthly and various other important magazines.

Such novels as "Sisters," "Harriet and the Piper," "Martie, the Unconquered" and "Josselyn's Wife" have given her a front-rank position. Read "Josselyn's Wife" as a serial in this paper and you will agree with the popular verdict as to her ability.

There are really two Josselyn's wives in Mrs. Norris' fascinating novel. One is the handsome young wife of the elder Josselyn; the other his son's wife. Representative Willaws is Commended

Arthur B. Williams of Battle Creek, in writing under recent date, says he received a letter of congratulation from Hon. Arthur Capper, Senator from Kansas, who is the recognized farm leader in the United States Senate, and as our paper is read by the farming population quite generally, we publish Senator Capper's letter to Representative Williams in full. The bill introduced by Representative Williams is designed to help the farmers to obtain a fair price for their produce and to assist in marketing the same: In the Senate the bill will be known as the Williams-Capper bill:

United States Senate Committee on Claims
Topeka, Kansas, Aug. 21, 24

"Hon. Arthur B. Williams,
Battle Creek, Michigan

My Dear Congressman:—

I am writing, though somewhat tardily, to tell you how much I appreciate the fine work you did in the last Congress in behalf of agriculture. It is true we did not accomplish as much as desired, however, considerable agricultural legislative relief was secured.

You have taken a great interest in the agricultural program at Washington, and I am sure the farmers, not only of your district but the entire middle west, appreciate this.

Co-operation is one of the essential factors of success, and just as we have had to work together in Congress for agricultural relief, so it is necessary for the farmers to join hands and pull together. I want to especially commend you for the constructive work you did for agriculture in helping to draft the Williams-Capper Co-operative marketing bill. I am extremely desirous of securing its enactment at the December session, and thus further the co-operative idea as much as possible.

With every good wish for your success at the comidg primary and general election. I am

Cordially yours
Arthur Capper"

The foregoing letter speaks for itself and shows the high appreciation in which the legislative work of preparing farmer's bills is held by Senator Capper.

Hillsdale Band Takes Prize

The City Band of Hillsdale again won honors at the Southwestern Michigan Band Tournament, held at Kalamazoo on August 23rd. of this year. The competition was much keener than last year and the bands attending were all good bands some of the state's finest. But the City Band of Hillsdale won third money; and ran a professional Factory Band strong competition for second.

The Bronson Band, another well known band in this vicinity took Fifth place.

This speaks particularly well for the Hillsdale Band since it has been organized but three years, whereas the Bronson Band has been playing for fifteen years or more.

First Prize went to the Round Oak Stove Company's Band of Dowagiac, Second to Clark Manufacturing Company's Band from Niles and Buchanan, Third place to Hillsdale, Fourth to Plainwell, and Fifth to Bronson.

The judges are particularly fair and show no partiality. So one can get a fair idea of the musical standing of these five Bands by merely observing their standing when in Tournament. Other noteworthy Bands in attendance were: Hastings City Band, Paw Paw Band, Moline Band and Fenville Band.

Vegetable Growers Have Good Meeting

Nearly 150 vegetable market gardeners, many with their families took part in the program of the "Market Gardeners Field Day" on August 20 at M. A. C., which was staged under the direction of the horticultural department of the College.

Although this meeting was the first held at the state agricultural college solely in the interest of the vegetable gardeners, it proved sufficiently popular and successful to warrant continuance as an annual occasion, according to George Starr of the horticultural department, who was in charge of the arrangements for the meeting.

The visitors who came from all parts of the state were outspoken in their approval of the work of M. A. C. along market gardening lines, an inspection and explanation of which occupied the forenoon of the day.

The speaking program was held in the horticultural building Prof. V. R. Gardener, head of the M A. C. horticultural department, discussed the growing of small fruits, while J. W. Christ explained the experimental work being carried on in the college greenhouses.

Completion of the new horticultural building and the four new greenhouses under construction will add to the facilities of M. A. C. along horticultural lines, and it is expected that in future years the market gardeners meeting will rank with the most important held at the state college.

State Dairymen Hold Successful Meeting

The most noteworthy and unusual milking contest ever staged in the state and a program of talks by three outstanding dairy leaders of the country, together with an inspection of the experimental work being carried on with dairy cattle at the M. A. C., combined to make the 1924 "Michigan Dairy Day" which was held here Friday August 22, one of the most important agricultural gatherings in the state for this year.

The holding of a joint meeting by the members of the Michigan Milk Producers Association, representing 20,000 dairymen, and of the Michigan Allied Dairy Association, brought representatives of all the dairy interests in the state to the gathering.

A picnic lunch followed the inspection trip in the morning, during which members of the M. A. C. dairy department discussed methods and practices which have been proved most successful while exhibiting the animals used in the experimental work.

The milking contest between President N. P. Hull of the Michigan Milk Producers Association and President M. L. Noon of the Michigan State Farm Bureau, was terminated in a tie, according to the verdict of the judges. Several happenings such as the more or less accidental use of dry cows which it was found necessary to replace, the manicuring to which the judge on "sanitation" subjected one of the contestants, and the donning of the bright rubber caps and long white aprons prescribed as appropriate uniforms, added to the enjoyment of the spectators. A similar contest will be staged at next summer's meeting to break the tie, it was announced.

A. J. Glover, editor of Hoard's Dairyman and John D. Miller of Susquehanna, Penna., president of the National Milk Producers Federation, were the speakers from outside the state on the afternoon program. Prof. O. E. Reed, head of the M. A. C. dairy department, represented the College and the Michigan dairy interests.

BANKERS DIRECT WAR ON CROOKS

Rising Crime Wave and Attacks on Banks Called Forth Increased Measures of Defense.

Criminal activities against banks have reached unprecedented proportions in recent months, according to a report made to the American Bankers Association by its Protective Committee, which directs the work of the Association aimed to combat criminal operations against banks.

"Sharp increases in crime perpetrated against banks definitely prove that instead of being broken the crime wave has risen to heights heretofore unknown to the banking fraternity," the report said. "Strangers continue to trick or otherwise inveigle unsuspecting banks into making generous contributions to their cause—a terrific toll which defies the imagination. Bank burglars and hold-up men have apparently redoubled their activities during the last six months. The number of criminals plying their trade in this field has grown to such proportions that there is now a fair sized army comprising this more desperate type of criminal, specializing against banks."

"Don't cash checks for strangers," is the warning emphasized by the Committee in view of the situation. It adds:

"We are gratified to report favorable results in a good proportion of cases investigated, which are due to the nation-wide activities of our detective agents through their staff of specialists in bank crimes. In Montana two fearless, well organized bands of professional yeggmen attacked more than a score of banks with such reckless abandon that the situation seemed beyond control. Realizing that conditions demanded prompt and drastic treatment, a trained crew of operatives were delegated to conduct a special investigation throughout the state. Nineteen men and two women were arrested. Of these four already are serving sentences, three are on trial, four are awaiting trial and the rest were freed for lack of evidence.

"A similar round-up was carried out in Oklahoma. Conditions in other states similarly bad were investigated and with the co-operation of local, state and federal authorities and the co-ordinated activities of members the percentage of arrests and convictions has materially increased."

The report pointed out that figures covering bank burglaries over a period of thirty years showed that 1,609 banks, members of the Association and entitled to its protective services, have been attacked, suffering losses aggregating $1,196,000, while non-members to the number of 2,357 were burglarized and suffered $4,250,000 in losses. The point was also brought out that there are only half as many non-members as members, so that these losses among them represent an excessively high rate as compared with members.

Aid Diversified Farming

A state bank of Granville, North Dakota, that is encouraging diversified farming among its farmer patrons, has purchased some purebred sires for the benefit of its customers. The bank realizes the necessity of good sires for the dairy herd, and has set aside a certain amount of money to be used in having a man look up animals and ship them to Granville.

TRAILS BANDIT AND FINALLY GETS HIM

Detective Waterman of the criminal investigation bureau of the Michigan State Police needed all of his persistence in trailing Carl Tague from town to town but he finally landed him and now Tague is in the hands of the law.

A restaurant in Lansing was held up February 28. The bandit escaped but a Lansing officer saw a man acting suspiciously near the railroad station and remembered his appearance.

Starting with only a slight clue, Waterman traced the crime to Tague, who had gone from Lansing to Toledo. The detective followed his man to Toledo, then to Columbus, to New Lexington, to McIuny, to Kirksville, to Zanesville and finally, with the assistance of an Ohio sheriff, arrested him at Roseville.

DIVERSIFIED FARMING VS. ONE CROP GAMBLING

Agricultural Director of the American Bankers Association Tells of Efforts to Solve Farmers' Problems.

One of the leading problems that is confronting many of our states is that of diversified farming, says D. H. Otis, Agricultural Director of the American Bankers' Association.

"During the past year the Agricultural Commission of the association has arranged for conferences in eight of the twelve Federal Reserve districts," he says. "At these conferences we have tried to get in touch with the agricultural needs of the respective regions and advise with the bankers and others interested as to what the banks might do to help in their solution. A resolution adopted in the Fifth District serves as an example of what is needed in many sections:

"'Encouragement of a proper system of diversified farming in which farmers will grow as far as practical all the food and feed crops necessary for feeding the family and livestock of the farm, and to keep on the farms the requisite kinds and amounts of livestock best to meet the economic needs of farming in this district.'

"The conference in the Ninth District emphasized strongly the need of greater diversification. The farmer who raises nothing but wheat is unwise, even foolish. He is one of the worst kinds of gamblers, one who gambles on the weather, on insects, on drought, and various other things that affect the quality of the product. The farmer who raises wheat and along with it the other crops and keeps a reasonable amount of livestock has something to fall back on when wheat is plentiful and cheap. He is not putting all of his eggs in one basket.

Diversification for Contentment

"In many of the states the first step in diversified farming is to get the farmer to raise sufficient livestock to feed his own family. He needs to get a cow, sow and a couple of dozen chickens so that his own needs can be supplied without going into debt at the store. Livestock used to furnish food for the family will frequently consume large amounts of feed that would otherwise go to waste. Livestock enables the family to set a better table and live under more healthful conditions. More work is furnished to the family, making possible larger family income. If the farm family is producing enough to feed itself, there will be much more contentment and much less idle time in which to criticize the government.

"The Agricultural Commission is doing all in its power to encourage a sane system of diversified farming. The subject is being discussed at various conferences, articles and editorials are being published for the purpose of acquainting bankers with the importance of this work.

Bankers Are Assisting

"It is encouraging at these conferences to find that the bankers are incorporating the subject of diversified farming in their program and laying plans in every way possible to carry it out. To this end we have records of a number of banks who are putting up money to their farmers to purchase livestock. They are encouraging boys and girls to go into club work.

"For the coming year we hope to carry on this work in greater detail and as far as possible hold conferences with the officers and members of the agricultural committee in each of the respective states at the Agricultural College. We believe that in co-ordinating this work with the college, we will reap the benefit of team effort. We are pleased with the hearty response we are receiving from the various colleges of agriculture and we believe that the opportunity is great for influencing various communities in better types of farming and in improved methods of business management."

Banker-Farmer Notes

Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, banks and Chamber of Commerce at the beginning of 1923 mapped out a vigorous program for the promotion of agriculture in the county. Throughout the year they assisted in keeping the farm organizations functioning and distributed to them agricultural bulletins and information of interest. They held rural community meetings and entertainments, exhibits of farm and home products, and advertised home products. One specific result was to induce a milk receiving station to locate in the vicinity, and during the first month $20,000 was paid the farmers for their milk. This marked the turning point in the farmer's business.

California bankers created an emergency fund of $1,000,000 at a meeting recently in San Francisco to combat the foot-and-mouth disease which has broken out in that State. The Federal and State governments each pay one-half of the appraised value of the animals slaughtered, and the State government was not prepared to meet this unexpected expense. The bankers agreed to supply the funds needed as a loan to the State government.

The Vermont Bankers Association [illegible]ed $1,000 to winning club members in 1923. Part of the funds was used for prizes for project leaders, but between five and six hundred dollars was awarded to outstanding boys and girls winning in the various projects.

Education Pays in Leadership, Influence and Honors

An investigation published by the United States Bureau of Education shows that of all the people in the United States who have performed distinguished service and received high honors that there was:

One person out of each 150,000 who had no schooling.

One person out of each 37,500 with a common school education.

One person out of each 1,724 with a high school education.

One person out of each 187 with a college education.

The above lines show the comparative chances of no schooling and with the different grades of education. Parents who give their children a common school education give them four times the chance to become a leader and receive distinction that the child with no schooling has. Those who give their children a high school education give them 87 times the chance, and the parents who sacrifice and give their children a college education give them more than 800 times the chance of the child without schooling.—E. How About Your Congressional Candidates?

The Association Against the Prohibition Amendment is reported to have definitely announced that it will not take sides in the Presidential race, but will concentrate its efforts from now on to elect members of the House and Senate who can be depended upon to support modification of the Volstead Act to legalize beer. It is stated that a drive is to be made to elect at least sixty pro modification members of the House next November, which, the A. A. P. A. says, vill insure a sufficiently large wet membership to get a vote for modification from the next Congress.

In considering this program of the A. A. P. A. do not forget that the same foreign forces that had such a large part in arousing antagonism to prohibition in the Canadian provinces that have now lost their prohibition laws, on their own admission are definitely working in this country, stating. "The approaching electoral campaign will probably be an occasion for the French Wine Commission to redouble its activities."

Will America tolerate this invasion by the foreign liquor interests? Shall we permit French wine merchants to dictate to us what shall be our laws or our public policy? The knowledge that alien forces are attempting to dominate the situation in order that they may once more have a market for their wines ought to arouse every citizen to do a little more than ever before to keep and enforce the Eighteenth Amendment. It behooves white ribboners to see that their fellow citizens are informed of this nefarious attempt of trans Atlantic liquorites to meddle in the affairs of this nation!

Anti Saloon League Concentrates on Tuttle

Leaders of the Michigan anti Saloon League indicated today that they will follow up their endorsement Thursday of Federal Judge Arthur J. Tuttle for the republican nomination for United States senator, with an urge to the dry forces throughout the state to concentrate behind their chosen candidate.

Members of the headquarters committee of the league, including R. H. Scott, president, and R. N. Holsaple, superintendent, asked that all who desire the defeat of Senator James Couzens combine get behind Tuttle.

The action of the league in singling out a candidate from the field of three opposing Senator Couzens was taken because of the necessity of solidifying the dry vote. Daniel W. Tussing of Lansing, and Hal H. Smith, of Detroit, were both found "satisfactory from a dry standpoint by the league, but were discarded when it came to a matter of endorsements because "a scattering of the dry support among three candidates may lead to the nomination of Mr. Couzens."

The league heads declared that Judge Tuttle has a splendid record behind him, and that he has left no room for doubt as to where he stands on the prohibition question.

At least one of the candidates not endorsed by the league plans to fight for dry votes, he indicated. Daniel W. Tussing, said to be the Ku Klux Klan candidate has the support of a new organization, formed expressly for the purpose of forwarding his candidacy. It is known as the Dry Voters Federation. In a statement issued Thursday this organization severely censured R. N. Holsaple, the League superintendent and said that the dry forces were lining up behind Tussing.

Poor Crop Storage Causes Barn Fires

Farmers who fail to take great pains in curing their hay and grain crops in the field before storing them in barns are faced with the possibility of the destruction of parts or all of their season's crop by fires arising through spontaneous combustion, according to a warning issued this week by R. C. Rather farm crops specialist with the M. A C. extension staff.

Particular importance attaches to careful crop storage this season as satifactory drying and curing of the crop in the field has been prevented by weather conditions, Rather points out. When hay or grain has become wet with rain in the field and contains more than its natural moisture, overheating in the mow may occur unless proper care is taken, occasionally in such degree that flames break out.

Two instances of spontaneous combustion have already come to the attention of the M. A. C. farm crops department, one at Brown City and the other at Elkton, the latter witnessed by Mr. Rather himself. Slightly oyer a week after the wheat had been stored in a wet condition, a dull hollow thud was heard and clouds of gray smoke were seen pouring from every crack and opening in the barn. A minute later the barn was a mass of flames and the building with the entire wheat and hay crop for the season was completely destroyed. Cinders from this blaze were found more than a mile and a half away.

"Such losses can be prevented if growers will take great pains to cure their crop in the field", Mr. Rather says. "In seasons like the present the round capped shocks are much the more desirable in protecting the grain from weather injury. After curing, these can be opened up and allowed to air on the day they are to be hauled. When the straw down by band in the center of the bundle is well dried out, it will be safe for storage as the rest will have ample opportunity to air out.

"The second cutting of alfalfa about to be harvested should be handled with equal caution. To avoid loss of leaves, it should be cured in the windrow or the cock. In a loose airy windrow with leaves to the center and juicy butts to the outside, it will actually dry out more rapidly than in the swath. In case of rain the windrow should be turned half over to loosen in and give the bottom a chance to air out Rain or dew must be thoroughly dried off before it is put in the barn

"Salting the hay is a good safety measure. A 12 quart pail of salt to each load of hay will take up much excess moisture and prevent most of the bacterial action, which is the forerunner to the costly dangerous spontaneous combustion."

Some "Facts" That Ain't So

Many things that many of us of today believe to be true have become "facts" by repetition through the years. So it may be as to the story which started recently when Henry Ford was elected referee for the Indianapolis automobile classic to the effect that he was an automobile racing driver in the early days. He did some fast driving but not in racing. He got Barney Oldfield to do that for him. Ford was a mechanic, developing an engine and some speedy driving he did was incidental to that.

A lot of things that are "so" today were not so when the stories started. Sir Walter Raleigh did not introduce tobacco or potatoes into England. Owls do not avoid daylight. Tortoises placed in gardens do not rid the gardens of grubs and other pests, but fill up on good garden stuff. Ostriches, when pursued do not bury their heads in sand. A black roof in a dog,s mouth does not indicate purity of breed. Growing pains in children are not that but rheumatism. Bagpipes did not originate in Scotland, but can be traced to ancient Persia and, by inference, to Egypt One more will be enough for this time—*W*att did not invent the steam engine, but improved it. The inventor was Edward Somerset, Earl of Worchester, England, in 1665. How many have, invented it before the Earl did never will be known.

Coolidge and The Farmers

"Kansas farmers speak of President Coolidge as a hard boiled economizer in government expenditure, which accounts for his popularity in our state", said Senator Arthur Capper, of Kansas, when he visited Republican National Committee headquarters on the occasion of the Dawes notification exercises.

"Nothing so strongly appeals to our people as rigid economy and hard common sense in the management of government affairs," said the Kansas Senator. We are satisfied with Coolidge; we believe he is safe and sane, and we know this is no time to make changes in the management of our national affairs. There has been a marked improvement in the sentiment of our people during the past 60 days, due to careful consideration of the situation and the increases in prices of farm products, accompanied by excellent crop prospects, which made for the full dinner pail of the working man.

"Common sense and rigid economy", said Senator Capper, "appeal more strongly to our people than Government ownership of railroads, or attacks upon the protective tariff system, or the untried and revolutionary policies which strike at the foundations of our Government. Our farmers believe in "Cal, the hard boiled economizer," and in the Dawes' plan for bringing real peace to the world. This means prosperity under Republican rule. Our farmers know it, and the working men in our industrial centers know that this truly insures their prosperity."

Save Some of your Old Corn

The spring of 1924 was unusually backward in many sections. Following this, the growing conditions were not good, with the result that the bulk of the corn is extremely late throughout the Corn Belt and northward. It is so late that most of the crop will be unfit for seed unless frost holds off longer than usual.

The United States Department of Agriculture is calling attention to this fact at the present time in order to prevent, if possible, a serious seed corn situation in the spring of 1925. The higher prices for corn in the last few weeks are drawing much of the old crop from the farms Farmers not having enough seed corn for 1925 left over from last year's supply should save the best of their bulk crib corn from which to obtain seed, if necessary. If this year's crop is killed before it is mature, this old corn will provide a source from which seed can be selected for planting in 1925.

They Propose to Blow the Klan to Smithereens

Those who suppose the Ku Klux Klan is growing in popularity must remember that this popularity is confined to certain people only. Over at Camp Custer, Battle Creek Brigadier General Mosely commanding officer found upon investigation that the Klan had been using part of the cantonment for meeting and he started with a company of regulars for the particular spot, but found nothing doing—the Kluxers had all vamoosed. He was slightly roiled and ordered the spot guarded He also has several machine guns trained upon the place loaded with real shells, and has given strict orders that in case the Klan attempts to mobilize inside the contonment to shoot without reserve.

The General ordered all who were found loitering arrested and in consequence the guard house at Custer is now full of prisoners and the commandant threatens to make a tough example of any who attempt to hold Klan meetings. This we presume illustrates what the United States Government thinks of the Klan as no commander would dare to take such a stand unless he were under strict orders right from Washington.

A Tactful Man

Sir Ribert Baden-Powell can always be relied upon to tell a story worth retelling. At the recent dinner of the Federation of Rambling Clubs he related an amusing incident in which he and his wife were concerned while camping in a wood belonging to one of the newly rich.

Lady Baden-Powell asked permission to put up a tent in the wood. After some hesitation, sanction was forthcoming.

"But you must bring the general to see me," insisted the landowner.

Her ladyship pointed out the general, who was busy unharnessing the horse.

"That him?" exclaimed the landowner. "Good heavens! I thought he was tall, slim and—well, handsome!"

JOSSELYN'S WIFE

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

Copyright by Kathleen Norris

MARRIED LIFE

This is a story of married life—and a wife's great love. But there's nothing humdrum about that same married life—far from it. There's ideal love in it, and jealousy and even murder. And at the end the triumph of a wife's love.

In the beginning Ellen Latimer is disclosed as a girl—pretty, poor and talented. Fate transports her to Paris studios and then to the luxurious life of wealthy New York. Fate marries her to an attractive fellow, son of a rich man and talented as an artist. Fate gives her a devoted husband and the joys of love almost ideal. Then fate brings in a young and attractive stepmother, who maneuvers her way between husband and wife. The wife is torn by jealousy. Finally she believes the worst. Her husband's father also believes the worst. Father accuses son and strikes him, ordering him from the house.

And then fate strikes its hardest blow. The father is found dead in his study under circumstances that point to murder. The son is arrested for murder. The wife is obliged to tell of the quarrel. Circumstantial evidence closes tightly around her husband. But he convinces her that he is innocent. Her love triumphs and she stands by him to the end—which is something far different from being executed for murder.

The author? Kathleen Norris, one of the best of our American novelists. She was born, brought up and married in San Francisco. At first she wrote short stories for the magazines. Her first novel was commended by William Dean Howells. Since then her public has been large. She has a long list of novels to her credit, including "Mother," "The Story of Julia Page," "The Heart of Rachel," "The Rich Mrs. Burgoyne," "Sisters" and "Harriet and the Piper."

Ellen Latimer reached the big station just before the rain began to fall. She went past the paper stand, where laden men were slapping down pennies and rushing on with hardly a perceptible pause, and where all the pretty girls in the world were smiling from the brilliant covers of magazines; girls peeling pumpkins, in demure kitchen ginghams; and girls furred to the eyes, going to football games with pennants over their shoulders, for Thanksgiving was close at hand. She went past the clock that was watched by so many patient and eager eyes, and came to the special gate among a dozen gates where a red boxed sign showed the words "Express Port Washington 5:22." She had spent the morning, as usual, at the Art Students' league, but she had deliberately loitered about the city, all afternoon, in the hope that Ellis Thorpe would join her on this train. Ellen's destination was Port Washington, a quiet old village at the terminus of the line, but Ellis lived at Douglaston, which was a fashionable modern colony, four miles nearer New York.

Ellen did not know him well: they had been introduced on the train, and never met elsewhere. Ellis was only nineteen, still in high school, and the girl was more than three years older.

They talked only of themselves as the train tore on its noisy way. Ellen talked of her day's experiences at the Art league, and her starry beauty, and the flash of her blue eyes, under the fur-trimmed hat, and the infectious gayety of her laugh, lent the dull subject a sudden charm. Young Thorpe was personal in his replies; his was the type that renders personalities inoffensive, and Ellen flushed with amusement and pleasure, and turned from his merciless stare to smile at her own reflection in the dark car window.

It was a lovely reflection. The laughing eyes were a deep Irish blue, with soft shadows and long sooty lashes accentuating their essential innocence. The skin had a pure and healthy pallor, except on the high cheekbones, where there was a brilliant touch of color, and Ellen's mouth was wide, like her Irish mother's, kindly, humorous, the thin lips exquisitely red, the big teeth shining. Her hair was a satiny black. Ellen thought, herself, that she was pretty, but the thought rarely gave her any pleasure. What was the use of mere beauty if one lacked every other good thing in the world? She was poor, ambitious, eager for life, ignorant as to the means of gaining her place in the world.

Her father's father had been a sea captain. He was an old man now, living with a vigorous widowed daughter, Ellen's Aunt Elsie. The two had made a home for Ellen and little Joe when Ellen's father, several years after her mother, had died ten years ago. Ellen was twelve then, and sensitive, and Joe, at eight, was beginning to be unmanageable. Grandpa, idle and shelved after a life of high adventure, resented their noise and their claims. And Aunt Elsie's way of enjoying life was to worry and fret, fume and scold and fuss.

Ellen went to the village school, and then to high school, always with the dread in her young heart that after high school she would have to "work." To her there seemed something dreadful in the idea of becoming a working-woman. She decided that she would go away, if this necessity came upon her; she would become a nurse, in a trim white uniform, and there would be, in the hospital, a stunning young doctor.

However, just before her graduation, a miracle happened. On a certain July day, when there were a million roses in bloom in the old garden, Mrs. E. Sewall Rose came to call on Aunt Elsie. She was on her way to Sands Point, the fashionable colony of a score of seaside homes two miles away. She was large, perfumed, beautiful, and kindly. She kissed Ellen, and called her "Nellie Buckley's girl," and she told Ellen that she had loved her mother. They had been girls together in a convent boarding school.

"The Buckleys were lovely people," said this enchanting visitor, "and Nellie was an angel. They had a great deal of money then; I went to drive with her many a time behind a pair of the handsomest horses you ever saw. Whatever happened. . . .?"

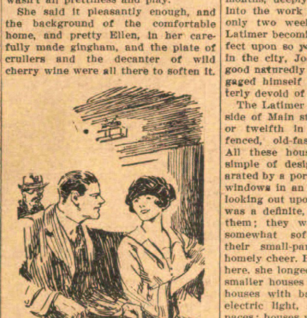
Aunt Elsie said something of speculations; it was all long ago. The Buckleys were all scattered and dead. She sighed with sad enjoyment.

The visitor came upon some of Ellen's school work, and asked Ellen questions. And Ellen told her with shy eagerness that she had hoped to be an artist.

Mrs. E. Sewall Rose asked her where she was going to study.

Aunt Ellen answered this question. Ellen had no time for fooling; she was going to work; they had the boy to raise, and Father felt that they had done all that duty required. It was time now for Ellen to realize that life wasn't all prettiness and play.

She said it pleasantly enough, and the background of the comfortable home, and pretty Ellen, in her carefully made gingham, and the plate of crullers and the decanter of wild cherry wine were all there to soften it.



She Was Poor, Ambitious, Eager for Life, Ignorant as to the Means of Gaining Her Place in the World.

But a week later Mrs. E. Sewall Rose wrote to Aunt Elsie, and sent a check that was to cover all the expenses for Ellen's first quarter at the Art Students' league. Ellen mounted straight into paradise. Ah, how she would work, how she would advance, how proud they would all be some day!

She fairly rushed into it. She was the most earnest, the most tremblingly happy, of all the earnest, trembling beginners that fall. And she did succeed. Her honesty, and her simplicity, and her pure and fiery ambition, made her a marked figure in the classes from the beginning. There were a great many silly girls in the art classes, and a few serious ones, like Ellen. The boys were dark, earnest young Hebrews for the most part, risen from emigrant homes; poor, shabby, sometimes hungry, but making steadily for their goal. Other boys were there, too, lounging, unkempt youths, who meant to "get into the newspaper game."

Perhaps two or three times during the winter Mrs. Rose asked her protegee to lunch with her. She would be on a shopping trip, furred, and scented with violets, and she would make Ellen order all sorts of expensive dishes. The girl went back to her work with a flushed face and a dancing heart.

So two terms, three terms, went by. And now Ellen was well into a fourth, and felt herself no nearer a livelihood than she had been at the end of the first. How did a woman begin to support herself by art? Some of the boys did really drift into newspaper offices, but what they did there seemed to be errands and answering the telephones and rushing about town upon uninteresting investigations, rather than sitting at drawing-boards. Ellen could not do that. Nor could she open a studio on Washington Square, and go about from office to office of the magazines selling pictures.

A deep discontent fell upon her, and she began to turn to the world-old refuge of women: she would marry. Then, when the urgent financial question was laid at rest, she might begin to make her way.

Joe, with an umbrella, met her with the first rush of pure country air, at the station. Ellen, whose Celtic heart was always eagerly reaching for evidences of affection in this adored younger brother, thought this wonderfully sweet in Joe.

He was a big, lumbering, loosely built lad of eighteen, in muddy boots, rough corduroy trousers, and with a gray sweater's rolling collar touching his ears. Winter and summer Joe lived in this or a similar sweater. His untidy black hair fell in a long lock between his handsome black eyes; he grinned amiably at his sister.

Joe had declined high school, and had driven the village grocery wagon during his fifteenth year. Then he had worked with the plumber, and the electrician. After that he had worked upon a private yacht for a whole summer, had lived in New York for a few months, deeply enjoying his initiation into the work of a cub reporter, and only two weeks ago, upon Grandpa Latimer becoming distrustful of the effect upon so young a boy of boarding in the city, Joe had indifferently and good naturedly returned home, and engaged himself to Bates. Joe was utterly devoid of ambition.

The Latimer house was on the right side of Main street, perhaps the tenth or twelfth in an unbroken line of fenced, old-fashioned village homes. All these houses were wooden, and simple of design: four windows separated by a porch door downstairs, five windows in an unbroken row upstairs, looking out upon the porch roof. There was a definite, primitive beauty about them; they were old, and age had somewhat softened their ugliness; their small-paned windows radiated homely cheer. But Ellen saw no beauty here. she longed for one of the modern smaller houses up toward Flower hill; houses with bathrooms in them, and electric light, and fireplace and furnaces; houses with wide windows, and shingles and white paint.

Her aunt nodded to her from the kitchen stove, and Ellen, who had hung up her hat and coat, smiled back as she warmed her hands over the glow. There was a delicious smell in the kitchen. Ellen gave a deep smiling sigh at the sight of creamed mutton stew with dumplings, corn pudding and fried sweet potatoes.

"Oo—Aunty! What a good dinner! And I'm starving."

"Well, I hope you'll get enough," Mrs. Baldwin said, with the little nervous twitch of her countenance that passed for a smile. "There's a letter for you up by the clock. Go tell grandpa supper's ready, and see if I've left anything off the table."

Ellen escaped the tireless voice. She went into the living room, a rather small room where the round table was already set for supper. An airtight stove was here, and near it sat old Captain Latimer, with his thin silky white hair brushed scrupulously, and his old carpet slippers resting on the nickel-plated shield of the stove. He wore old gray trousers, and a brown jacket he called his "Cadogan," and over his chest a thin beard flowed, as white as milk. His sharp eyes were bright blue, in a clean, weather-beaten face.

"Do, Ellin?" he said, in a sharp, high old voice. "Don't Elsie p'pose to give us no supper t'night?"

"Two seconds, grandpa!" Ellen answered absent-mindedly. Her eyes were only for her letter, a big square letter. Who was it from? Ah! it was. from Mrs. Rose, of course.

Two minutes later the exulting Ellen was back in the kitchen.

"Aunt Elsie, isn't this wonderful? Isn't this just lovely. Mrs. Rose wants me to go to her Thanksgiving house party. Her son, that's Arthur, and the girl, Lucia, are going to have a lot of friends at Hastings-on-Hudson! Oh, I think she's a darling to want me. And here's my ticket and all—my made-over gray dress, and my lace dress—doesn't it just seem as if my clothes were made for this special thing? And she signs it: 'Your friend, Abby Carnaby Rose'; I think Carnaby's a stunning name——"

Thus Ellen, stuttering and stumbling in her joy and excitement, and all the while automatically assisting in the process of "dishing up." They were all hungry and ate fast. Ellen propped her letter against the teapot and regaled her family with the delights of winter house parties among the upper classes; Joe listened with a grin; the old Captain drank his tea noisily from his saucer, and removed from his mouth portions of the stew too hard for mastication. Mrs. Baldwin, who had been a baby in arms fifty years before, a dutiful daughter, an admiring comrade, was his mother now. She crushed the hard crusts of his toast, and over-sweetened his tea, and saw that he had plenty of soft food. He could no more offend her than might a baby of two years. Joe's own conduct at the table was almost equally open to criticism. Ellen saw nothing and heard nothing; she was going to visit at a fashionable country house; she was beginning to live!

There were difficulties to be met, of course. The first was the surprising resentment of Aunt Elsie. Thanksgiving was a home day. Aunt Elsie didn't like the idea of Ellen going off with a lot of godless people; dancing, as likely as not, getting her head full of crack-brained ideas—

"Well, I don't like the idea of old-fashioned Thanksgiving!" Ellen answered, trying not to sound impertinent. "We all eat too much, and the house gets too hot, and you're working for three days baking and fussing!"

She did not dream that she struck to her aunt's heart. The national holiday was a sacred institution to Mrs. Baldwin. And now Ellen—Ellen was disparaging Thanksgiving!

The two were in Ellen's bedroom when this conversation took place, and Mrs. Baldwin turned and went downstairs without a word. Ellen stood still, in the center of the ice-cold room, her face flushed with shame, the gaudy patchwork quilt she was about to spread over her newly-made bed hanging from her hands.

Her heart smote her. They would miss her on Thanksgiving day. But what could she do? Nothing in life seemed so important as Mrs. Rose's wonderful invitation.

When she went downstairs there was a decided chill in her aunt's attitude. It was Sunday, and the older woman was neatly dressed for church. She enjoyed church, and would come home at half-past twelve rosy from the cold air and full of kindly gossip. She would walk down to the post office for the mail, too; there was rarely any mail, but all the world of Port Washington would be there.

Ellen would have liked to sew on her fancy-work, but her aunt would not let her sew on Sunday. So she began to read. She felt guilty. She wished that she were heroic enough to give up the Rose week-end and stay here and help Aunt Elsie through Thanksgiving.

Mrs. Baldwin brought back one letter, after all. It was from Mrs. Rose, for Ellen. It said that Mrs. Rose was delighted that Ellen could be with them, and that she would expect her on the two o'clock train from New York—on Friday! So that Ellen would have Thanksgiving at home, after all.

The question of clothes remained. Even when Ellen had run fresh ribbons into her best underwear, and had washed her one pair of silk stockings, and had pressed the cheap yet dainty lace gown, and basted fresh frills into the neck and cuffs of the made-over gray velvet; even then she felt some misgivings. She had the dresses, but what about all the accessories? She woke, in the cold winter mornings, filled with wretched doubts. But at night, when her lamp, and the stove downstairs, had somewhat warmed her room, she sat at her mirror, and looked at the lovely vision of rosy cheeks and shy eyes and loosened black hair; and the red lips would curve in spite of themselves into a confident smile.

Might she be the belle of the whole party? . . . Might they all admire her? Might it be a glorious triumph for the newcomer, the beginning of wonderful things? Ellen would jump between the cold, heavy sheets with a smile in her eyes, and go off to dreams of glory.

What is to be the experience of this shy country girl on her first trip into the world?

It Cost Doctor Money to Cure This Patient

This story is told of Dr. Henry Drury Hatfield, former governor of West Virginia, when as a mountain doctor he rode 20 miles deep into the mountains one stormy winter night and saved a mountaineer's wife from pneumonia.

"How much do I owe you?" asked the grateful mountaineer.

The doctor, knowing the family's poverty, jokingly replied: "Oh, just whatever you can pay."

"All right," replied the mountaineer, "the only thing I have is that old cow out there, but she's yours, and I'll bring her in next week."

Hatfield was astonished a few days later to see the mountaineer walking up the road leading the cow.

"Hello, doc; here's that cow I said I'd give you." He handed the rope to Hatfield and started away.

"Hold on!" shouted Hatfield. "Did you walk all the way from the mountains with that cow?"

"Sure," was the reply.

"Well," replied Hatfield, fishing into his pockets, "here's $5. Drive her back home again."

Got "Peeping Tom"

Something exceedingly antique and rare in the legal line was presented in Rochdale, England, when a young man was arraigned in the magistrate's court on the charge of "unlawfully listening by night under walls, windows and eaves of Rochdale infirmary, to hearken after the discourse, and therefrom to frame slanders and mischievous tales." He resisted capture when caught up a spout looking through the nurses' sitting-room window and was struck on the head with a hammer by an infirmary official, says the Cincinnati Enquirer. The charge was preferred under an old common law respecting "night walkers and eavesdroppers."

Easily Recall Voice Heard on Telephone

Is a voice a better identification tag than a face?

Telephone operators say voices are more easily recognized and they ought to know—they hear enough of them. Voices, they assert, are more personal than faces. Faces may bear resemblance, but a voice is distinctly individual.

"I find it comparatively easy to associate voices with names, although I do not recognize transient callers," says a woman who has been private branch exchange operator for the Philadelphia board of education for more than six years. In that time she has familiarized herself with the names and voices of the entire school administration staff, most of the school principals and hundreds of school teachers.

"Of course, if I were to meet them on the street I should fail to recognize them," she admits, "but I have learned to know the voices and to catalogue them mentally. If a person calls more than once and leaves his name, I usually remember both his name and his voice. If he calls again I endeavor, of course, to call him by name."

BROUGHT HOME FROM MEXICO ON STRETCHER

But Mrs. Herman Is Now in Good Health, Thanks to Tanlac.

A few years ago Mrs. M. E. Herman, 215 Hitchings St., San Antonio, Texas, "returned to the states from Monterey, Mexico," she says, "in such a low state of health that she had to be carried to her home on a stretcher."

As time went on and she still lingered in the throes of "Nerve exhaustion, stomach disorders and bodily weakness," she determined, "on the advice of her druggist," to try Tanlac, which she declares "brought back my health and strength after I had almost despaired of ever getting well."

The results of Tanlac in the case of Mrs. Herman, while indeed remarkable, are by no means unusual for Tanlac, as many hundreds of people everywhere have testified to having taken the famous medicine with no less wonderful results.

"I returned from Mexico," said Mrs. Herman, "so thin and weak that I feared my life was going to be cut short. I could neither eat or sleep in a natural way and it seemed at times that heart palpitation and nerve exhaustion would take me away.

"The makers of Tanlac will always have my heartfelt thanks, for it is to Tanlac that I attribute my recovery and present good health. Tanlac is like a blessing from heaven to me, that is the way I think about it."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 Million bottles sold.

Tanlac Vegetable Pills, for constipation, made and recommended by the manufacturers of TANLAC.

Death of Mrs. Andrew Culbert

Mary B. Buskirk was born in Livingston county New York state February 22, 1836 the daughter of Isaac and Hannah Buskirk and died at the home of her son, Sunday evening Aug. 17th, at 11:30. She was united in marriage to Andrew Culbert Feb. 22, 1854 and he passed away Sept. 8, 1895. To this union was born one son, Eugene Culbert who survives the aged mother. Soon after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Culbert came to Michigan and settled on a farm in Somerset, Hillsdale county, and she has always lived on this same farm. A year ago last June she fell and broke her hip and at that time was taken into the home of her son and wife who have tenderly cared for her.

Having been a resident of Town Line these many years and living to the advanced age of 88 years her neighbors and friends will sadly miss her. She often remarked she was ready and willing to go at her Master's calling- Those words help to break the shadow of sadness that steals into our hearts and thoughts.

A selected verse she wished to have used at the funeral service was "The Lord is good; a stronghold in the day of trouble. He knoweth them that trust in Him." Left to mourn are the immediate family, Eugene Culbert and wife, one grand son, Earl Culbert and wife of Pheonix, Arizona, a half brother and half sister of Stanton Mich. and one in California.

Funeral services were held at the home of her son, Eugene, Wednesday afternoon, August 20th, at 2 o'clock p. m. Rev. Virgil Hunt of North Adams Congregational church conducting the services and interment was in Pease cemetery.

Card of Thanks

We thank our neighbors and friends for kindnesses and sympathy in our recent bereavement, Rev Hunt for his inspiring words, for the lovely flowers and music. Again we thank you.

Passing of Old-Time Doctor

Most of our citizens will remember that Dr. Hopkins of Hillsdale has appeared on the Fair Grounds very regularly for the past forty years selling his patent toxema eradicator and rough rider tonic which he had manufactured in the city for years, and is known from coast to coast. The doctor passed away at his home on State street Friday morning last week from extreme old age. He would have been 85 years old next month and for 47 years he had manufactured and sold the famous remedy which put him on the map in southern Michigan. He prided himself that the herb medicine would cure most of the ills human flesh is heir to, and usually the people who bought found it either cured or killed—since the flavor of aloes and gall was tame compared to Dr. Hopkins' physic. The aged doctor was usually found at the County Fair with his favorite carriage and horse although in the latter years of his life he drove a car. He made his speeches and sold his medicine which saved many a hard-handed son of toil from a sick bed simply by the process of "cleaning out" and they all had to admit the work was done with vacuum dispatch and antonishing efficiency. Dr. Hopkins leaves a widow 83 years of age but no children. Last January their home was damaged to the extent of $3,000 by fire but the aged couple continued to cling to it and managed to live in a front room until repairs had been made.

Funeral services were canducted on Sunday afternoon, August 24 by Rev. Mason at the home and interment was at Oak Grove cemetery. The first of the week his aged companion fell and broke her hip and has been bedridden since.

Your attention is called to the special election which is to be held Monday next. September the 8th, at this time you are asked to confirm or reject the sale of your electrical distribution system which consists of meters, transformers, poles and wire and also the granting of a franchise to the Southern Michigan Light and Power Company, a copy of which is on file with your Village Clerk. This franchise gives us permission to transact a local business and use the streets and alleys for erecting of poles so as to serve the customers who may want electric service. This however is not an exclusive franchise as there is no such thing in Michigan, the laws are such that an exclusive franchise cannot be granted.

We believe we can better serve North Adams if we have control of the distribution system, for then we are responsible to each customer in seeing that they are receiving proper service. We have offered $4500.00 for your distribution system. This will give the Village enough money to clean up their indebtedness and thereby lower their taxes at once. We will do the necessary work to put the lines around town in good shape and make necessary changes so that customers may take advantage of the new low electric stove rate which we will put in effect immediately. In addition to the above we agree that within 10 months in place of having one transmission line as we now have from our power house to the end of the county line or where the road running east from North Adams meets with the county line road we will build the second line so that in case of failure of one line we will still have one that we can use. This cannot help but give North Adams better service for these two lines will be over different routes and should eliminate nearly all failures.

Every voter should be interested in this proposition for it certainly means a big reduction in the taxes of North Adams and a lighting rate that is the same as the city of Hudson and other towns we serve.

Better electric service and a lower tax rate should be of interest to all.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Ku Klux Klan Denounced, Defeated and Threatened With Machine Guns.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

IN ONE way or another the Ku Klux klan was an important feature of the news of the past week. Here and there over the country the sheeted organization was denounced, defeated and threatened with machine-gun fire. Taking up the challenge issued to President Coolidge and himself by John W. Davis, General Dawes went down into Maine, where the klan is supposed to be a strong element of the Republican party, and boldly condemned it by name, despite the pleadings of the state Republican leaders. Agreeing with the Democratic candidate that the klan has no proper place in this or any other campaign, Mr. Dawes said government could not last if the klan way was the right way to enforce the law, that lawlessness cannot be met with lawlessness if civilization was to be maintained. He softened this a bit by declaring that in the klan in many localities he recognized an "instinctive groping for leadership toward law enforcement which was not found in cowardly politicians and officeholders." But, he said, to inject religious and racial issues into politics was contrary to the welfare of all the people and to the letter and spirit of the Constitution of the United States.

Following the lead of Presidential Candidate Davis, the Democratic state convention of Ohio declared against the klan by adopting this resolution:

"Whenever any organization, no matter what it chooses to be called, whether Ku Klux klan or any other name, raises the standard of racial or religious belief as a test of fitness for public office, it does violence to the spirit of American institutions and must be condemned by all who believe in American ideals."

In Texas the klan suffered defeat when Mrs. Miriam Ferguson, wife of a former governor who was impeached, won the Democratic gubernatorial nomination in the run-off primary, beating Judge Robertson, who was the klan candidate, by about 85,000 votes. Hers was mainly an anti-klan campaign, and she says no member of the order will be appointed to office by her, nor will any recent appointees be retained in office if they are known to be affiliated with the klan. Since her nomination is virtually equivalent to election, Mrs. Ferguson will be the first woman to hold the position of governor in the United States. Republican leaders in Texas, who say their party there has always been anti-klan though tolerant, will try to make prohibition the issue and profess to see a chance to elect a governor.

Kluxers of Michigan set up their fiery cross and held meetings on a hill within the boundaries of Camp Custer Military reservation with the apparent intention of gaining recruits from the 7,000 men in military training there. Brig. Gen. George Van Horne Moseley, camp commandant, was aroused to wrath and issued an order forbidding such meetings and warning the men of the camp to keep away from them. He directed that the hill be covered with machine-gun fire and that it be swept with bullets if another meeting of the klan were held there.

Henry Ford was quoted last week by the Montreal Star as saying that the klan is the victim of lying propaganda and if the truth were known it would be looked upon as a body of patriots concerned with nothing but the future of the country and the supremacy of the true American in his own land. Mr. Ford, who was on his yacht en route to Detroit, at once denied positively having made these statements and asserted he had given no interview to anyone while in Montreal and had not discussed the klan.

SENATOR NATHANIEL B. DIAL of South Carolina was defeated for renomination in the Democratic primaries by both former Gov. Cole L. Blease and Representative James F. Byrnes, who will have to have a run-off primary.

In Montana the returns to date from the Republican primary indicate the nomination of Frank Linderman for senator and Joseph M. Dixon for governor.

SENATOR WHEELER, vice presidential candidate on the LaFollette ticket, planned to open his campaign September 1 with a speech on Boston common. But he was notified that he must be in Montana that day to face trial on the indictments charging him with misuse of his senatorial office. The LaFollette-Wheeler leaders were infuriated, and Chairman Nelson declared the action of the Montana district attorney was "a clear indication that the Department of Justice is to be used as an adjunct of the Republican committee in this campaign."

FRANCE'S signature to the London agreement for putting the Dawes plan in operation was authorized by both the senate and the chamber of deputies, the opposition being in a hopeless minority. M. Poincare, though attacking M. Herriot severely on several points, supported the premier on the main question of accepting the agreement. In Germany the prospect was not so rosy, for the government could not see its way to obtaining the two-thirds vote necessary to pass the Dawes bill in the reichstag, unless the Nationalists permitted defections in their delegation. The Communists disrupted the debates with riotous actions and the president of the reichstag was compelled to call in the police. The Socialists and bourgeois parties are eager for a dissolution of the reichstag, but the calling of new elections would greatly retard ratification of the Dawes plan and cause serious economic and political troubles in Germany.

Owen D. Young has gone to Europe to take the position of temporary agent general for reparations, and it is understood the permanent agent general will be S. Parker Gilbert, former undersecretary of the treasury. Rufus C. Dawes of Chicago, brother of General Dawes, has gone across to help put the Dawes plan in operation.

LIEUTENANTS SMITH AND NELSON early last week made the short hop from Fredericksdal to Ivigtut, Greenland, and prepared their planes for the last flight over the sea, to Indian Harbor, Labrador. Lieutenant Locatelli of Italy and his companions, who were lost on the flight from Iceland to Greenland, were found by the American cruiser Richmond three days later, floating in their broken plane 125 miles off Cape Farewell. They were uninjured, but the plane was so badly damaged that Locatelli asked that it be destroyed.

First test flights of the ZR-2, built in Germany for the United States, revealed serious defects in the huge Zepelin's engines. It may be necessary to install a new set of motors before the airship starts across the Atlantic. In other respects the trials were quite satisfactory.

DISPATCHES from Shanghai said that city, hitherto immune from the fighting of the civil warfare in China, was about to be the scene of a battle between the rival armies of Kiangsu and Chekiang provinces. Foreign residents were calling for gunboats and marines, though it was not believed they would be molested. Presumably the row is due to the plan of Gen. Wu Pei Fu, war lord of Chihli, to oust the governor of Chekiang as a preliminary to attacking Chang Tso-Lin, his rival.

ALTHOUGH the Soviet government always has ample funds for propaganda purposes, and although it has been exporting wheat for some time, it is likely that soft-hearted Americans will soon be asked again to give their money to save Russians from starvation. The Moscow government, it is reported, admits this year's crop failure involves 60 per cent of the planted area and that a famine as bad as that of 1921 is imminent. Unofficially, the blame for the situation is laid to exorbitant taxes, forced loans, monopoly of commerce and the artificial deflation of agricultural values.

POST OFFICE INSPECTOR WILLIAM FAHY, one of the most famous thief catchers in the government employ, who has been stationed in Chicago for several years, is himself in jail accused of being the "inside man" in the $2,000,000 mail robbery which was perpetrated at Rondout Ill., on the night of June 12. The robbers on that occasion shot and killed one of their own band, and several of them were caught. Others escaped, and it is believed by the authorities who have been watching Fahy that he divided the loot with them.

OSWALD GARRISON VILLARD, editor of the Nation and one of the most obnoxious of the so-called "intellectuals" of America, stirred up a hornets' nest in the Institute of Politics at Williamstown, Mass., by a speech in which he charged that the United States government aids American bankers and capitalists to exploit weaker countries, especially in Latin America, by supporting loans and investments with the use of military forces "controlled by politicians without principle." He declared: "The blood of 3,000 Haitians slain by our American marines and of the 400 dead in Vera Cruz, mostly women and children, dishonors our good name, especially when involved with so sordid a business as debt collection."

Rear Admiral Harry Huse, retired, indignantly replied: "I have been 50 years in the navy and have never known a case where the navy was sent to collect a debt. The statement that 3,000 Haitians were killed by our marines is outrageous. It is not true. When charges like these are made against our gallant forces they should be sustained by more than a mere statement." He added that the statement that the Americans killed women and children at Vera Cruz was a lie. Villard said he got his information from men on both sides, one of whom was an American admiral, but he declined to give that individual's name. Rear Admiral Hilary P. Jones also denied the truth of the statements made by Villard, toleration of whom is one of the crimes committed in the name of liberty.

ANOTHER of the great packing companies—Wilson & Co. of Chicago—is in trouble. Last week it was put in the hands of receivers by the United States court in New York where it is incorporated. Its operation will be continued by them. For some time bankers, lawyers and representatives of the $121,000,000 company had been trying to work out a plan of financial reorganization without recourse to the courts and they had made substantial progress when a small stockholder upset their work by having a temporary receiver appointed by a New Jersey court.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE announced the appointment of Edgar Addison Bancroft of Chicago as ambassador to Japan and of James Rockwell Sheffield of New York city as ambassador to Mexico. Mr. Bancroft is a graduate of Knox college and Columbia university, an eminent lawyer and an author. He succeeds Cyrus E. Woods who resigned in June. Mr. Sheffield, who takes the post made vacant by the resignation of Charles B. Warren, also is a distinguished lawyer and writer, has served in the New York legislature and is a former president of the National Republican club. He is a graduate of Yale and of Harvard law school.

SECRETARY OF COMMERCE HOOVER has issued a call for the third national radio congress to meet in Washington on September 30. Among the questions to be considered are: Interconnection of broadcasting stations for the handling of national events; revision of the present frequency or wave length allocations to reduce interference; use of high frequencies or short waves; classification of broadcasting stations, possible discontinuance of class C stations; limitation of power, division of time, zoning of broadcasting stations; means for distinguishing the identity of amateur calls from foreign countries; interference by electrical devices other than radio transmitting stations; relations between government and commercial services.

Indians in League of Nations to End War

Washington.—Iroquois Indians beat the League of Nations to it by four centuries. That is what J. N. B. Hewitt of the bureau of American ethnology of the Smithsonian Institution discovered through research of the "League of the Five Nations," which held sway in the New York country when America was young.

He has just returned to Washington from further investigation of the organization, of which a remnant exists today in the province of Ontario and the state of New York.

As the Indians of old left no written records, Mr. Hewitt had to depend on tradition, as embodied in ritual. So far as the present is concerned, 6,000 Indians at Brantford, in Ontario, keep alive the league, under arrangement with the Canadian government, and three small reservations in New York state more or less closely follow the old league regulations.

These are the Onondaga reservation near Syracuse, with 565 Indians; the Tonawanda reservation, near Akron, with 539 Indians, and the Tuscarora reservation, near Lewiston, with 876 Indians.

The preservation of peace was the objective of the league of the five nations. The Mohawk, the Onondaga, the Oneida, Cayuga and the Seneca, tribes of Iroquoian blood, established the league, and planned to bring into the federation, in time, all known tribes of men as allies.

Hard Luck Record

Richard Luze, driving his car to town, skidded into a telephone pole. Coming back with the garage man to clear up the wreck he found thieves had stripped it of tires and fixtures. Walking home in the rain two highwaymen with howitzers took all his cash, a watch and his package of plug cut away from him. Finally reaching home Luze discovered lightning had struck the barn, killing a $250 Missouri mule, and that the hired man lit out with the family savings amounting to $140. This made Luze a loser five times in one day.—Capper's Weekly.

Liner Without Funnels

The number of funnels on an ocean liner has been a popular gauge of the grandeur of the vessel, but the Oorangi, recently launched on the Clyde, has no funnels. The vessel is fairly called the first motor-driven passenger liner. She has a displacement of 23,000 tons and a speed of 18 knots. Four sets of six-cylinder Diesel engines deliver 13,000 horsepower, which is applied to four screws. The Oorangi will ply between Vancouver and Australia, a route long enough to make economizing fuel and fuel space of considerable importance.—Youth's Companion.

Odd Things That Happen

A London paper draws attention to two odd things that have recently happened at sea which must make an appeal even to a dull imagination.

One was a collision between an airplane and a steamer; the other was a curious case of damage to an airplane rising over the Dorset coast. The damage was first seen from land and was notified to the pilot in the sky by a wireless message. The pilot was instructed to make for the sea and land in shallow water, which he did, being picked up by a rowing boat.

Many Mothers Weak, Nervous

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helps to Restore Health

A great many letters similar to the following recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as a wonderful medicine for bringing the new mother back to normal health and strength.

Now Well Again

Milwaukee, Wisconsin.—"After I had my second child I felt sick and nervous and could not do much. Then after the other baby came I was worse than ever. I suffered this way for a long time and did not know what to do. I was looking over my cook books, and found one of your little books and I sat down and read every page. Then I bought a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and took four bottles of it before I stopped, and now I am well again. I always recommend the Vegetable Compound to my friends."—Mrs. JOHN MITZKE, 773 8th Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.

Buffalo, N. Y.—"My health got worse after my little girl's birth, and my mother advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as it had done her so much good. I had headaches and tired feelings, with no ambition, also pains at times so it hurt me to walk. With the Vegetable Compound I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash, and I have been greatly helped. I do hope you will use my letter as a testimonial as it will help other women."—Mrs. GEORGE SHOEMAKER, 349 Emslie St., Buffalo, N. Y.

Followed Friend's Advice

Vienna, South Dakota.—"After my second child was born I was completely run-down and didn't care for anything. I had sharp pains in my sides and a white discharge and was nervous and weak. I didn't seem to care how I neglected my work. A friend told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I took it for two months the first time and one month the last time. It has helped me in a great many ways and the pains have left me entirely. I certainly wish you to know how much benefit I have received."—Mrs. G. W. FREEMAN, Vienna, South Dakota.

CANDIDATE FOR MICHIGAN UNITED STATES SENATOR

DANIEL W. TUSSING
(Photographed April 24, 1924)

Successful as Laborer, Farmer, Teacher, Supt. of Public Schools, College President and Business Man.

A farmer in youth. Eighteen years Trustee of a Farm Estate. Placed his daughter and her husband on farm at marriage in 1917.

The young man raised fine crops, but gave up the farm because each year brought more debt.

On April 24th, 1924 Mr. Tussing wrote a public letter on the farm problem and its neglect by the national congress.

April 30, 1924, he wrote his views in his campaign platform, which Michigan politicians criticised.

August 20, 1924, his committee published in the Grange Patron his assertion that the farmer is discriminated against by our national policy of economics.

Up to that time farm relief met no encouragement at Washington, and the keynoter at the Michigan State Convention denied that there is a serious farm problem.

Is it significant that President Coolidge is now saying the same things in his statements that Mr. Tussing wrote earlier, and declares there is urgent need of a changed national policy for the farmers?

Conclusion: The president, also reared a farmer, whose father is still a farmer, knows more of the farm problems than some Michigan politicians.

Mr. Tussing Not Merely An Aimless Candidate Seeking Promotion.

He has an ideal to which his life has been dedicated for many years. He has a message for the farmer. He believes this question invites the study of men who are capable of bringing things to pass. He resolved long before his candidacy to make this problem an issue in his life.

Mr. Tussing has succeeded along several lines far beyond his original hopes. He can be trusted with national problems that involve the common people. He has fought for the people's interests in his home city, where he has been tested by the offer of money and honor, but couldn't be tempted. He stands firmly for all other Republican issues set forth in his platform.

Death of Will Sawin

Willie Beaman Sawin, formerly of North Adams and Manton, Mich. died Thursday, Aug. 21, at the home of his daughter, Retta Schryer, 1237 North O'Brien street, South Bend, Indiana, aged 67 yrs. and 5 days. Interment was in Highland cemetery, of that city August 23 Rev. J. A. Watson formerly of Manton, officiating.

He was born Aug. 16, 1857, in Montague, Massachusetts, and removed with his parents to Jackson Mich., when about 7 years of age. He spent his early manhood in the vicinity of Moscow, and was united in marriage to Miss Ella Dibler of Litchfield March 18, 1884. After farming in Southern Michigan for 13 years the family removed to Manton, Mich., where he engaged in farming.

Surviving are his wife, Ella Dibler Sawin, three daughters, Mrs. Ivah Blair, Mrs. Retta Schryer and Mrs. HazelMatthews and two sons John and Hubert all of South Bend, Indiana, and eight grandchildren, two of whom Levoy and Clarence Schryer, were reared in their grand-parents home. He also leaves two sisters, Mrs. Ernest Benedict of Cadillac, and Mrs. Orris Fowle of Moscow, and one brother, Henry Sawin of Grand Rapids, who feel the loss of a devoted father and brother who loved his family and stood for the principles of christian fellowship and citizenship that make the home a family unit that is as sacred to those reared in its atmosphere as it is valuable to the Nation. If to have lived a life of devotion to his mate and family and if hard work and upright purposeful activity is the standard by which to measure the value of human life, has not this one done well his share in the work of the wide, wide world? And if to have lived so as to look back upon the pathway of life and see no enemies left behind to cast a shadow over the many friends who mourn his passing, then has he well earned the final reward that Heaven alone can award the weary.

Col. Kerr Praises The Salvation Army

E. H. Kerr Late Lt. Col. U. S, A. spoke at the College church Sunday morning and at the Salvation Army Barracks in the afternoon, preliminary to the annual campaign for funds for the support of the Salvation Army work in Hillsdale for the coming year.

He said in part:

"When you enter a strange city do not look for the Salvation army headquarters among the business blocks, or along the pleasant shaded avenues, and the Boulevards where peace and plenty abounds know them not—but rather ascertain where the poor are quartered, and where living conditions are most unpleasant and where lawlessness and crime are most plentiful and there "on the job", ready to give the aid the conditions require, there these meek and lowly followers of the God of the Christians are to be found.

"It is true they are to be seen occasionly in small numbers, in the better and more prosperous parts of your city but only for the express purpose of obtaining the "sinews of war" to carry on their wonderful work amongst the poor and needy.

"Therefore my friends, when you have the opportunity to drop a little change into the tambourine, and by accident a bill or two finds its way into the same receptacle, do not despair for you have never invested a dollar in the cause of God and Humanity which will be expended, and there is no place where your dollar will do more good.

"Just about six years ago at this time, you will recall the American Army in France launched its first offensive, under its own officers and colors—The San Mihiel drive. So thorough had the preparations been, so intense had been the artillery barrage, that the infantry reached their objectives on the exact moment scheduled, and I have been informed many times by the infantry men who were there that no sooner had they taken their places in the line of the captured trenches, than they turned around to encounter the Salvation Army lasses, who were offering to the victors hot doughnuts and coffee, and this on ground which 30 minutes before had been undisputed enemy territory for nearly four years. They were asked to go, they were told to go, they simply supposed that in an offensive of this magnitude they might be needed and they went."

Col. Kerr went to France as a Captain in the regular army, and as such assisted in and was entirely familiar with the various American offensives, which so turned defeat into victory for the Allied Armies, and is therefore in position to know that this important work of the Salvation Army at the very front of the Army, was entirely voluntary, but very much appreciated by the soldiers as later demonstrations showed wherever the name of the Salvation Army was mentioned in regiment entertainments conducted for the soldiers while waiting for transports to come home. These demonstrations were so long and uproarious that commanding officers were required to stop them.

New Crop Pest Is Found In Michigan

The Japanese beetle, a crop pest introduced to this country from the Orient about a dozen years ago and confined so far to restricted areas along the eastern coast, has been reported in Michigan, individuals having been found in Washtenaw and Lenawee counties by Mr. M. E. Lockwood, of Tecumseh.

One of the insects was identified last week by Prof. R. H. Pettit, head of the M. A. C. entomology department, as a "true" Japanese beetle. and as a result state and federal authorities are starting a careful investigation to determine whether or not the dangerous crop pest has really been established in the state.

The Japanese beetle "work" on many different crops, being capable of inflicted severe losses. Fruits, vegetables and field crops are included in the list of plants upon which it feeds. For several years the beetle was confined in this country to sections of New Jersey. It has also been reported in Pennsylvania, while the recent Michigan report is the first from a western state.

Authorities of the U. S. depart. ment of agriculture who are working on the Japanese beetle problem have been notified by Professor Pettit of the Michigan occurence and one of the beetles has been sent east for positive identification An investigation by federal authorities will undoubtedly follow, it is said, with prompt steps to prevent the spread of the beetle, if it is found to be established here.

Shortage of Good Corn

In this section of Michigan there is a feeling among farmers that their corn crop will be a failure this fall on account of so late planting and the backwardness of the season. The Agricultural College at Lansing is sending out instructions to farmers to be careful about the hard matured last year's crop which they have in the cribs. They are especially warned to go slow in selling this corn out of the crib, and to pick out all ears anyways suitable for seed and store them in readiness for next spring's planting should the present crop fail to mature which it will not do if the fall holds off and frost does not come too soon. But indications are that early frosts this fall will ruin the crop before it has a chance to mature.

Hillsdale county corn fields look far better than any in the surrounding counties. Further east in Monroe and Lenawee the corn crop is now so small there is absolutely no chance for it to mature and and there will be a serious shortage of seed without doubt.

Those who have a supply of hard last year's corn are indeed fortunate, and they would be extremely foolish to let go of it at this time of uncertainity concerning next year's supply.

In making a journey of more than one hundred miles in southeastern Michigan the writer saw only one or two fields of corn that looked like it would become ripe before the early frosts would catch it. Buckwheat in this section is very small in acreage and the supply will be limited. Winter apples as a rule are totally absent and plums, pears and other small fruits are very abundant. Peaches are a failure as they have been for some years past.

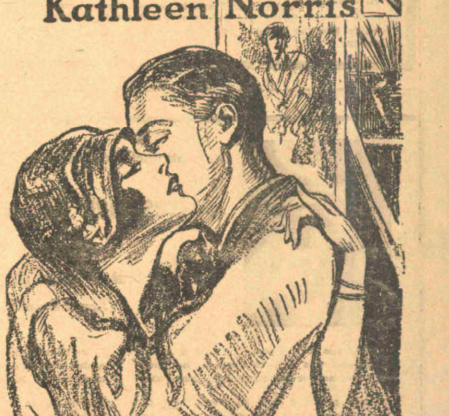
JOSSELYN'S WIFE

by

Kathleen Norris



ALTHOUGH it deals with some of the interesting problems of married life, it is not, strictly speaking, a problem novel. It is first of all an absorbing story, with characters very much alive, natural and appealing.

Since dramatic incidents come into the lives of all natural, everyday folks—probably more tensely dramatic than those experienced by the more artificial class—this story will have a keen interest for a majority of men and women of today. The author has given it the stirring qualities and the elements of heart-interest for which her books are famous.

WHY BANKS?

LESSON XI

By J. H. PUELICHER, Chairman
Public Education Commission, American Bankers Association.

J. H. Puelicher

To be favorably known at a bank is a business advantage. Banks aim to deal with honest people only. How does one become known at a bank for purposes of doing business with it? "One must be identified," says the banker.

IDENTIFICATION=More than presenting oneself at a bank and saying "I am John Smith." Some one known to the banker must say, for instance, "This is John Smith. He is honest and dependable." Then the bank will do business with him.

Why cannot a bank do business with an unidentified person? Because, if an unknown man gets money from a banker on a check payable to "John Smith" and he be not the particular "John Smith" entitled to cash that check, the bank would probably lose the money. To be known at a bank is a business necessity.

A Staunch Supporter of President Coolidge

ongressman Arthur B. Williams

Candidate for

enomination at Primary Election, September 9th

(Republican Ticket)

A year ago it was predicted that if Arthur B. Williams was sent to Congress he would take high place for aggressive, intelligent action.

It was predicted that he would hold the Third Congressional District in prominent attention for its influence in national affairs.

It was said that he would be the representative of ALL the people, equally and fairly.

These predictions have been fulfilled.

Congressman Williams has made a record for constructive, impartial service in the short time he has served. He has secured much favorable comment for the district. He has been the ready servant at Washington of all people within the district.

He is a member of the special joint legislative committee created to protect the Government's interest, amounting to 50 million dollars or more, in the great Northern Pacific land grant controversy.

He was chairman of the sub-committee which drafted the amendments to the banking laws and the federal reserve act—one of the important legislative measures now pending.

His close study of the farm question was followed by his preparation of the Williams Bill for cooperative marketing of farm products. This bill has been widely quoted and indorsed by farm leaders, economists and business men as a program to aid farming interests throughout the nation. This bill was made the basis of the agricultural recommendations in the Republican National Platform.

Congressman Williams has consistently supported the important measures for prohibition enforcement, tax-reduction, restricted immigration, civil-service betterment, the child labor amendment.

He favors the abolishment of tax-exempt securities.

He supports an efficient merchant-marine to aid in building and retaining American foreign markets.

He is energetically for the proposed St Lawrence waterway.

He is a member of the roads committee and is for the Government road-building program.

He is for the vigorous and impartial prosecution, punishment and elimination of all corruption in Government service.

He is for sanity and sound sense in Government business and against hazy theories and impossible promises.

He is steadfastly for the Coolidge program and the Coolidge purpose in National administration.

By training, by experience and by his proved record of service he will continue to serve the district ably and well at Washington.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

Pertaining To The Primaries

We hear much about the necessity of voting at the Primaries, and this article is to help interest all our readers in this high duty.

Primary elections are to be con, ducted and regulated as near as may be in every particular as prescribed by law for the regulation and conduct of general elections. All expenses of a Primary are defrayed from the same funds from which general elections are paid.

Primary election means an election for the purpose of deciding by ballot who shall be the nominee of political parties for certain offices, or for the election by ballot of delegates to political conventions. A qualified elector is one who is qualified under the general election law to vote for a member of the legislature in this state. Only qualified electors can vote.

A general Primary election for all political parties shall be held in every election precinct in this state on the second Tuesday in September preceding every general election, at which time registered and qualified voters of each political party shall vote for party candidates for the office of Governor, Lieutenant Governor, and United States Senator. In every congressional district in this state there shall also be nominaied at the September primary a party candidate for representative in Congress In every senatorial district a party candidate or candidates as the case may de, for representative in the state legislature.

In every county in this state there shall be nominated party candidates for the county offices to be voted for at the November election. Cities having a population of 70,000 or more, and counties whose elections are held in April may make nominations at a primary which shall be held the first Wednesday in March preceding any April election. Cities having less than 70,000 population shall make their nominations for the November election at the September primary.

When there is only one candidate each for the various offices, the primary need not be held. Delgates for the political party conventions are to be elected at the September primaries.

Voting at the primaries is done under a party name. One may vote the party chosen, but cannot divide a vote between parties. The ballots shall, however, be prepared in such a manner that the voters of each political party may write print or paste the name of a candidate thereon. It is unlawful for any person directly or indirectly to distribute slips, or pasters, or to attempt to induce any person to vote or refrain from voting in a particular way, in any polling place or within one hundred feet thereof.

No candidate shall have his name printed upon any official primary election ballot of any political party in any voting precinet of this state unless he has filed nomination petitions. These petitions must have the names of registered and qualified voters equal to not less than two percent nor more than 4 percent of the number of votes that such political party cast for secretary of state at the last preceding November election. No voter may sign more than one such petition for the same office, except where there are two or more candidates to be nominated, when he may sign as many petitions as there are persons to be elected to such office.

All petitions for the September primaries must be filed with the proper authorities by four o'clock standard time, in the afternoon of the thirty first day preceding the date of the primary.

There are many other interesting points, and a study cf our state election laws would be helpful. Send a postal card to Secretary of State, Lansing, Mich., and ask him for a copy.

The Political Dope Patch

It is comical and at the same time aggravating to read the class of literature being broadcasted throughout the state of Michigan by the various political clubs working for opposed candidates in the primaries. A novice after reading these circulars on both sides of the question, would likely be so completely undecided as to what he ought to vote for and who, that he would give it up in disgust and go to sleep. Herb Bakers publicity man has gotten busy and covered this section with stuff telling the voter what a bad man is Governor Groesbeck to return to office. Baker's dodgers claim Groesbeck is an anti gas tax man right from the start and that he never has changed, also that his administration has cost Michigan a tremendous sum of money and it has. But when we stop to consider that Michigan's people have been howling long and loud for thirty years for good roads and now they are getting them the accusation looks paler than a September morn in January. Groesbeck is the first governor to give the public a chance to ride on concrete highways, and is in no way blamable for ways contractors have stung the tax payers in the building of these highways.

The governor has done his level best to settle on some system by which good roads can be built for what they are really worth, without greasing the palms of contractors, aud the fact is, the system is now coming to a focus, so that if the same tactics should be followed for another term he would have the labor performed by convicts from Jackson prison who otherwise might sit idly in cells hatching up schemes of escape. Groesbeck is credited with securing a municipal cement planr at Chelsea which can furnish our cement at rock-bottom prices minus the mnnufacturer's profit. In a short time matters will be so arranged that we will ride on good concrete roads without paying fwice for them, as we have been compelled to do during the past five years under the contract system.

Certain other candidates from senator's jobs down to county sheriff want to tell you about the faults of the other fellow who has been in office until you are really tired of it all and wish to be transported to some realm where officials are automatically elected, and where the polttical bug stingeth not,

If political junk can be brought to bear on the voting public, they can be codded into voting for certain candidates but it is usually discovered that after election the whole bnnch of weuld-bes are of the same stamp and things will remain about the same as before.

JOSSELYN'S WIFE

THE STEPMOTHER

—2—

All the way up in the train she was busy identifying the various groups about her, as either being bound for the Rose house party, or being unworthy of that classification. Ellen was so excited by this time that she could not breathe naturally; her cheeks were blazing, and her heart beat fast. With her little new suitcase she got down from the train in a sort of joyous panic of expectation. The Roses' chauffeur made himself known and Ellen, a gray-haired, elderly man and an exceptionally handsome and self-possessed young woman all got into the limousine. Ellen imagined the pair to be father and daughter, and thought it would be romantic to be rich and travel abroad with an adoring father.

The lady looked at her amiably enough, but did not speak. Presently they turned in at a snow-powdered gate and could see a splendid stone mansion, lying along a hillside draped in bare vines, but with heartening smoke arising from a dozen chimneys.

They all went up the stone steps, and were admitted to an enormous warm hall, where fires and tables and rich rugs and great bowls of flowers all were jumbled together before her confused senses. Here was Mrs. Rose, magnificent and distrait, murmuring that the children were about somewhere; perhaps they had gone out, giving a maid directions in an aside, and looking a little blankly at Ellen until the girl reminded her brightly: "It's Ellen Latimer!"

"Well, of course it is, you dear child," she said then, with a warming kiss, "and you came up in the car with Mr. and Mrs. Josselyn. Tom, this is a little friend of mine, Miss Latimer; and this is Mr. and Mrs. Josselyn, Ellen. I hope you all talked to each other?"

Ellen was just going to say, "We weren't introduced," but the young and beautiful Mrs. Josselyn spoke first, with a sort of pretty languor, "I always talk, on all occasions!" and then they all laughed. Ellen knew, suddenly, that the two women did not know each other very well, and that the man was quite at home in this house.

"Where'd you put us, Abby?" he asked. "Don't come up; I know my way about."

"I've got to go up," Mrs. Rose said, interrupting a low-toned conversation she was having with an elderly maid. "I declare," she went on, mounting a dark, carved stairway that was spread with rugs, ornamented with potted palms, and lighted with a stained-glass window, "I declare, I get perfectly frantic sometimes, when the children have these affairs. Arthur brought down four boys from Harvard on Wednesday, and Lucia—presumably not out yet, if you please—all I can say is, that I don't expect to live through it until she is out—and it's rush to this, and rush to that—I don't know what they're doing now—"

Ellen perceived that the matron was really deeply enjoying the responsibility and confusion, and the strain on meals and beds. They went upstairs now, and had left the Josselyns at the door of a delightful room.

"Which explains," said Mrs. Rose, "why I've tucked you in here, on a couch in my sewing room, my dear. You needn't hesitate to come in and out, for Mr. Rose is up at Great Barrington, for the golf."

"It's lovely," Ellen smiled. "It's a perfectly wonderful house," she added bashfully.

"It's comfortable," Mrs. Rose said carelessly. "Josselyn did it." And with a sudden twinkle she added: "How did you like the bride and groom?"

"I thought they were father and daughter!"

"Every one does. I've known Tom Josselyn all my life; we knew his first wife well. She only died a year ago, and ten months later he married this—Lillian Keeler. Nobody knows anything about her. Doris Potter—you'll meet her tonight—says that she was a model for Madame Yvonne, but I don't believe it. Young Gibbs Josselyn, the son—one of the dearest fellows that ever lived—has never gotten over it. Tom Josselyn is sixty-five, you know, and she's twenty-eight. He broke with his father the day he heard the news, hasn't seen him since. He was in the firm, too. I guess the old man felt it pretty much. Now I hear that Giggs is going to study painting—he's a gifted fellow. Well! now I'll leave you. Brush up a little, and then come down and have tea."

It was just like an English house party in a novel. Ellen smoothed her hair, and put on the gray velvet dress with the fresh frills, and went down to the library in a tremor of happiness. She was early, and had time to enjoy a book of photographs and a fire before her hostess came down. Then the Josselyns came, and an old aunt of Mrs. Rose, and two friends of the aunt, paying a tea-call. Ellen was much the youngest, and Mrs. Rose enchanted her by letting her pass sandwiches and toast, and bring back the cups for more tea. It was a wonderful hour.

She was able to see now how really beautiful young Mrs. Josselyn was. Her golden brown hair was wound carelessly in glorious waves and coils above her white forehead, and her white hand, heavily ringed, lay against the dark wood of the chair-arm with all the pure beauty of alabaster. She sometimes raised her glittering eyelashes, brown eyelashes with a hint of gold in them, to smile lazily at her husband, but for the most part she was inert, making no effort to be more than a lovely picture.

Mrs. Rose asked her about Paris, and she answered casually. Ellen did not know that she was trying to make the older woman think that travel, wealth and the free purchase of gowns and jewels were but an ordinary part of the day's work to Lillian Keeler. Ellen was deeply interested and even thrilled by their talk. Her loyalty and affection were bound to Mrs. Rose; she decided that young Mrs. Josselyn was not a gentlewoman. All those blazing jewels at informal tea!

A great-grandfather's clock in the dimness of the room boomed half-past five. And with a cold and joyous rush, the youngsters came in for their tea.

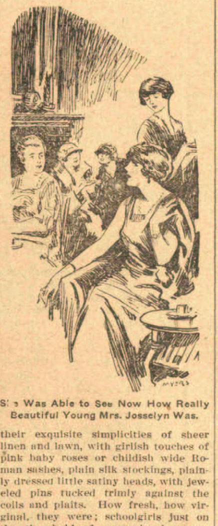
That was Ellen Latimer's last happy minute in the Rose house. The little velvet dress did not fall from her as the clock struck, but she would have been happier running away from them all into the night, bare of feet and hair, and in her shabbiest kitchen dress, than she was to be here, in all their luxury and warmth.

They were introduced, and they nodded, flinging furs and wraps into the arms of silent, patient, waiting maids. Ellen marveled at their sports-clothes, the soft Swiss coats, the smart, shaggy little caps, the velvet skirts with their big buttons, the silk blouses so immaculately white. Lucia was not pretty, but how smart she was, and how she chattered! Doris was pretty, and everything else that Ellen would have liked to be as well. The five boys were all quite young, fresh-faced, well-groomed, superficially poised in spite of their youthful clumsiness. There were nine of them, altogether. They talked only to each other, in a sort of running fire of growling and tittering and laughing. It was impossible for an outsider to follow their conversation, and even when the older people had drifted away, and Ellen was left with them, they made no concessions for her.

Oh, what a fool she was to come here at all, she thought, undressing late that night. And how she hated them all! They felt her unwelcome, and shabby, and different, and the bitter thing was that Ellen knew that they were right. She could not speak their language, nor understand them when they spoke; her little attempts at merriment fell flat, her best gown was not as smart as their simplest sporting outfit. She had gone downstairs timidly, in the fussy little lace dress, to have them presently follow in their exquisite simplicities of sheer linen and lawn, with girlish touches of pink baby roses or childish wide Roman sashes, plain silk stockings, plainly dressed little satiny heads, with jeweled pins tucked trimly against the coils and plaits. How fresh, how virginal, they were; schoolgirls just on the threshold of womanhood, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen! Ellen's twenty-two years seemed suddenly grimy and gray. A sense of injustice seized her. She had never been as young and sweet and confident as they were!



She Was Able to See Now How Really Beautiful Young Mrs. Josselyn Was.

They were all in love with life, and with each other; it was a pity that they could not spare a little love for Ellen, too. But Dorothy complimented Lucia, and Lucia, Doris, and Doris in turn told Mary that she looked adorable. No one of them gave to Ellen the word for which she hungered, or, better than praise, made the slightest effort to bring her into the group, gave her any reason to believe that with eyes like hers, and cheeks like hers, the lace gown mattered not at all.

The elaborate dinner was served, and the young people began to dance. Then Ellen slipped upstairs, equally, unable to review the events of the day, or to anticipate those of tomorrow, with any equanimity. There would be a big dance tomorrow night, and a ride to the "Red Lion" for lunch. Ellen did not ride. Well, she would go with old Mr. Josselyn and Mrs. Rose in the closed car. Unless she had a wire from Aunt Elsie saying that Grandpa was dead—ah, if only she might!

But Grandpa was far from death, and Saturday had to be endured. It was all worse than Ellen's fears. Mrs. Rose was not going on the ride, after all; she and the aunt and the Josselyns were going to play bridge. Lucia unbent from her indifference long enough to urge Ellen to try to ride. But Ellen, although she was eager to dare it, did not like to risk the danger of making herself absurd on a horse.

There was another choice, but that, too, Ellen did not see until long afterward. She might simply have pleaded indisposition, have begged to be left quietly at home, and so have watched the bridge, which interested her, and have had another pleasant tea-hour.

But instead she let Lucia separate herself from her friends to drive the funny girl from Long Island in a small roadster. The roads were heavy, but Ellen knew nothing of cars, and did not know that really difficult driving was angering the already exasperated Lucia. For perhaps fifteen minutes out of the long two hours the girls talked naturally.

They reached the "Red Lion" an hour after the others, and immediately had a large and noisy lunch in a sort of club lunchroom, with stags' antlers and bearskins, a roaring open fire, and exposed rafters of dark wood to give a rustic effect. After lunch skis were brought out, and Ellen was dragged several cold miles on a sort of combination walk, scramble, slide, and skate. The boy called "Red" drove her silently home; he had had a good many cocktails before and after the walk, and drove recklessly.

They got home none too early to dress for the dance, an experience that Ellen never forgot. The young guests in the house had been indifferent to her yesterday; today they actively disliked her, and she afforded them delicious material for laughter. No one asked her to dance; she might have been an invisible witness to the gayety, as she heartily wished herself, for any attention that was offered her. The girls, perfumed, powdered, laughing, pushed by her without a glance, and the boys, gathering eagerly about them, saw her as little. At twenty minutes to one Ellen found herself watching the bridge game. Mrs. Rose was playing with Mr. Josselyn, and it was evident that the luck was running against them.

"There's no bidding hands like these! I declare I never saw anything like it!"

"I suppose we can't start another—we said we would stop at one," young Mrs. Josselyn smiled. Ellen saw Mrs. Rose give her a venomous look as the jeweled hands tumbled the cards idly, and the army man earnestly and quickly added the various scores.

"I'm going upstairs, now," Ellen put in shyly. "I am—a sort of a headache—I think I'd really better! And Mrs. Rose, will you tell me about trains tomorrow—I think I had better—Aunt Elsie expects me—"

She had nerved herself for opposition, but Mrs. Rose made none.

"I'm sorry you can't stay," she said. "Better stay and have a little more good time. Auntie will forgive you! Anyway, come down and have some supper now!"

But Ellen murmured of her headache again. She slipped upstairs. And, once in the safety of her own room, she began to undress automatically, with scarlet cheeks and a heaving breast. They had been rude to her, they had been rude to her! She had only wanted to be innocently happy, she had only asked that they be reasonably kind, and they had turned her world upside down, and scarred the old happy confidence forever!

In Mrs. Rose's room, beyond the bathroom, a fire was burning, and Ellen went in to it, and sat down. Huddled in her wrapper, she was dreaming over the coals, when the door was pushed open, and she turned with a smile, expecting to see her hostess.

But it was young Mrs. Josselyn who came in, wrapped in a splendid oriental robe, and with her thick, soft brown hair hanging in a loose coil between her shoulders.

"I saw the door open," said she, dropping into the chair opposite Ellen. "I'm tired to death, but I don't feel like going to bed!"

She stretched her slippered feet to the blaze, locked her hands behind her head, and yawned, as unselfconscious as a cat. Ellen studied the lovely white arms, the smooth low forehead from which the hair was swept, the dropped bronze eyelashes. She dared not open a conversation, and risk another snub.

The other woman took a framed picture from the table, studied it for a few minutes, and again moved her eyes slowly to Ellen.

"So you've been having a perfectly rotten time?"

Ellen laughed nervously.

"Why, no, I couldn't say that!"

"I suspected it, the way you hung around the card table," said young Mrs. Josselyn, frankly. She extended the picture she held to Ellen. "Know him?" she asked briefly.

Ellen shook her head. She looked at the face of a young man, thin, earnest of mouth and jaw, keen of eye. Even in the picture she could see that the thick crest of hair was gray, and even in the picture the handsome face showed character and power. At one corner, in a small square hand, was written: "To Lucia's Mother, from T. G. J., Jr."

"He's not spoken to his father since our marriage," Mrs. Josselyn said, dispassionately. "I've never met him. He's good looking—"

She stared silently for several moments at the face of her unknown stepson before replacing the silver frame upon the crowded table behind her. Ellen, whose sense of the romantic had been touched by this situation, looked at her with new interest. Mrs. Josselyn, again stretching her lithe body with luxurious pleasure, apparently dismissed the subject from her mind, for when she spoke again, it was of Ellen.

"So you've had a nasty time, and they treated you badly?" she said ruminatingly. "Well, that's your fault, my dear. You mustn't try to play their game; they'll have you there. Make them play yours!"

"Easier said than done!" Ellen said, sensitive and girlish.

"Tell 'em you hate walks, and you think they're all silly. Tell 'em you won't dance until you feel like it—they'll fall for anything! I'm going to bed—good-night!" she said sleepily, and was gone.

CHAPTER III

The morning came with glorious winter sunlight, and Ellen Latimer, turning luxuriously under her warm soft blankets, stared blankly at a clock that was rapidly moving toward nine o'clock. They must all have had breakfast by this time—evidently nobody cared whether she was alive or dead.

Ellen had had a white night, one of the few in her experience. For long hours she had lain awake, thinking soberly about the events of the past two days, and, quite unconsciously, assimilating their bitter lesson.

These girls were not better than she, not wiser, not really happier. But their circumstances were utterly different, and it was Ellen who was to blame, not they, for trying to bridge the gulf between their lives. She still had her good home, her own admiring and affectionate group, her books to read by the fire, her garden to dream over in the spring, and the swimming and boating and tennis that absorbed all youthful Port Washington from June to October. Lucia and Doris were not real, and Ellen's life dealt only with what was practical and sane. One might sigh for the prettiness, the gayety, the irresponsibility, of Lucia's life, one's face might burn because this pretty butterfly could be so triumphantly rude, and so self-centered, but it was wiser to forget it all, or remembering, remember, too, that the dainty superfluities were a mere accident of income. Ellen Latimer would have something that Lucia Torrey might envy some day, and through no accident of birth.

The breakfast room was deserted. Ellen was the first of all the household to appear. She smiled over her carefully served courses, and presently was hanging absorbed over a jig-saw puzzle that had been scattered upon one of the library tables the day before. Her train went at half-past eleven, it was not yet ten o'clock.

As the young people straggled downstairs she looked up to nod at them composedly. She presently went quietly upstairs to pack, and pinned on the fur-trimmed hat, and fastened a little clump of fresh violets, from a vase, against the sober litttle suit. It was only goodby now, and the whole experience was over.

"The limousine's coming 'round, dear," Mrs. Rose said. They stepped out to the stone veranda that Ellen had crossed with such high hopes two days ago, and looked down upon a panorama of scattered homes and gardens powdered with the light snow and washed with brilliant sunshine; stone fences, brick fences, clean-swept driveways, everything shining and prosperous in a bath of Sunday peace.

Ellen began her thanks and goodbys. "Don't say one word, dearie," said kindly Mrs. Rose, "I'm only sorry you have to go." Her eyes suddenly were fixed upon the gate, and Ellen, turning, too, saw a low-hung, powerfully built roadster turn in, and come quickly up the drive. "Now, who's that?" wondered the older woman, discontentedly eyeing the two furred men who occupied the car. "I never sit down to a game of—why, it's Ward! It's my husband and Gibbs Josselyn!" She turned agitatedly to Ellen. "For heaven's sake, what shall I do?"

Ellen, aware of an emergency, had yet not at all grasped the situation when the two men came laughing up the steps, and greeted her hostess. Mrs. Rose dazedly kissed the small, gray-haired man who was her husband, and dazedly introduced Ellen

"Ward, this is Nellie Buckley's girl you've heard me talk about, and Miss Latimer—Mr. Josselyn," she said.

Nothing heavenly about the first taste of high life. But how about the next?

Many Countries Supply England With Oranges

We seldom stop to think in England what a wonderful and delicious fruit the orange is. Its "family tree" includes the lemon, the citrus, and the lime, and the first oranges seem to have come from India.

They came to this cold country by way of south Italy, Spain and Portugal, and until recent times, when millions of boxes reach us from California and Queensland, our main supply came from the south of Europe.

The sight of a Queensland or California orange ranch is one to remember, for the orange tree bears blossom and fruit simultaneously. In Europe, where orange growing is an ancient industry, trees are to be seen whose age is reckoned by centuries. The up-to-date colonial orange grower clears his old trees out as soon as they begin to fail and puts young trees in their place.

Many thousands of boxes of oranges arrive at the London docks not only from the countries already mentioned, but from the Azores, the West Indies, Tangier, Malta, Brazil and many other tropical and subtropical lands, says London Tit-Bits. There are nearly a hundred different varieties of orange, of which the navel orange is the pick. It is one of the triumphs of orange growers that they have evolved a fruit which is seedless.

One of America's most thoughtful women is Rose Stokes who has devoted most of her life time to anti war activities. A few years ago, Mrs. Stokes delivered an address dealing with conditions in Russia and the next day a large number of leading American newspapers reported that Mrs. Stokes had favored a bloody revolution in this country. Those who heard the address denied these charges in detail but the big papers still continued to persecute Mrs. Stokes and finally succeeded by their untruths to convince the government that Mrs. Stokes was a dangerous character, with the result that she was sentenced to jail for ten years.

Account Was There, But Not Much Else

President Ernest Frothingham, of the Commercial Trust company, said at a bankers' banquet in Denver:

"We bankers are often called heartless. You remember the story of the dead shot who, having failed to kill his man at point blank range, explained that he shot four times at the fellow's heart, not knowing he was a banker.

"Bankers, as a matter of fact, are altogether too kindly and indulgent. A young clubman went to a tailor the other day and ordered a dozen suits of clothes on credit. The tailor asked for a reference.

"'Oh,' said the young clubman, 'go over to the Third National bank people. They know all about me. I have an account there.'

"So the tailor went over to the bank and said to the cashier:

"'I understand that young Mr. Cromwell keeps his account here.'

"'He does,' said the cashier, 'but goodness knows where he keeps his money.'"—Detroit Free Press.

Growing Jute in Africa

Attempts have recently been made to introduce jute culture into South Africa, and tests made on a farm located near Hekorspruit, Transvaal, on the railroad between Johannesburg and the Portuguese East African border, have shown that it is practicable to raise this crop. It is capable of cultivation in almost any soil, but is most profitable in loamy or rich clay soil mixed with sand.

Don't chuckle if you put over a substitute when an advertised product is called for. Maybe your customer will never come back.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Two Chinese Armies Begin a Big Battle Near Shanghai —Dawes Plan Operating.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

TWO Chinese armies, each about 100,000 strong, met in battle along a 30-mile front a few miles from Shanghai toward the close of last week. At this writing it is not known whether either side obtained any decisive advantage, and no reports of the casualties have been received. Communication with the field of action, except for troops and military equipment, is almost nil.

The United States, Great Britain, France, Japan and Italy all have warships in the Shanghai harbor and numerous marines have been landed for the protection of their nationals. The Americans are especially guarding the essential public utilities, such as the water and light plants. It was not believed the foreigners in the city, who number about 20,000, are in serious peril unless one side or the other begins airplane bombing. Both armies have planes. Foreign residents of the suburbs were told to move into the city if hostilities were extended in their direction. The line of battle extended from the Yangste river to Lake Taiho, the main struggle being along the Shanghai-Nanking railway near Hwangtu.

Commanding the rival armies are Gen. Chi Hsieh Yuan, tuchun of Kiang-Su, and Gen. Lu Hung-Hsiang, tuchun of Chekiang. Wu Pei Fu, the Chihli chieftain, would like to send aid to the former, but it may be that Chang Tso-lin, war lord of Manchuria, will prevent this by threatening Peking. It is said Chang is mobilizing his troops along the Great Wall. President Sun of the southern republic also may send help to the Chekiang governor, for he has made peace with the merchants of Canton. Wu seeks to bring both Chekiang province and Dr. Sun's district under his full control.

WITH the formal signing of the London agreement by the allies and Germany the Dawes plan went into actual operation and all but the confirmed pessimists believe the regeneration of Europe really is now under way. Germany made the initial payment of $5,000,000 under the plan, and the reparations commission confirmed the appointment of Seymour Parker Gilbert, former undersecretary of the American Treasury department, to be permanent agent general of reparations. This man who thus becomes virtually the economic dictator of Europe, is only thirty-one years old, but he has the confidence and the backing of Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, J. Pierpont Morgan and other leading statesmen and financiers. What his compensation will be has not been decided, but it will be ample. Owen D. Young and Rufus Dawes are in Berlin to help through the transition period, which will be until the reparations commission announces that the Dawes plan laws are being executed.

The loan of $200,000,000 to Germany, provided for by the Dawes report, will be offered on October 15 simultaneously in London, New York, Berlin, Amsterdam, Zurich and Madrid. The share allotted to America is $100,000,000, and that of Great Britain is $80,000,000. The interest rate is fixed at 8 per cent.

Orders were issued by the French government for starting the evacuation of certain parts of the Ruhr and the Rhineland, especially the Dortmund area. It was believed the troops would leave in the night time secretly in order to prevent demonstrations by the citizens which might result in conflicts.

PRIME MINISTER MACDONALD of Great Britain, in a slashing speech before the League of Nations assembly in Geneva, knocked into a cocked hat France's pet plan of a military security pact, and was so heartily applauded by a majority of the delegates that it was incumbent upon the French delegation to accept his suggestion, which was that the whole question of security and disarmament be referred to a new committee. This probably will shelve the problem until the time when the powers feel it will be safe to reduce their armies and navies independently, and it also means that France must admit that security is no longer the main issue and cannot be obtained by military alliances. MacDonald declared the league covenant provides arbitration, sanctions if necessary, and all other eventualities in times of crisis, and said the British government stands by the covenant. To provide security, he said, the league must include Germany and Russia.

Dr. Giuseppe Motta, former president of the Swiss confederation, is presiding over the deliberations of the league assembly. He, too, insists that Germany should be admitted to membership, and says arbitration should supersede the imposition of the will of the victors on the vanquished.

The league invited the United States to accept representation in the third commission of the league, dealing with the traffic in arms and ammunition and also with the general topic of security and disarmament, but the government sent, through Minister Gibson, a reply declining the invitation, stating that its views on the arms traffic already had been made known. The State department said America was "disposed to give favorable consideration to an invitation to participate in an appropriate international conference on this subject."

DISPATCHES from London say that negotiations which have been going on secretly for several weeks have resulted in a plan by which Ulster may be brought into the Irish Free State without sacrificing its autonomy, thus settling peaceably the vexing boundary question. It is approved by the governments of the Free State and Great Britain and is said to be considered sympathetically by Sir James Craig, premier of Ulster. The scheme provides that the original nine counties of Ulster shall be under a northern parliament and a northern executive as regards all matters comprised in the government of Ireland.

HERRIN, the bloodiest spot in Illinois, is again occupied by state troops—or was last week—because of another riot between the Ku Klux klan and its opponents in which six men were killed and a number wounded. Sheriff Galligan led the anti-klan force in the gun battle and his crowd suffered the most. The trouble started when the states attorney nolle prossed charges against Carl and Earl Shelton who had been accused of murdering Constable Cagle, klansman, in a fight last February. Armed members of the klan and of the rival organization, the Flaming Circle, flocked to Herrin from the surrounding country and several companies of the National Guard were sent to keep order. Their commander persuaded the leaders of the factions to agree to a truce, and meanwhile numerous arrests were made on both sides.

FLITTING last week from Greenland to Labrador, thence to Newfoundland and to Nova Scotia, the American army flyers at the close of the week took their last jump over foreign soil and water and landed at Boston, where they were given a tremendous welcoming ovation. Returning with them from Nova Scotia were Lieutenants Wade and Ogden in a new plane replacing the one they lost on the hop to Iceland. The transcontinental trip to the Pacific coast, which will complete their journey around the globe, will be a veritable triumphal procession.

H. R. H. the prince of Wales seems to be having a jolly time on Long island, despite the fact that the reporters and the curious public somewhat hamper his movements by their watchfulness. He has been taking part in the practice polo games; saw Epinard, the French horse, lose to Wise Counsellor, the American, in the first international race at Belmont Park; attended many dinners, breakfasts and other functions and dodged others, and spent several nights dancing with the members of the younger set. He certainly is not losing any of his popularity by his actions.

ATLEE POMERENE and Owen J. Roberts, the two special counsel for the government in the oil cases, have begun before the federal grand jury in Washington a new investigation growing out of the oil scandals. The scope of the inquiry is not revealed, but subpoenas that were issued for witnesses bore the title "United States vs. Albert B. Fall." It is believed the inquiry has to do with some phase of the oil lease case which was not brought out in the senate committee's investigation. The trial of the Teapot Dome case in Cheyenne, Wyo., has been set for October 7.

WHAT President Coolidge thinks of the Ku Klux klan is embodied in a message transmitted from the White House to Joseph Branin, editor of a newspaper syndicate. Secretary Slemp wrote:

"Complying with your request of August 21, I am sending you on behalf of the President a message which the President has authorized for the Jewish New Year.

"As to the other matters touched upon in your communication I am authorized to say that the President is aware of the many annoying difficulties in connection with the administration of the immigration law, and he is decidedly in favor of every possible effort to humanize the law and its administration.

"Concerning the Ku Klux klan, the President has repeatedly stated that he is not a member of the order and is not in sympathy with its aims and purposes.

"As to Zionism, the rebuilding of Palestine as the Jewish national homeland, the President has repeatedly given his most hearty indorsement to this movement and expressed his wishes for its success."

The President also has let it be known that he favors a revision of the labor provisions of the transportation act and believes railway managements and employees should get together on a plan for such modification. He touched on this matter in a speech delivered on Labor day to a group of more than 100 labor leaders who called at the White House to pledge him their support.

Senator LaFollette took advantage of Labor day to open his speaking campaign with a radio address. He promised, if elected, to rescue the people of the nation from the clutches of the great monopolies as he did those of Wisconsin when he was elected governor. He denied that his movement is "bent on radical and destructive ends, subversive of the government and of the Constitution."

John W. Davis, Democratic Presidential candidate, spent two days in Chicago conferring with his managers there, but making no public appearances. He then went on to Omaha and Denver to make some addresses, which will be followed by others in Missouri and Iowa. He has been receiving many reports of conditions in the Middle West which lead him to believe he has at least as good a chance to capture the farmer vote as either Coolidge or LaFollette.

Wisconsin Republicans renominated Governor Blaine, backed by the indorsement of LaFollette, by a huge plurality, and the rest of the LaFollette-Republican aspirants were also successful except in the Milwaukee district now represented by Congressman Berger, Socialist. Ten members of the state's delegation in congress, all LaFollette supporters, were re-nominated.

THREE well-known sportsmen were killed in accidents last week. Joe Boyer, automobile racer, sacrificed his life to save spectators at the Altoona speedway. Dario Resta of Italy, who won many trophies on American tracks, was instantly killed at Brooklands, England, while trying for a new record. Edward F. Geers, dean of American harness drivers and known for many years as "Pop," met death in a race at Wheeling, W. Va., when his mare, Miladi Guy, stumbled and fell.

Maria Thompson Daviess, who won considerable fame as a novelist and was also an artist and dramatist, died suddenly in her residence in New York.

Two other noteworthy deaths of the week were those of H. J. Case, inventor of threshing machinery, and of Lieut. Gen. S. P. M. Young, U. S. A. retired, who gained honors in the Civil war and in the Philippines.

Archeologists Asked to Investigate Relics

Visalia, Cal.—Archeologists of the University of California are to be invited by W. H. Hart, a pioneer resident of Woodlake, Tulare county, to go with him into the Eshom valley country in the high Sierras, to inspect a discovery which the mountaineer believes indicates that some unknown race preceded even the Indians in that country.

Pending the visit of scientists, Hart has told few people of the location of his find.

In the heavily wooded and rocky section within walking distance of General Grant National park, Hart says he uncovered a considerable deposit of flint entirely unknown to Tulare county mountains.

Five small stones resembling diamonds were picked up. Two of these Hart had tested by a jewel expert who, he says, pronounced them real diamonds of rare excellence. If they are real diamonds, Hart declares, they are the only ones ever found far back in the Sierra Nevada mountains and he believes they must have been brought into that section by some age old civilization.

Hart has lived for fifty-five years in these mountains, has made a study of the Indians who used to live there, their habits and customs. He is convinced they cannot be responsible for the articles he discovered.

The Ohio river drains an area of about 200,000 square miles.

Power at Mine Mouth

Mine-mouth power plants, about which much has recently been written, are only practicable where coal and condenser water occur side by side, says an article in Power, devoted to a description of one of the latest of these plants, that of the Penn Central Light and Power company, at Saxton, Pa. Coal is supplied from nearby semi-bituminous mines, while water is carried into the boilers from the Raystown branch of the Juniata river, which flows within a few hundred yards of the plant. The present development is 20,000 kilowatts, but conditions are favorable for expansion to four or five times that capacity.

Poor Man's Pride

So many men to whom the East side missionary had given money had expressed a preference for a certain lodging house that he wondered what constituted its particular attraction.

"It makes us feel self-respecting," said the men, when questioned.

So far as the mission worker could see, it was the typical cheap lodgng house, whose inducements to self-respect were not discernible to the ordinary eye. So he interviewed the manager.

"That's easy," replied the latter, and pointed to a sign above the desk:

John W. Payne formerly of the township of Somerset and a graduate of the North Adams high school in 1896, who has for several years, been a resident of Grayling where he is school commissioner of Crawford county, sends us the following communication concerning himself, clipped from the Grayling Avalanche:

"Saturday, July 26th, occurred the marriage of John W. Payne, county commissioner of schools and superintendent of the Frederick schools, and Miss Edith Shreve daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Orlo Shreve of Lovells. The ceremony was performed at the Methodist parsonage at Grayling, the pastor Rev. J. Herman Baughn, tying the knot.

For five years or more Mr. Payne has been the superintendent of the Frederick school, where he has made a fine record and for about four years has been our county commissioner of schools. As superintendent of the Frederick school he has steadily advanced the institution in an educvtional way that has been exceptionally successful. As much can be said of the work of Mr. Payne as school commissioner.

Mrs. Payne is a graduate of the Grayling schools and of late has been teacher in the Love school in Beever Creek township.

Mr. and Mrs. Payne spent the honeymoon at Niagara Falls returning by the way of Grand Rapids and Lansing. Both have the best wishes of their many friends and acquaintances.

M. A. C. Horses Win Again At Detroit

Horses from the M. A. C. herds continued their winnings last week at the Michigan State Fair, taking nearly twenty ribbons in the draft horse classes, while sheep and beef cattle also broke into the list of victors.

Pervenche, star of the college Belgian herd, was returned grand champion of the show again, duplicating her honors at Ohio two weeks ago. Leila, representing the M. A. C. Percherons, took the grand championship for her breed, while Range Line Phoenix, Belgian stallion, and several other individuals finished near the top.

The college Aberdeen Angus herd sire, Plumb Square and Level was senior and grand champion of the show, while other beef cattle and sheep. shown by the M. A. C. animal husbandry department, won a list of ribbons too lengthy to tabulate in detail.

The pick of the college herds will be entered at the great Chicago International Livestock Show late in the fall, representing Michigan against the best of the continent.

Educating Women Voters

Mrs. Orin T. Bolt of Muskegon Michigan, vice chairman of the Republican State Committee of the state in conference this week with Mrs. Alvin T. Hert, vice chairman of the Republican National Committee, forecasted a 100 per cent registration and vote for Republican women in the state of Michigan this fall. Mrs, Bolt came to headquarters to confer with Mrs. Hert and to report on the progress of organization in her state.

We have already organized the Republican women in 11 of the 13 congressional districts" declared Mrs. Bolt. "Miss Bina West, national committeewoman from Michigan, and I are devoting all our time to the organizing of women. I have left my home as early as four o'clock in the morning in order to keep a speaking engagement at some distant point in the state."

She announced the appointment of the following Congressional leaders: Second district, Miss Isabel Larwill Adrian; third district, Mrs Donald Osborn, Kalamazoo; fourth district, Mrs Lizzie Kakabeeke Benton Harbor; fifth district Mrs Sarah Ann Litscher Grand Rapids; sixth district, Mabel Baldwin Royal Oak; seventh district, Bina West, Port Huron; eighth district, Mrs H Colwell Ithaca; tenth district, Mrs Stella Roben, Big Rapids.

In Grand Rapids a number of women canvassers have been made notaries in order that they may register women at the time they make the house to house canvass. We are trying this plan wherever it is permissible and we find it very successful."

"In order that the Republican women of the state may become better informed regarding party issues. we are organizing a program committee made up of a representative from every congressional district. This committee is responsible for the compiling of campaign literature for distribution at county fairs, mass meetings and the like.

"Following a complete canvass of the Republican women of the state, we plan to divide the precincts into blocks, making the woman living in that area responsible to see that every Republican woman in her territory both registers and votes. It is by this method that we hope to accomplish a one hundred per cent registration and vote of the women."

The Light Proposition

The light proposition which was voted on last Monday would have made a great difference with the village affairs. inasmuch as it would put the town out of debt and out of worry, a condition which has bothered a good many of us since we decided to put in the Hudson electric current. It was contended at the time we hooked onto the Southern Michigan Lines that we should meet with difficulties such as failures of the current at times of stormy weather, etc., and it has proved correct. The fact of the case is, the instaling of a motor at the present time is not a safe preposition because we are not likely to receive the juice exactly as we need it. For any kind of plant which must run at specified times and which is depended upon to do heavy duty the Hudson current is hardly able at the present time to furnish power, but as Mr. Avis has said if our village lines are put in the best of shape and his other line is completed he will be in shape to guarantee a steady strong current night and day, and that is what we must have. It would cost in the neighborhood of two thousand dollars to put our village lines up in the best of shape, so that if the village were obliged to pay this expense themselves, with the indebtedness which they had assumed, the results would be disasterous to tax payers. While it is admitted that franchises are dangerous things, and no village is wise to tie themselves up for a period of twenty-five years, yet as the proposition looks today we are not able to say that it contains any joker whereby the village would lose out. Conditions may develop later on that might put the town in mighty bad, but we hope not.

There is a constant demand for electric current and if it can be furnished as cheaply as it has been it should be generally used. Mr. Avis tells us that the town is not paying him what it should—in other words he ought to have one third more users on the line, and the only question with us now is will such a situation cause him to raise the rates? There is a contract but there is also a chance to break any contract ever made if necessity compels—and we presume he could not nor would not continue to furnish juice to us at a losing rate.

The State Public Utilities Commission puts certain restrictions on corporations in the electric business, but it does not specify that any company must continue to do business at a loss, if it can be made to appear such is the case. There are many good reasons why the lines in North Adams should be owned by a foreign corporation and a few important reasons why they should not—pay your money and take your choice.

Five thousand from Hillsdale and Lenawee counties attended the Farmers picnic at Devils lake Thursday Aug. 28. Pioneer high school band furnished the music during the morning and afternoon. In spite of the heavy traffic on the road to the lake no serious accidents are reported at the picnic. State and county politicians made good use of the opportunity by passing out campaign cards and handshakes.

South Dakota has already reported temperatures of 4 below freezing and other points in the northwest are also giving up low temperatures. It is high time you investigated your coal bin and the wood pile.

The State Fair is past and gone with about the usual attendance and success. Jackson Fair is being held this week, Adrian fair occurs next week Sept. 15 to 19 and Hillsdale fair comes last but not least, Sept. 22.27. After Hillsdale Fair comes Angola, Indiana, and so it would seem we have not had much summer. Our extremely late spring has been the cause of it all. Some scientific men claim to believe that the close proximity of Mars to our planet has made the general mix-up in seasons. At any rate there is no help for it and teh coal and wood man are going to be welcome visitors from now on.

Hillsdale county crops are not ready for fall to close down and the corn especially needs six weeks of anti-freezing weather. Late potatoes are not as abundant as they were supposed to be earlier in the season; buckwheat is nipped in the bud and apples are practically ne crop at all except in some sprayed orchards. Ernest Bauman reports a few and is journeying into Ohio expecting to sell them at high prices. Oats and wheat were a big crop in most fields.

We do not expect to see much display in vegetables, fruits or grains at the fairs but no doubt the crowds will be there, and we shall meet John's first wife's cousin and Bill's grand-mother's step-daughter with the baby and their little dog, Fritzie. Crowds are the main asset—and without them no fair could exist. Whatever the result, there is one event we can't forestall, and which depends on no human agency—that is the coming of winter.

Michigan climate is so confounded whimsical that you retire in perspiration and wake up the next morning shivering—then it is you draw on a sweater, feel your pocket book and wonder how to make both ends meet, is you must suffer from September 1st to May 1st next year—eight months of cold weather, with sunny Florida only four days auto journey away!

Blooey! Michigan is becoming worse than Siberia.

The following teachers in this vicinity have received 2nd and 3rd grade certificates to teach in this county at the recent exam at Hillsdale: Jerome Leta Baker, Vera Crapser: Moscow, Margaret Baker, Georgia Thompson: Osseo, Mary Boyle Ruth G. Gilbert, Zelda VanMarter North Adams, Margray Hayhoe, Ethel Brewer. Miss Hayhoe is teaching in the Mud Lake district and Miss Brewer is teaching in the Grubby Knoll district.

See Silo As Means To Save Corn Crop

With many fields of corn in the state which will not mature for grain harvest this year, because of the backwardness of the season, the silo is expected to pay its way rather completely by providing a means of handling the crop effectively.

The farmer with a silo, according to Prof. O. E. Reed, head of the dairy division at the M. A. C. will be able to save all the crop that does mature.

One danger against which Prof. Reed cautions is that of putting corn into the silo too green. This is frequently done, it is said, to avoid possible frost, but the silage made from very green, sappy corn will make a washy, sour feed that is unpalatable and does not have the feed value it should.

"It is better", says Reed, "to let the corn atand until after the frost than to put it in the silo too green. When this practice is followed, the corn should be cut as soon as possible after it is frosted, otherwise there will be considerable loss of nutriment. The leaves dry very quickly after a frost, become brittle, and are easily lost off the stalk.

"If it is desirable to fill before the frost, the corn should be cut, and allowed to lie in the field for at least twenty four hours. or a sufficient length of time to lose some of the excess moisture. The excessive moisture is the cause of sour silage. It is better to let the corn get too dry, and then add sufficient water to get the silage to pack well, than to ensilo the crop too green."

The Republican platform recognizes that agriculture should be on a basis of economic equality with other industries. This is easy to say, but the farmers themselves and their advisers have never been able to agree on a plan to provide it by law. Now that nature and economic law have given some temporary relief, I propose, therefore, to appoint a committee to investigate and report measures to the congress in December that may help secure this result which we all desire. I want profitable agriculture established permanently. I want to see the dollar of the farmer always purchase as much as any other dollar.

"Under the policy of protection and restrictive immigration," he asserted, "no deflation of wages has occurred. While the cost of living has gone down, wages have advanced. The 12-hour day and the seven-day week have practically been abolished. The uninterrupted operation of public utilities with mutually satisfactory and legally established methods of adjusting labor questions have been sought. Collective bargaining and voluntary arbitration have been encouraged. Republican rule has raised the wage earner to a higher standard than he ever occupied before anywhere in the world."

Reduction of Expenses.

President Coolidge then pointed out that the people of the country, because of the war have had to recreate nearly one-fifth of our national resources. We can make up the loss, he said, only by saving part of what we produce each day.

"It is for that reason," he continued, "that the present administration has made every possible effort to cut down the expenses of government. The expenses of the government reach everybody. Taxes take from everyone a part of his earnings, and force everyone to work for a certain part of his time for the government.

"When we come to realize that the yearly expenses of all the governments in this country have reached the stupendous sum of about $7,500,000,000, we get some idea of what this means. Of this amount about $3,500,000,000 is needed by the national government, and the remainder by local governments. Such a sum is difficult to comprehend. It represents all the pay of 5,000,000 wage earners receiving $5 a day, working 300 days in the year. If the government should add on $100,000,000 of expense, it would represent four days more work of these wage earners. These are some of the reasons why I want to cut down public expense.

"Because of my belief in these principles, I favor economy that the taxes of everybody may be reduced. Much has already been done. The bill which I signed will save the people about $1,000,000 each [illegible] I want furthe [illegible] ticular bloc the politician alleges he represents.

There should be a diversity of interest represented upon the Board, but that the majority of the Board should ever be constituted of other than men thoroughly trained by practical experience in financial management is to me utterly unthinkable and if practiced will in the end lead to a complete disintegration of the strength of the System, if not to a worse conclusion.

We do not select bankers for our plowboys or bricklayers for our artists. We demand specialists for every character of specific activity, and the welfare of our whole population demands that the credit power of the nation, without which no business can live, must be committed likewise to the hands of experts in its use and distribution.

It is a pretty and catching phrase to declaim that if you destroy the agriculture of the country grass will grow in the streets of your cities, but it is no more true than to say that if you destroy the credit structure of your country the products of your labor will rot in the fields and the machinery of your industry and commerce rust into inactivity and decay. Therefore, let us, who are in no small measure responsible for the banking and financial welfare of the nation, give unstintingly of our time to the propagation of sound economic policies.

FOR FARM PROGRESS

The Agricultural Committee of the North Carolina Bankers Association, in conference with officials of the College of Agriculture, recently adopted the following program for active work in the state:

1. Aid county agents in determining definite objectives for each community and organize county in community groups to carry them out.
2. Give each county a definite objective through an organization of farmers, bankers, and business men.
3. Secure from state and federal sources assistance in determining definite objectives and in giving instruction to members of community and county or-

JOSSELYN'S WIFE

IRWIN MYERS

ALTHOUGH it deals with some of the interesting problems of married life, it is not, strictly speaking, a problem novel. It is first of all an absorbing story, with characters very much alive, natural and appealing.

Since dramatic incidents come into the lives of all natural, everyday folks—probably more tensely dramatic than those experienced by the more artificial class—this story will have a keen interest for a majority of men and women of today. The author has given it the stirring qualities and the elements of heart-interest for which her books are famous.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

Booze Versus Law

"Let every American, every lover of liberty, every well wisher to his posterity, swear by the blood of the Revolution never to violate in the least particular the laws of the country, and never to tolerate their violation by others. As the patriots of '76 rallied to the support of the Declaration of Independence, so to the support of the Constition and laws let every American pledge his life, his property, and his sacred honor. Let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his father, and to tear the charter of his own children's liberty."

A serious word must be said to the young men and the young women of the United States, and I know of no better sentences with which to begin than those from Abraham Lincoln quoted above.

"Why should I be concerned about law? Law—what has that to do with me? It may cause my arrest if I step on the gas in my father's car at the wrong spot, or it may prevent me from buying cigar ettes if I am under a certain age, but what of it? That's all. As for me, leave the law with those who handle it; I'm not one of them." So some young people may think and feel.

Listen, young people.

Some years ago, the men and women of the United States voted for a law to stop the sale of liquor of all kinds. They did it "in cold blood," as we say, knowing what they were doing. They decided that the sale and use of alcoholic drinks were a danger to the nation and to the people. And so they said, by their ballots, "We'll stop it." That was their wish, as clearly expressed as their wish ever was for a President—and much nearer to unanimously.

Listen again.

Today, there is a great effort being made by a small group of people to prove that law cannot be enforced; these people break the law every chance they get; they boast about how skillfully they do it; they get their boastful stories into the newspapers; they give multitudes of people the impression that the law is being broken much more widely than it is; and they are doing much to break down all respect for law.

To every young person this question comes home—suppose that these people should win out in their effort to destroy respect for the prohibition law: suppose that in the country at large there arises a widespread conviction that laws are useless and that they exist only to be broken and laughed at; then, what becomes of all the other laws that protect the lives of young men and women? They collapse, like a house of cards. The law that purifies the milk they drink, that protects the money they put in the savings bank, that guarantees them the wage they have been promised, that guards them from assault on the streets all these and many others, are undermined at one fell stroke if the public mind is once convinced that law is useless. And in no way is the value of law so threatened as in the widespread violation and mockery of the prohibition law to day.

Here is an interesting fact. President Alassandri, of Chile, is a total abstainer and believes in prohibition. When he gave a dinner to the delegates of the United States at the Pan American conference at San Diego some months ago, he was courteous enough to the laws of this country to serve no strong drinks at the dinner. Later, Mr. Fletcher, the leader of the American delegation at the conference, gave a dinner at which drinks were served. President Alassandri, a better American than our own representative, turned down his glass. He had more respect for an American law than the official representative of that country.

From time to time the governors of the various States come together for what is called the conference of governors. For fourteen years they have been doing this, and it has been the custom all this time to refrain from passing any resolutions. These governors simply talk things over and then adjourn without expressing any official opinion. In October last, they met at West Baden, Indiana, and for the first time departed from custom and passed a statement which pledged the governors to aid in the enforcement of the prohibition law. On the next day they lunched with President Coolidge and heard him tell them that temperance enforcement was one of the three problems in which the National Government needed the help of the State governments. In his statement he said: "The American people are not a nation of inebriates; they are not a people who can be charged with being hypocrites They have no patience with anarchy. They are a sober, frank, and candid people. They have respect and reverence for duly constituted authority. To them the law is a rule of action." This problem is evidently a serious one when the biggest men in the nation think of it in this way.

But, there is more.

In October, 1923, there was held in Washington a citizenship conference. Hundreds of delegates came from all over the nation. Nearly every speaker devoted himself to the enforcement of prohibition.

Governor Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, created a sensation. He had just settled the coal strike and so won the attention of the continent. He had just been dealing courageously with the liquor situation in his own State. He was welcomed to the conference with shouts, and as his great speech went on the audience leaped off the seats and shouted. This address was printed by daily papers all over the nation, Here are some things he said; "It is idle to suggest that the law cannot be enforced. That the Government of the United States, the most powerful nation on earth, with the people overwhelmingly behind it, is powerless before a few thousand, or a few hundred thousand, of assorted lawbreakers is simply unthinkable. The fact is we have never really tried.

"The thing that has protected the liquor criminal from the law is politics. Politics first, law enforcement a poor second, has been the order. Bad whiskey, with beer to help, has supplied the sinews of war for bad politics, and politics has returned the favor."

Again he declared, "These brewers, bootleggers, and saloon keepers have made a larger issue than that between wets and drys. They have thrown down the gauntlet to all law under the Government of the United States. They defy our Constitution and our laws as did their ancestors, the outlaws of the Whiskey Rebellion of Washington's time."

This is a young people's war.

Young people stand to lose more than anyone else if law fails, because their lives are ahead of them and so "their stake in the country is larger than that of their parents. They stand to gain more than anyone else if law is perserved to guide the lives of men. Upon their shoulders will come in a few years this whole gigantic task—unfinished, one fears—of perserving the sanity of law and building a worthy human society. It is their responsibility, then, to know the facts to see what is involved, to decide upon a course of action, and to be resolute and unflinching in taking up the gauge of battle flung at them by the hand of fate.

West State Farmers To Study Soil Tests

Results of three years work in treatment of the sandy soils of northwestern Michigan will be studied by farmers of the section on Saturday, Sept. 13, at which time specialists from the soils department at the M. A. C. will go over the experimental projects they are carrying on at the college station at Mancelonia, Antrim Co.

The soil management tests, on what is called the "Mancelonia type" of sandy soil, include fertilization and liming on the chief crops of the section—potatoes and alfalfa and other legumes, including sweet clover.

Three men from the college soils department will discuss various phases of the experimental program, which is said to contain material of interest to all farmers of sections similar to Antrim Co. district. Mr. McCool, head of the soils department at M. A. C.; G. M. Grantham, extension specialist and O. B. Price, in direct charge of planting and handling the Mancelona tests, are to furnish the program for the field day.

Urges Women Not to Be Among Ballot "Slackers"

MRS. ALVIN T. HERT

Born on a southern Indiana farm, the teacher of a country school, the wife of a successful business man whose affairs she now manages, a farmer on her own Kentucky acres, an able business woman, but with all the charm and graciousness of a lady of the old school—such is Mrs. Alvin T. Hert, Vice-Chairman of the Republican National Committee.

Mrs. Hert's headquarters are in Chicago, from which center she is broadcasting to American women first of all the message of their great responsibility. The women claimed that if given the vote they would make the United States a better place to live in. Mrs. Hert is urging all women not to be among the twenty-five million ballot slackers, but to go to the polls on Election Day and vote for what they believe to be the policies that will mean most in the lightening of human burdens, in the general welfare of all.

True, Mrs. Hert is a good Republican, but her messages breathe first of all the soul of a humanitarian, coupled with the conviction that of all the agencies at hand the Republican party is the most effective one through which what women want—social progress, the greatest good of the greatest number—can be achieved.

Her political creed is summed up in the belief that the purpose of government is to "establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity."

It is hard to quarrel with such a creed unless one wants to find fault with the preamble of the Constitution of the United States!

Difficult to Please

A Lancashire man was taken by his friend, who owned horses, to the races for the first time.

The friend had a "certainty" running in the first race, and encouraged his companion to back it. He did so, and after an exciting finish the horse won by a short head.

The owner did not meet his friend again until the starters were out for the last race, when he whispered confidentially that he had a good tip.

"Nowt doing," came the quick reply. "T'other only just won."—London Tit-Bits.

Derivation of Yankee

Farington gives an etymology which will be new to Connecticut readers. "The name of Yankee is derived from the Yankow Indians formerly settled in Connecticut. That race now scarcely exists. To put an end to the wars that subsisted between those natives and the European settlers, laws were ordained which served to incorporate them, marriages being allowed." Reader, have you perchance inherited some drops of Yankow blood, along with the Yankow name?—Henry A. Beers, in the July Yale Review.

PRINCE CHARMING

SYNOPSIS.—Ellen and Joe Latimer, orphans, without means, make their home with their Aunt Elsie, at Port Washington, small New York town. Ellen is studying art, her expenses being paid by Mrs. Sewall Rose, girlhood friend of her mother. Mrs. Rose invites Ellen to a Thanksgiving house party and the girl is delighted. On the way from the station to Mrs. Rose's Ellen rides with a remarkably attractive young woman and a much older man. She takes them for father and daughter, but they are introduced as Mr. and Mrs. Josselyn. Ellen does not "fit in" with the younger members of the party, and is miserable. Leaving for her home next morning, Ellen meets Gibbs Josselyn, the original of the photograph.

Ellen would have recognized him instantly from the picture. His head, bare in the sunshine, was silver, and the lean, clever face she remembered was clear olive in coloring, and brightened now with a most winning and kindly smile. Ellen's first rather awed impression was of poise, reserve, self-confidence. Authority spoke in the pleasant voice, and every inch of the man was stamped to her young vision with a fineness, an aristocracy, a something that marked him superior to others.

In the midst of the first jumble of explanations from the newcomers, as to their reasons for leaving Great Barrington, and their first details of the trip, Mrs. Rose distressedly interrupted.

"Gibbs—Gibbs, my dear boy," stammered she, holding his hand in both her fat ones, and fixing upon him a look all imploring and conciliatory. "You know your father is here, dear—I wouldn't have had it happen for anything in the whole world—but he and Lillian got in on Wednesday, and he telephoned me at once to come down and lunch with them—I really do feel terrible about it—"

Gibbs Josselyn had flushed up to the silver crest, but he smiled upon her not unkindly.

"Dad's here, eh?"

"Yes, Gibbs—and—Lillian!"

"Gosh, that is awkward!" ejaculated Ward Rose, with a sharp, anxious look at his guest.

"Not awkward a bit," Josselyn said quickly. "Of course you had to have them, I'm glad you did—but of course I won't meet her. I'll be getting right along, and see you soon—"

"Listen, Gibbs—she's really quite nice!" Mrs. Rose said eagerly. "Do—do be reasonable about it! Your father—your father isn't going to have any more children, Gibbs, and you simply—"

"Gibbs is the best judge of what he wants to do, my dear!" her husband interrupted nervously, with a hint of disapproval in his tone. "I wouldn't—I think I wouldn't try to force matters, Abby. We're awfully sorry, my dear boy, but you understand—of course I had no idea—"

Mrs. Rose looked despair.

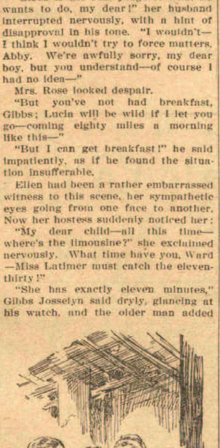
"But you've not had breakfast, Gibbs; Lucia will be wild if I let you go—coming eighty miles a morning like this—"

"But I can get breakfast!" he said impatiently, as if he found the situation insufferable.

Ellen had been a rather embarrassed witness to this scene, her sympathetic eyes going from one face to another. Now her hostess suddenly noticed her:

"My dear child—all this time—where's the limousine?" she exclaimed nervously. "What time have you, Ward—Miss Latimer must catch the eleven-thirty!"

"She has exactly eleven minutes," Gibbs Josselyn said dryly, glancing at his watch, and the older man added surprisedly: "What on earth's the matter with Maurice? Why is everything topsy-turvy, Abby?"



Ellen Would Have Recognized Him Instantly From the Picture.

"Goodby, both of you—see you soon!" Gibbs said suddenly. "Run down and jump into my car, Miss Latimer. I'll run you to the train. We'll make it very nicely. Goodby, Ward! Goodby!"

"Oh, now, I don't like this one bit!" Mrs. Rose continued to protest, but she kissed Ellen goodby none the less, and her husband ran with the two young persons down the steps, tucked Ellen's bag into the back of the car, and forced her to slip into his big fur coat for the two-mile trip.

"Leave it in the office some day, Gibbs," he said. "You can make it, I guess! Goodby, Miss— Awfully sorry, old boy, but such things will occur. Abby's all upset about it, I know."

Young Josselyn put Ellen into the car, and tucked the heavy robe snugly about her. In another ten seconds he had sprung into his own seat, and waved a goodby to the watching Roses. The roaring of the car drowned out all farewells.

A day or two ago Ellen might have felt it her place to keep the conversation moving. But the last forty-eight hours had been full of painful lessons for her; she knew better now than to attempt any friendly overtures. Boys younger than she had snubbed her, girls of seventeen had looked upon her askance. So she kept absolutely silent, her bright eyes moving between the fur of her hat and the fur of her collar like those of a timid but interested bird.

As the car was brought neatly against the station platform, she began to free herself from her wrappings, and said politely:

"I'm a thousand times obliged to you, Mr. Josselyn!"

"I don't know whether you are or not," he said, narrowing his eyes at her quizzically. "I think we've missed it!"

"Missed it! Oh, goodness!" Ellen echoed in dismay.

"Stay where you are," he said, jumping from his seat. "I'll find out."

He crossed the station platform and disappeared, and Ellen sat in a panic, waiting for him. Oh, she couldn't go back to that house, and have the whole thing begin over again—

"Yes, ma'am, we've missed it," said Gibbs Josselyn, coming back, and leaning against the car with sympathetic eyes on her face. "Was it pretty important, or what? The next is at one-twenty-two."

"It's not so important," Ellen said, in a troubled voice. "But I don't like to go back—I'll wait here!"

"What—until after one o'clock!"

"Yes, I think so," Ellen answered firmly. "I—I don't know them very well," she went on confusedly. "And—and I think I rather worry Mrs. Rose, not getting on exactly with the others." She stopped, conscious that this explanation was rather lame, and added finally: "You see, they all know each other so well, and they don't know me!"

"I see perfectly," Gibbs said pleasantly. "You would be safer in a band of Hottentots!"

Ellen laughed. Her white night had only added a touch of mystery, of spirituality, to her Irish beauty, after all, and the drive, after her breakfast, had brought back her wild-rose color. The man looked at her as if he saw her for the first time, looked down at his big fur glove, plunged his hand suddenly into it, and asked carelessly:

"You couldn't make the run with me, I suppose? I'm going straight down to my club. It won't take us more than a couple of hours."

The girl's blue eyes danced. The thought of a refusal never entered her head.

"Oh, I'd love it!" she answered happily.

"Good girl!" he said. He walked about his car, eyeing it from all sides, opened the engine-hood and made a few mysterious investigations, got back in his place, and they were off. Her companion, who was wearing dark goggles, turned to Ellen and dropped another pair of glasses in her lap, with the four brief words: "Better put them on." Ellen obediently snapped them against her soft hair. Not another word was spoken for three miles. Ellen was entirely conscious that the man beside her was gradually working off his irritation and anger.

After awhile he glanced at her, smiled a sudden and perfunctory smile, and said:

"I'm pleasant company for you—what? Have you minded my chatter?" Ellen laughed, in some embarrassment.

"I didn't mind—not talking!" she said, shyly.

"You—what!" he asked in so loud a voice that she felt rather frightened. "You didn't mind? Well, that's so much gained, anyway." He drove on for a minute or two, and then asked abruptly: "Miss Latimer, how much of that did you get?"

Ellen was not quite sure she understood him.

"You mean—there at the house?" she faltered, as he gave her a shrewd side glance.

"Exactly!"

"I knew that Mr. —— that your father was there!" the girl said, timidly.

Gibbs wrenched at the wheel with large, strong hands; his brow clouded; they flew along in silence.

"D—n such women!" she heard him say under his breath. Ellen felt her color rise, she looked straight ahead. "I wonder if she arranged that!"

Ellen's quick look met his; she shook her head decidedly.

"Mrs. Rose? Oh, no! She wouldn't do a thing like that! She was frightfully nervous the instant she saw you," she answered confidently. "She's too good-hearted—she wouldn't do a thing like that!"

Again he did not answer, except for a dubious glance and a half-satisfied nod. But after a while he spoke.

"I guess you're right. You probably are. I guess I'm just out of sorts—making too much of the whole thing!" The car slowed down, Gibbs looked at the fastening on one of his big gloves, shot Ellen a glance.

"Have you got a mother?"

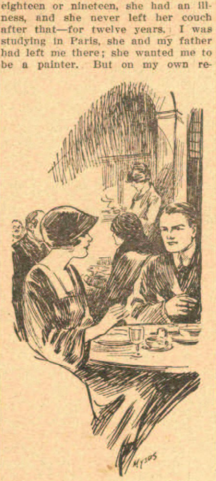
"No," Ellen answered. "My mother is dead."

"So is mine," he said soberly. "I loved her very much. I don't—I don't get used to it!"

"I'm sorry!" the girl said, simply, after a moment.

For a few minutes he was silent. Then he suddenly began to speak of his mother.

"I don't know why," he said unexpectedly, "but I wish you had known my mother. She was a most extraordinary person. She was frail always, I think, and when I was a boy about eighteen or nineteen, she had an illness, and she never left her couch after that—for twelve years. I was studying in Paris, she and my father had left me there; she wanted me to be a painter. But on my own responsibility I came home when my father wrote me that she was ill. I've never forgotten her look when I came into the garden. It was summer, and she was lying on the porch—thin, and so white—"



"I Never Had Such a Wretched, Uncomfortable Time in My Life; Perhaps It Was My Own Fault!"

Ellen hardly dared breathe. She had never had a man's confidence before. "I gave up my painting, and I went into the firm with my father," he pursued. "A year ago, we were both in the library with her, when she—well, she just gave a sort of sigh, that was all. Her heart got tired, there was no pain. And for a while we thought my father was going, too He drooped and brooded—it was ghastly. He'd always been so young for his age. But now he seemed broken, somehow!"

Ellen cast about for something to say, fearful of chilling his mood.

"He seems young now," she ventured at last.

"Now? Of course he does!" Gibbs assented half-angrily. "Mind you," he added, speaking fast and vigorously, "mind you, he had a perfect right to remarry if he felt like it. That's his affair. But to marry this pink-cheeked, empty-headed, stupid cloak model—if she was that! I only saw her once. She was engaged, when my father met her, to a big black-mustached fellow who had a couple of living wives. That's her measure! The fellows began to hint to me about it six months ago; I didn't believe it. Then I saw my father with her one night, having dinner; at Sherry's, I think it was. I thought—" He glanced at his companion suddenly. "Well, you're only a kid," he said, more gently. "But I never dreamed this would come of it!"

Ellen's color rose.

"But—but there is nothing disgraceful in his marrying her," she said bravely. "And—and if I were your mother I would rather he did that than—than did anything that wasn't fair to her!"

Gibbs drove on in silence. She thought perhaps he had not been listening.

"You're quite right, my dear," he said presently, in a softened tone. "You make me feel ashamed of myself. A good woman has the trick of putting her finger right on the vital spot sometimes, and I believe my mother would agree with you!"

Ellen's happy color flooded her sensitive face.

"I've not seen my father since this thing happened, two months ago. I suppose they told you that?" Gibbs said. "I've not been home since. I suppose he's established her there, if they got in on Wednesday, and she's prowling among my mother's books and laces and jewelry. I can't—I can't quite go it. The world's big enough, and people will stop buzzing about us presently. Let her have her money and position and good times, I don't grudge them, God knows. But I feel as if it wasn't only my mother who died a year ago, but my father, too, and the old days, and the old ways of thinking. Some day—I don't know—I'll go in and see the old man, and we'll have a talk—"

"But you've not met her?" Ellen asked thoughtfully, when his voice had dropped to silence. "She doesn't seem to me the cloak-model type."

"Pretty, eh?" he asked, with dry interest.

"Oh, extremely! She's more than pretty, she really has a lovely face, and I think she is clever, too. She's studying French and music and she—well, she has a way of keeping silent that makes other women seem like chatter-boxes!"

"It must be lots of fun to play her game," Gibbs said musingly. "Watching every chance, studying the Social Register as if it were her catechism, picking up bridge and French and music! I wonder if my father sees through it?"

"It wouldn't be worth while to me, not if I was left a million dollars," Ellen contributed. "There's too much that's uncomfortable about it. And if I had daughters, I wouldn't want them to think that only money counted. I don't mean that I could do it, even if I did want to!" she said hastily.

"There's nothing in it for the people who chase it all their lives," Gibbs observed. "And the real people—the ones who are born to it, don't know they have it—so there you are! You can't buy anything real with money, as I see you suspect. Well, now I've talked you to death about me, and told you my maiden name and everything, and it's your turn. You didn't drop out of the sky, I suppose, just to give me an excuse to blow off steam? You live in—?"

"Port Washington, Long Island. Age, twenty-two," Ellen said demurely. She told him about her grandfather, and Joe, and her work at the Art league. It pleased her to be able to paint Mrs. Rose in the colors of a generous benefactress, to show him what a difference the friendship of the kindly old meddler had made in her life. She said that she lived in an old-fashioned village house, and that Aunt Elsie was considered the best housekeeper in the village, and that her tomatoes and Ellen's dahlias had twice taken prizes at the Mineola fair.

"You sound quaint," said Gibbs, "and as if you might have a melodeon in the parlor."

"We have!" Ellen said, dimpling and widening her eyes as she smiled at him.

After that they ran on for a while in contented silence until he stopped the car at one side of the road, and took off his glasses. Ellen took her own off, too, and looked at him in some surprise, as they blinked at each other in the strong light.

"We are now forty miles from Columbus Circle, and it is one o'clock," said Gibbs. "How do you feel about luncheon? A place called 'Adrian's' is about three miles from here, and I am a frail young thing, and I've not had any breakfast!"

The conventional aspect of the affair struck Ellen for the first time. She looked at him gravely, and her ready color crept up. She did not know him, her chaperon was even unaware that she was in his care. Men loved to get foolish girls into strange places, Aunt Elsie said, and a girl never made a mistake in refusing when she was in doubt.

Gibbs was smiling at her obvious hesitation.

"You know you're safe with me, Kiddie, don't you?" he asked. "You know I wouldn't take you anywhere that I wouldn't take my mother?"

That settled it. Ellen had not been born yesterday, after all. She had her own stern girlish standard of judgment, and she knew she was safe. The luncheon was a perfectly natural part of the trip; they were both hungry. And he had not had any breakfast!

She made him an answer that pleased him deeply, although he apparently conceded it nothing but a satisfied nod, and immediately hid his eyes under the glasses again.

"If you say it's all right, I know it must be."

So they went to "Adrian's," a big, shabby hostelry set upon a rise of ground, and provided with wide verandas for the summer crowds; verandas deserted now under their bare awning frames.

The meal came, hot and odorous and appetizing, and they talked while they ate. Gibbs told her of his first acquaintance with Mrs. Rose.

"I was a small kid of ten or twelve, in Rome, do you see? And she was there with her first husband, Torrey. My mother was kind to her, we were at the same hotel, and she was awfully kind to me. She had a brother with her, about my age, and we saw a good deal of each other. Later, when she was a widow, she turned up in Paris with the two children. My mother and father were staying there for a while, before leaving me there to study. And later, she came here, and married Rose, who is a darn nice fellow, and now of course she regards me as a member of her family."

"She went to school in Boston with my mother," Ellen said. "But I never saw her until a few years ago. Now that I've visited her I can see just the careless way she suddenly thought of inviting me to her Thanksgiving house party. I never had such a wretched, uncomfortable time in my life; perhaps it was my own fault!"

Well, apparently the Prince Charming has arrived? A case of love at first sight?

Distilled Wisdom in Aged Irish Proverbs

"The proverbs of a nation are the distilled wit of generations of its people, and the true wit of the race is oftentimes in proportion to the truth and beauty of its proverbs," says Seumas MacManus, who points out, according to the Montreal Herald, that the sayings of the Irish are singularly rich in poetry, philosophy, satire and wisdom.

"The silent mouth is melodious," is an Irish proverb of poetic beauty.

"Our eyes should be blind in the abode of another," and "If the best man's thoughts were written on his forehead, he would wear his hat down over his eyes," inculcate charity in judging others.

"God never shuts one door but He opens two," and "Hope is the physician of every misery," express the optimism of the race.

"Fierceness is often hidden under beauty." "There is often anger in a laugh," and "A good dress often hides a deceiver," are other ways of expressing the idea that appearances are sometimes deceiving.

"A man with one eye is a king among blind men." "Without treasure, without friends," and "A heavy purse makes a light heart," show the advantages of possession.

"Look before you leap," and "Don't take the thatch off your own house to buy slates for another man's," are good advice to the improvident.

"Enough is as good as a feast," preaches a sermon on contentment.

Bell-Bird of Africa

The loudest voiced bird is undoubtedly the bell-bird or companero of South America and Africa. This feathered songster gives forth a loud, clear note almost exactly like the tolling of a bell. The companero, which is a white bird, about the size of a pigeon has on its head a horny growth, and this, connected with the roof of the bird's mouth, is the cause of the peculiar tone.

FEELS IT HIS DUTY TO TELL THE FACTS

"Tanlac has meant so much to me in the way of improved health that I feel it a duty, as well as a pleasure, to recommend it," is the appreciative statement of J. M. Freeman, well-known resident of 307 Camden St., San Antonio, Texas.

"About a year ago my stomach and digestion got all out of fix and I soon became badly run-down. My appetite went back on me and the little I did eat failed to nourish me. Constipation troubled me nearly all the time and I also had bilious spells and attacks of dizziness.

"My sleep was unsound and I got up mornings with a mean, sickening taste in my mouth and a dull headache that lasted me almost through the day. I lost considerable weight and that tired, draggy feeling was on me all the time.

"After a few days' use of Tanlac I noticed a marked improvement in my appetite, digestion and general condition. So I took four bottles and by that time I was eating as heartily as I ever did and digesting everything fine.

"My liver went to work right, my headaches stopped and I was able to sleep like a log. I had gone down to only 143 pounds, but I am now a strong man of 215 pounds, and my health is the best it has been in years. A friend of mine took four bottles of Tanlac at the same time I did and got fine results, too. As a builder of health and strength Tanlac is certainly without an equal."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 Million bottles sold.

New Mexico in Line for Republicanism

New Mexico can be counted safely in the Republiean column for national, congressional and state candipates but that isn't going to prevent us from working our harvest to get out every possible Republican vote.

This appraisal of the situation was made to-day by Mr. Miller Republican committeeman there when he visited National headquarters.

"Bankers, business men, investors, taxpayers snd farmers in my state" said Mr. Miller, "have hardly gained their equilibrium since the disasterous deflation of the last administration. They have not forgotten the Wilson vetoes of the emergency tariff bill and the bill to revive the War Finance Corporation in 1920.

"Had these measures been speedily enacted when the emergency of 1920 arose thousands of bankers and farmers throughout the west would have been saved from financial ruin. But the bills were rejected and the financial disaster came in the liquidation that followed in the wake.

"The liquidation of the farms and ranches of the west destroyed the collateral of the banks and brought unprecedented poverty and suffering onto the people. Since the Republican administration came into power in 1921 prices on all products of New Mexico have been gradually increasing. Business men and farmers throughout the state in many instances regardless of party affiliation, feel that tha country will be safely managed by Coolidge and Dawes. Dawes has the stamp of a Joe Cannon republican, rough and ready at all times, and Coolidge comes of Pilgrim stock—both pretty good candidates to tie to.

HOT BLATST AIR TIGHT FLORENCE

Burning soft coal will heat three times more space at one quarter the cost, than any other heating stove with the same size firepot.

WHY? Because the damper back of the firepot burns the cheapest soft coal or screenings and all the smoke and soot with the same regularity and cleanliness as the burning of gas, producing a steady heat day and night.

No Smoke! No Soot! No Dirt!

Two tons out of every three tons of soft coal are wasted in all heating stoves constructed without a damper back of the firepot. Besides the offense inside and outside the house from the accumulation of soot. The Florence makes its own gas and burns it, and makes its own coke and burns it. Steady heat day and night when the weather is 20 below zero. The medium size holds fire 3 days and 3 nights with one filling. Other sizes in proportion.

The Florence is an investment. It pays for itself every two years in the saving of coal. In zero weather it will pay for itself the first season in the saving of doctor bills and eliminating irregular heat.

Anyone living in the community who happens to be in need of hay could easily slip over to Jay Chandlers some evening and draw away half a dozen loads of alfalfa and Jay would never know the difference Some people may think we are equivocating but Jay has put up about 200 loads of alfalfa during the past few weeks and that's why we are certain that he would never miss the half dozen loads.

Mr. Reedy, one of America's leading magazine founders once wrote the following: It is my firm belief that if it were not for the capitalists at the head of the great daily newspapers, if it were possible for the men who write the news and the editorials, to take absolute charge of their publications and write the news exactly as they see it, and write their views exactly as they feel them, for a space of three days, there would be such a revolution in the United States of America as would put that of France to shame.

A few dog owners in the county have already passed through the first initiation of refusal to pay dog taxes and have paid fines considerably in excess of what the tax would have been. We are surprised that some men are so dog-goned dogmatic over a dogma of a small dog tax. Glenn Milie-'s court is full of these dod gasted dogmatisms.

Rev. Selden B. Ford and family of Maple Rapids left North Adams on Monday for their home. Rev. Ford gave a splendid address at the church on Sunday evening. The Latest in Grave Accessories

Our undertaker, Harold Young who believes in being strictly up to-date in every particular, has recently purchased a new automatic lowering device for placing coffins into graves, which is the very last word in cemetery work. The machine consists of a railing somewhat larger than the grave with four corner posts The four side rails are heavy two inch tubing, adjustable both in length and width and the side rails revolve. The mechanism is delicately arranged and perfectly noiseless, being started by means of a small lever at one corner. It is possible to regulate the speed or stop the action at any point.

The whole affair is heavily nickel plated and highly ornamental and is manufactured by the Frigid Company of Chicago.

Rev. W. W. Gray Assigned to Mulliken

Many of our citizens will be sorry to learn that in the Methodist conference held at Jackson last week the location of Rev. W. W. Gray had been changed to Mulliken in the Lansing district. They expect to leave North Adams next Tuesday for their new charge. Rev. and Mrs. Gray during their location here have endeared themselves to the members and friends of the church who will deeply regret their removal to other fields.

Rev. Gray owns a nice home in Missouri where he expects to retire when his work in the ministry is finished. The appointment of Rev. Hutton to North Adams for some reason has been cancelled and will be assigned later. The appointments which our folks are most concerned about are: J. W. Sheehan, Niles; W. I. Elmer, Cooper Street, Jackson; Ray Merrill, Alma; J. H. Rayle, Remus; Ralph Wooton, Hope, Lansing; S. B. Ford Maple Rapids; E. O. Mather, Lyons. Stanley Niles, Albion.

A New Enterprise

As previously stated in the columns of this paper a stock company consisting of Dr. Leatherman of Toledo, Ohio, Riley Brothers of Addison, Charles Kerr of Onsted, George Dougherty of Oak Point, Dr. Heifer and Clark & Carney of Albion, Mr. Campbell of Homer has been organized with a capital of $16,000 for the purpose of building observation towers on the two eminences, Prospect and Bunday in Southern Michigan and the company is now considering the advisability of erecting a summer amusement park in the heart of the Irish Hills region. The new tower on Bunday Hill is 24 feet square at the base and 50 feet high. commanding a wide extensive view of the surrounding region, and 28,000 ft of lumber went into its construction. A nice road has been built leading up to the summit from the highway, and just across the road is located the burial grounds of the ancient Pottawatomies.

We are mighty glad that Michigan is coming to her own. Steps are being taken to make this locality the summer resort for a large nnmber of people from the central states. As the crow flies this hill is six miles from North Adams and ten by road with the best gravel highway leading to it On the opening day, August 31st it was claimed 932 people visited the place and 630 ascended the tower. There is provision made for a home for the caretaker and rooms for dispensing soft drinks. It is too bad the project was not started earlier in the wet days so that by taking a few drinks of Old Underroof or Edelweiss and going up a man could have imagined he was in second Heaven but of course as nothing but "white mule" can be obtained anywhere in Michigan, the average Bacchanalian will have to be satisfied with a peep into Hades.

Back Given Out?

It's hard to do one's work when every day brings morning lameness, throbbing backache and a dull, tired feeling. If you suffer thus, why not find out the cause? Likely it's your kidneys. Headaches, dizziness and bladder irregularities may give further proof that your kidneys need help. Don't risk neglect! Use Doan's Pills, a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys. Thousands have been helped by Doan's. They should help you. Ask your neighbor!

A Michigan Case

Durham Crook, prop. welding business, Beecher St., Bessemer, Mich., says: "My kidneys troubled me and there was a continual ache in my back. Every time I bent catches bothered me. My kidneys were weak. The secretions were often filled with a dark, heavy sediment. Doan's Pills straightened me up."

"I understand a party of Snake Ridgers are coming over to the Gulch to play poker."

"Yep," replied Cactus Joe. "We thought we might as well try to be a little neighborly."

"But these boys have the reputation of using marked cards."

"That's all right. If any of 'em wins, we have a bundle of counterfeit money ready to pay off with."

WOMEN NEED SWAMP-ROOT

Thousands of women have kidney and bladder trouble and never suspect it.

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

Pain in the back, headache, loss of ambition, nervousness are oftentimes symptoms of kidney trouble.

Don't delay starting treatment. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a physician's prescription, obtained at any drug store, may be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

Get a medium or large size bottle immediately from any drug store.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Republicans Win in Maine, but Democrats Extract Some Consolation.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

UP IN Maine, at least, the oil scandals apparently have not hurt the Republican party seriously. Neither did the klan issue, which the Democrats sought to make predominant there, operate as they expected. In last week's election, when the largest vote in the history of the state was cast, the G. O. P. won a decisive victory. Ralph O. Brewster defeated W. R. Pattangall for the governorship by about 36,000 votes, and United States Senator B. M. Fernald was re-elected, having a plurality of nearly 50,000 over F. J. Redman. The four Republican congressmen were all returned, and the state legislature remains safely Republican in both branches.

Brewster was supported by the klan, while Pattangall was the man who offered to the Democratic national convention the plank denouncing the klan by name. One of the Democratic state leaders said: "It has been demonstrated that the Ku Klux klan has more members in the Democratic party than we realized."

Democratic National Chairman Shaver managed to extract a lot of comfort and hope from the returns. Said he: "The whole story is that a Republican state has gone Republican by a greatly reduced plurality. Any attempt to prove anything else by the election figures is not justified by facts, as the history of Maine elections clearly shows.

"The election from a Democratic standpoint is a victory. The Democratic nominee for governor was defeated by 30,000 votes less than in 1920, the last Presidential year, in the face of the fact that the vote this year was approximately 40,000 larger than in that year. In other words, the gains have been tremendous and the loss to the Republicans 50 per cent in the matter of plurality. A change of anything like similar percentages in the country would mean a clean Democratic sweep."

PRIMARIES were held in a number of states last week. In Michigan the Republicans renominated Senator James Couzens, who, though he led the attack on Secretary of the Treasury Mellon in the last session of congress, had announced that he would support Coolidge and Dawes. A. J. Groesbeck was nominated for a third term as governor. Mortimer Cooley was unopposed for the Democratic senatorial nomination, and Edward Frensdorf was put up for governor. Republicans of Massachusetts nominated Speaker Frederick H. Gillett for the senate, and he will be opposed by Senator David I. Walsh. In Colorado the klan won the Republican primary, for it supported both Rice W. Means, nominated for the short term in the United States senate, and Judge Clarence J. Morley, the nominee for governor. In Arizona the gubernatorial nominations were Dwight B. Heard, Republican, and Gov. G. W. P. Hunt, Democrat; in Washington they were R. H. Hartley, Republican; Ben F. Hill, Democrat, and J. R. Oman, Farmer-Labor. Senator Joseph E. Ransdell was renominated by the Louisiana Democrats, and in South Carolina the incomplete returns indicate that they have named former Gov. Cole Blease for the senate. Senator Harris of Georgia easily defeated former Senator Hardwick.

WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE, famous editor of the Emporia Gazette, thinks the Republican nominee for the governorship, Ben S. Paulen, has "practically allied the Republican party in Kansas with the Ku Klux klan," and therefore he has sent out independent nominating petitions to place his name on the November ballot as candidate for governor and that of State Senator Carr for lieutenant governor. He says he desires thus to test public sentiment.

JUDGE CAVERLY'S decision in the case of Leopold and Loeb, the Chicago murderers, awaited with intense interest by the entire nation, was rendered on Wednesday, and may be considered a victory for sentimentalism. The young men were sentenced to life imprisonment on the charge of murdering Robert Franks and to 99 years on the charge of kidnaping for ransom. In a carefully written statement the judge said that in choosing imprisonment instead of death, he was moved chiefly by the consideration of the age of the defendants, who are eighteen and nineteen years old. But these self-confessed perpetrators of a most revolting crime are admittedly mentally developed beyond their years. Opinion as to the wisdom of the court's decision is divided. Many editors and persons who have to do with the enforcement of the law believe the killers should have been hanged. Many educators and ministers, being opposed to capital punishment, are therefore in accord with the decision. There are two dangers involved in the matter. One is that the murderers may at some time be released on parole, though Judge Caverly urged that this be not done. The other is in the effect the decision may have on the mind of the masses, for these boys are the sons of immensely wealthy citizens. Whether or not Judge Caverly erred on the side of mercy, there is not the slightest reflection on his integrity. But the state's attorney voiced the opinion of many when he said the escape of these killers from the noose will make more difficult the already hard task of protecting life in Chicago.

OUR "Air Magellans," as the headwriters delight to call them, are safe in the United States again, and indeed almost at the end of their globe-encircling flight at the time of writing. After stops in Boston and on Long Island, where they were welcomed by immense throngs, they flew to Washington and were received on Bolling field by President and Mrs. Coolidge, the cabinet and innumerable other dignitaries, who waited cheerfully for hours in a hard rain. The aviators were kept at the capital for Defense day and then flew to Dayton. Their route takes them by way of Chicago, Omaha and Texas to San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Eugene, Ore.

WHILE the Chekiang and Kiangsu armies continue their bloody struggle for possession of Shanghai, with varying fortunes, the civil war in China has spread to the region about Peking. General Chang, war lord of Manchuria, having declared war on the central government because it is backing the Kiangsu forces, is reported to have started six armies, of 30,000 men each, on the way to attack the capital. Chang has had leaflets scattered among the Chekiang troops urging them to hold on and promising aid. The Peking cabinet has been taken over by a military council and the minister of finance is busily raising war funds. The Shanghai merchants telegraphed the Peking banks not to lend the government any money.

Though the dispatches from the Shanghai front are somewhat confusing, it appears that the Chekiang forces defending the city are getting rather the better of the fighting. Toward the end of the week they had taken three towns near Taihu lake and were engaged in a fierce battle with the Kiangsu army in the vicinity of Ihang, ninety miles from Shanghai. In other sectors of the front the fighting was halted by torrential rains.

Japan has declared it has no intention of intervening in China's domestic row, but it is anxiously watching America and England, for there are reports of interchanges between Washington and London that indicate that positive measures are being considered. The Japanese press hints that America is in sympathy with Gen. Wu Pei-Fu, the military chieftain of Peking.

GEN. GREGORIO FERRARA is leading a rebel movement in Honduras that is causing a lot of trouble. Two American cruisers are already at Ceiba and have landed forces, and another is on the way from Panama. The American charge d'affaires, Stokeley W. Morgan, has warned Ferrara that Washington will recognize no government set up my him unless the warring factions reach a settlement, and that a peace conference is impossible unless he ceases his advance on the city of San Pedro.

Ecuador, too, has a revolutionary attempt and the rebels have named as their leader Doctor Arizaga, acting minister to Brazil and former minister to the United States.

In Chile the officers of the army have seized control of the government and under pressure President Alessandri resigned. But the senate rejected the resignation and gave him six months' leave of absence. He went to Argentina and from there will go to Europe.

DESPITE the opposition of the rabid pacifists, Defense day, September 12, was generally observed throughout the country with enthusiasm. The government estimated that 50,000,000 persons participated in the tests, demonstrations and celebrations. Originally intended to give the officers of the reserve army an opportunity to show how much they knew about organizing and handling troops in quick time, the test was voluntarily expanded into a demonstration of mobilization in other ways and was made to include thousands of patriotic celebrations. In the evening General Pershing delivered a radio address on preparedness. Next day he was retired from active service, General Hines succeeding him as chief of staff.

PLANS for taking over the control of the disarmament of Germany are being prepared by the League of Nations council. This will please Germany, for the operations of the inter-allied mission aroused much ill feeling there. The league will also oversee the disarming of Hungary, Austria and Bulgaria.

France's plan for arbitration, disarmament and security was submitted to the league assembly. It provides for:

1. Compulsory arbitration of all disputes.
2. Strict enforcement of the treaties of Versailles, Trianon, Neuilly, and St. Germain.
3. The definition of an aggressor as a party refusing to arbitrate or accept the decision of arbitrators.
4. France's pledge to take part in military sanctions against an offender.
5. The definition of what aid the other powers shall give by placing them in certain categories.
6. The mainetnance of existing regional treaties and the preservation of the little entente.

Both British and French delegates indirectly invited Germany to apply for admission to the league, but it probably will not do so for some time, especially if the Nationalists insist on the sending by Berlin of the note denying Germany's war guilt. This note was the price of the Nationalists' support of the Dawes plan laws in the reichstag and its dispatch was prevented only by the warm protest of the diplomatic representatives of the allies in Berlin.

Monsignor Fanolli, premier of Albania and its delegate at Geneva sternly upbraided the league for talking so much about peace while doing nothing to preserve it. In the course of his speech he denounced the Dawes plan as the most colossal bubble that history has produced. "It is," said he, "a tortuous, complicated, diabolical, infernal concoction of bubbles. It is bound to end like all the minor bubbles that we are hatching here. It is too complicated to work. It may secure a vice presidential chair for its author, but it will produce very little in reparations."

GEN. PRIMO DE RIVERA, director of Spain, and his troops are having a hard time in Morocco and may be involved in disaster. At last reports they had retreated to Tetuan and there the rebellious Riff tribesmen were fast hemming them in. Further south the Moors had surrounded another force of 8,000 Spaniards and probably had captured and massacred them. Abd-el-Krim, the Riff leader, is willing that Spain should retain Ceuta and Melilla but insists that all the rest of the Riff shall be united in a republic. Among the officers of the Moors are more than 200 German officers who enlisted in the Spanish foreign legion last year and deserted to Abd-el-Krim two months ago.

Arab Women Demand Veil Be Abolished

Jerusalem.—The stubborn conservatism of the Mohammedan custom with regard to the social isolation of the women in Palestine may soon give way before the movement launched by Arab feminists for removing the veil.

The Holy land, backward in many respects, is behind such Moslem countries as Turkey and Egypt in breaking the shackles holding women in seclusion.

The movement for the enfranchisement of Moslem women in Palestine is of recent origin and is traceable to the influx of people from the West, especially Jewish immigrants coming to settle in their national home.

As the first step toward their emancipation the women demand ecclesiastical sanction for the removal of the dark veil from their faces. If such flying in the face of age-long custom does not win official approval, some of the leading Arab women are determined to do what their Moslem sisters did in Turkey, where the veil has been entirely cast off, or at least in Egypt, where only a light transparent veil is still worn extending from below the nose.

The ban on public appearance of women has retarded the development of the drama, and it is to be hoped that the admittance of Moslem women to the theatrical stage will follow the removal of the veil.

Arab women of Palestine are keen not only on social emancipation but on participation in politics.

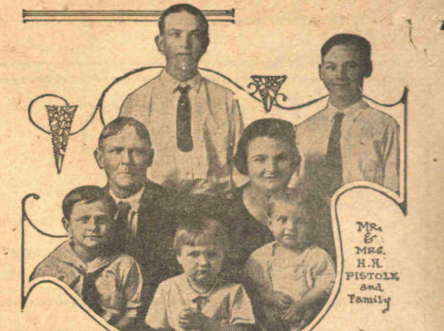
Kavanaugh, of Bay City, and engaged in trap-net fishing from this port, floundered during a 35 mile gale and sank in 45 feet of water, two miles from Scarecrow island. Campbell, chairman of the county road commission, announces the road has been approved by the United States bureau of roads.

Lansing—Michigan's corn is 20 per cent below the condition of one year ago, according to reports made public by Verne Church, government statistician. The estimate of the grain crop of the state exclusive of silage and fodder, is 30,000,000 bushels. The condition is 17 per cent below the 10-year average in the state. Estimates of the spring grain crops of Michigan: spring wheat, 138,000 bushels; oats, 58,825,000 bushels; barley, 4,018,000 bushels buckwheat, 887,000 bushels. All these crops show a larger yield than one year ago.

Grand Rapids—Fred Cochrane, who was unable to obtain from the public utilities commission a permit to operate a freight truck line between Grand Rapids and Holland, has been ordered by Circuit Judge M. L. Dunham to discontinue the business. Cochrane contended he did not need a permit as he was operating under contract for Grand Rapids and Holland business houses. The court ruled that because of the railroad service between the two cities and also because another bus line is operating there is no room for the bus line.

WHOLE FAMILY ENDORSE TANLAC AS BEST TONIC



MR. & MRS. H.H. PISTOLE and Family

"Tanlac has been our constant friend for years, and my wife and myself and eight children are all enjoying wonderful health, largely due to this medicine," is the remarkable statement of Harry H. Pistole, 310 Archer St., Waco, Texas.

"In my own case Tanlac has done what seemed to be impossible. When I began taking it my stomach was in such a bad fix that I had to live on a milk and egg diet and I was almost a skeleton. I had been flat on my back in bed and under treatment for 18 months and felt that my time was about up.

"After my case had been given up as hopeless and I thought I was beyond redemption a relative put me on to Tanlac, and the result is, I gained 20 pounds, and enjoy as good health as anybody could wish.

"My wife was all broken down in health. But now she weighs 155 pounds, and is strong and well and I am giving Tanlac credit for it. We give Tanlac to the children to tone them up and make them grow, and nobody ever had a healthier set of children than we have.

"Tanlac is certainly the greatest medicine on earth for anyone whose life is wrecked by bad health. We sure do have a great deal to praise Tanlac for at my house."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 million bottles sold.

Say Michigan Bean Crop To Be Small

Early and mid season estimates on the size of Michigan's bean crop this year are being revised and greatly reduced by those familiar with bean conditions, according to J. F. Cox, professor of farm crops at M. A. C. Adverse seasonal conditions and the presence of blight and anthracnose in state bean fields are reasons given for the lowered estimates.

The 1924 Michigan crop has been placed at 5,492,000 bushels in the estimate of V. H. Church, crops statistician of the state department of agriculture. This is more than a million bushels less than the 1923 crop, but it is said probable that a still further reduction in the figures will be necessary The crop condition is given as 68 percent, as against an average for the past ten years of 83 percent at this time.

Harvest of the crop"; says Professor Cox, disease injury, and weather damage will undoubtedly bring about still further reductions. It is considered a fair estimate to state that the bean crop which will be harvested in the state will not exceed four and one half million bushels. The condition of the crop in California is reported as being 60 percent, and in Colorado 43 percent. The holdover in the U. S. from last year is also comparatively small.

"With beans bringing a good price, it will pay growers unusually well to take great care in the harvesting in order to prevent weather damage. It is a known fact that beans will withstand adverse weather to a remarkable degree as long as the plants are upright in the field. The farmer who pulls a large area at one time runs great risk from damage from wet weather while the beans are on thf ground. By harvesting in units of several acres at a time, when weather conditions are favorable, this risk can be greatly reduced. If beans are rained upon after pulling, they should be turned daily with a side delivery rake or forked over frequently so as to cure sufficiently for stacking, putting in mow, or threshing.

Rev. Fred L. Niles, Obituary

Fred L. Niles was born October 20, 1860, in Eagle township, Michigan, and departed this life August 9, 1924. He received his education at Grand Ledge high school and Albion College and entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1889.

He has served the following pastorates of the Michigan Conference in the thirty five years of his ministry: Elm Hall, three years; Eaton Center, three years; Dewitt, three years; Reading, four years; Reed City, three years; Nashville, two years; Hartford, four years. North Adams, four years; Vermontville three years; (his second pastorate) Woodland, two years. He was in the midst of a happy pastorate at Woodland, and was greatly loved by the people, when God called him home.

On December 25, 1885, he was united in marriage to Carrie A. Barnum of Grand Ledge. Four children came to bless their home Leo, Vera, who died at the age of two years, Stanley and Victor. The home life was most beautiful, a veritable shrine which the three sons, grown to manhood, ever found an inspiration to nobler living. Perhaps no greater tribute can be paid to the Godly father and mother than the fact that all three sons are in the Christian ministry.

His outstanding work on every pastorate was in the field of evangelism. Hundreds of people have found God under his ministry and are living changed lives of usefulness in Kingdom building. Besides this lasting monument, there is upon every charge he has served, some building or repairing enterprise which has made the church plant more efficient. He built three churches and two parsonages and put improvements on many others.

What he was, even more than what he did, constitutes the richest heritage left the family and friends. During the last illness, which was of five weeks' duration, he was uncomplaining and cheerful. He especially enjoyed the gathering of the family about his bed for morning devotions and took part in these the day before his death. He seemed not to have a care or a fear regarding the future. He said one day, "I am not afraid to die, I have been too long preparing." The blessing of such a life must enrich all who knew him.

Beside the loving help mate of the years and the three sons and two grandsons; there are left to mourn two brothers, John and Will of Grand Ledge; two sisters Mrs. Nettie Newsom of Grand Ledge and Mrs, Ella Doty of La Grange, Oregon, and fifteen nephews and nieces.

Funeral services were held from the Woodland Methodist Episcopal church, Tuesday, 11:00 A. M. and were attended by several ministers who took part, and hundreds of friends. Burial was made at Grand Ledge.

Twenty five thousand dollars less taxes will be paid by rural tax payers of Calhoun, Ingham and Washtenaw counties as a result of investigatfons which farmers of those counties made as to the relative assessed valuation of farm, village and city property.

Careful investigations were carried out in five counties and in each instance the average rate of assessment was found to be higher for farm laad and buildings than for any other class of property within the county. Upon the presentation of this evidence before the equalization committees and boards of supervisors at their June meeting, equalizations were granted in all five counties, but in Kalamazoo and Monroe counties appeals have been taken to the State Tax Commission, so the final saving to the farmers of those two counties cannot be definitely announced as yet.

Groesbeck of Michigan

Frederick L. Collins writing in October Woman's Home Companion gives a graphic account of a recent interview with Alexander J. Groesbeck, Governor of Michigan, and believing that some of our readers who are not familiar with the next Governor's history would care to know some of the high spots we are giving them:

'Alexander J. Groesbeck, of Stellwagen & Groesbeck, Attorneys-at-law—I shall always think of him by his full legal title, is one of the three best governors upon whom I have stumbled in my gubernational marathon from coast to coast. He is a credit and an asset to the great state over which he presides. But he is undubitably a lonely soul.

Most lawyers are that way. There is something about their training which makes them think all men guilty until proven innocent. But some of them conceal their true natures under sweet smiles. They practice law apologetically, as they would burglary or arson. They try not to suspect every man they meet of harboring an injunction against them; they sometimes think without "whereases" and smile without an "insomuch" but not so with the Governor of Michigan. He looks you over as if you were a prisoner in the pen; and he stands with one hand behind him as if he were about to whip out a habaes corpus or hurl a calfskin volume of revised statutes at your head.

He is the kind of man to whom you say something particularly pleasant—and find to your dismay that you are smiling alone. In brief, and to-wit, he is a lawyer, and he glories in his shame. He pulls his black hat onto his bullet-like head clamps the brim over his heavy eyebrows, sinks his neck into his back and squares his jaw. Then he's ready to say "good morning." I wouldn't say he perked up much over the greeting. I had to pinch myself to make sure he didn't say "What do you want?"

I wouldn't say any woman could do much with him now. The shell of his batchelorhood is thick and durable, but certainly someone should have tried."

Corn Is Safe Until October 5

Hillsdale county farmers need have little fear for their corn crop from killing frost before October 5, according to a statement issued by the Blue Valley Creamery Institute, established to improve the dairying effort of the average farmer and to show him how to make more money.

A study of weather reports for thirty years shows that there is little likelihood of a killing frost before that date, the statement continues. Killing frost was first observed here last year in October but in 1902, the year of the bumper crop, no apparent damage to the corn was done before October 24.

In calling attention to these facts the Institute issues a warning to farmers in this vicinity who still have bins of good corn suitable for seeding not to yield to the temptation to sell out at the high prices now offered for cash corn but rather to save a plentiful supply for their new crop. The exceedingly late start and slow growth made by the corn crop this year gives grounds for the expectation that much corn will be caught by frosts this fall and rendered unfit for seed purposes. This applies particularly to the northern half of the corn belt, but this precaution is urged on all farmers who grow corn.

"We have no means of knowing when frosts may be expected this fall," the statement concludes, But it is at least a wise precaution for every corn grower to hold on to any good seed corn he may have until assured of a new supply. The germinating qualities of good seed corn when kept over a second year, are generally very good, provided the ears are stored in a dry, cool place."

His Balloon Went Up

We have been watching the Jackson papers especially Daily Jackson News to find what kind of a writeup they would give that great panorama of human flim flam the Jackson Fair, but as yet we failed to note any considerable account of the Exposition, and we should think probably these literary stoics decided that modesty was the better part of valor and the less said the more imagined.

Far and wide the Jackson publicity committee has advertised the Fair as one of the biggest in southern Michigan and the hot air if it could have been confined would have furnished sufficient power to run the gas works.

When the real truth of the matter leaks out it will make good timber for the cartoonist. For several years Jackson Fair has been bolstered up by contributions from the city which considered it a great attraction, then on top of it all the grandstand had to be rebuilt at the expense of the farmers of the county. Burris succeeded in convincing most of the patrons of his ability to manage the institution but results speak a mighty sight louder than words at present and judging from the crowds who were not there last week, somebody will have more bills to pay. We admit the weather was extremely bad but the temper of the crowds was worse. There is an old adage "That Pride goeth before a fall" and it looks as if the latter part of that sentence was a reality.

Whenever you find a fair ground thickly covered with gambling devices as was this penny ante exhibition managed by Bill Burris you will usually find little else of account, and the condition has grown on Burris until the "common peepul" just simply said "never again" and you can bet they mean it.

Many a guile free farmer lad has gone to the Jackson fair with a full pocket of money and returned empty because of these pretty buzzing wheels which get nothing for anyone except Burris and the operator. It looks as if the pretty wheels had buzzed once too many.

See Danger Of State Seed Corn Shortage

The Michigan corn crop is in a dangerous condition, with a large percentage of the crop having but little chance of ripening, according to Prof. J. F. Cox, head of the farm crops department at the M. A. C.

The most serious side of the situation, it is said, lies in the possibility of a great shortage of adapted seed for the state's planting next year, unless farmers make a special effort to field select seed corn and dry it properly. Lateness of planting last spring and the low temperature of the growing season are given as reasons for the backwardness of the crcp, conditions being similar to those of 1917.

Ways in which the danger of a seed shortage may be overcome have been discussed by Professor Cox, briefly as follows:

"Experiments at the M. A. C. show that seed of high germination can be secured from corn in the dough, or even in the milk stage, if it is properly dried in the fall before being affected by freezing weather. While best seed results from selecting in the field at time of maturity, good seed can nevertheless be secured from immature corn if it is immediately dried under conditions where free ventilation exists. Corn carrying a high moisture content should be dried in an artificially heated room or seed corn drying house with windows or ventilators open.

"Good seed corn of adapted varieties will be exceedingly valuable to Michigan farmers next spring. Such seed can be secured only by selection in the field this fall. It looks as though the disasterous experience of the fall of 1917 which caused a widespread shortage of seed the following spring may be repeated this year unless corn growers in general make special effort to select and cure their seed. The same condition prevails in northern states and throughout the corn belt.

"Supplies of old corn of last year's crop of good germination which have been properly stored, should be saved as a source of seed for next year."

Republican Women Start National Campaign

Mrs. Alvin T. Hert, vice chairman of the Republican National committee, has just announced the opening of the National headquarters of the women's bureau of the campaign on the second floor of the Wrigley building, Chicago. Eastern headquarters have been opened in New York city.

The Women Voters Speak

The voices of the women of America are making themselves heard. From Maine to California, with a unison which is infectious, they are saying, "We want Coolidge and Dawes."

In the weeks which have elapsed since the Republican party nominated its standard bearers, the women have been weighing these candidates and their respect has gone out to these men, who represent the best qualities in American manhood.

All signs show that the women of the country have been weighing the Republican platform and that its pledges have won their support.

Women know that the running of the nation's business is simply housekeeping on a national scale. They know that there is nothing mysterious about it. They want the government to be managed as simply and as inexpensively as they manage their own homes. The women have heartily approved the budget system which the Republicans have established at Washington. They were quick to endorse the reduction of taxes by $1,250,000,000 per annum and the curtailment of public expenditures without in the slightest disturbing business. When the Republicans stated:

"We pledge ourselves to the progressive reduction of taxes of ALL THE PEOPLE as rapidly as may be done with due regard for the essential expenditures of the government administered with rigid economy," the women knew that the country would be safe if Republican candidates were elected to office.

The platform's promise to continue the party's solicitude for all those suffering any disability as a result of service to the United States [illegible] to promptly consider was particularly appealing to the women.

Pledges of law enforcement, the [illegible] for high standards of wages, the Child Labor [illegible] conditions for women workers, and a score of other progressive planks have won the support of the women.

Their minds at rest about the program of the Republican party if elected to run the government for the next four years, the women have started their campaign. They want Coolidge and Dawes and they are working to get a record-breaking number of women to the polls next November.

The Bible In Our Schools

"Dad, that religion of Osiris was a great thing, wasn't it?"

Dad looked up from the evening paper—this is a true story—and said: "Where did you hear about the religion of Osiris? I never heard of it."

"Why, in school", answered the son. "It was the greatest religion the world ever knew. It saved the Egyptians from barbarism, and that saved the world."

"What about our religion in America?" asked the father.

"Oh, we haven't had anything about that in school," Johnny answered.

"I'll never be able to catch up with what they teach the kids in schools these days," Dad complainep helplessly to mother after Johnny had gone to bed.

"Mohammedanism was the greatest religion the world ever saw," a Girl Scout of high school years told her Chief Scout one day. "Our religion in America never did what Mohammedanism did?"

"Well, what did Mohammedanism do?" asked the wise Chief Scout.

"We've been studying that subject in school," said the high school girl. "There was a time when the Moors tried to overrun the world. Almost the only culture there was in the world then was in the Mohaumedans. They turned back the Moors in some terrible fighting, forced their own religion upon them, and saved mankind from barbarism."

"Do you know how the Mohammedan bible looks on women?" asked the Chief Scout.

Well, no, I don't, admitted the Scout.

"It looks on them as animals," was the answer.

"And do you know how the teachings of our Bible raised women to the level of human beings? asked the Chief.

"Well, of course, we didn't go into that part of it in school," answered the girl.

I tell these two stories to show this fact: The more efficient our public school system becomes in America—and it is growing amazingly in efficiency—the further it is taking our children away from morals and religion.

Our fathers studied the "three R's": there was nothing in readin writing, and arithmetic to cause them to ignore or neglect or question religion and the Bible.

Today the "three R's" are not enough. Children remain in school into the high grades. America was about 2,000,000 seats short in the public schools last fall, because of a sudden and unexplained determination of our children to "stick it out through high school." There is more than the "three R's" in every grade of our schools today.

"Twelve states, with nearly eight million pupils, will not permit the Bible to be read in the public schools. In thirty states, with fourteen million school children, the Bible may be read, but seldom is. Only six states provide by law for Bible reading—and these do not permit it to be commented on or explained. Don't we really believe in the Bible—in God—then? If we do, why are we so opposed to having the Bible taught in our schools? We have the warning of two Presidents that this nation, founded on religious faith, can be maintained only through a like faith. If the children are not taught that faith, it will die. What shall we do about it?

Mr. Shepard a magazine writer said:

"We don't want spiritual illiteracy for our children," he declared that half of the 25,000,000 school children in the United States are prevented by law or regulations or custom from hearing the Bible read in school. He said we are convinced that most fathers and mothers want their children to have the influence of religion in their lives. Why, then, are they so indifferent to the fact that their children are not receiving any religious training worthy of the name? Why don't they insist upon having God taught along with geography and algebra? The reason seems to be that sectarianism has [illegible] in its snare, and we are afraid to let God come into the schoolroom unless He wears our particular cloak.

"Is it possible," Dr. Charles R. Eliot asked "that there are any children in the United States who don't know how to pray?"

The writer answers, "There must be millions of American children who haven't been taught that there is such a thing as prayer."

Where can American children learn prayer?

In their homes?

More than one half of Americans with our 20,000,000 homes are not reached by any church, Protestant, Catholic, or Jewish.

Well, if a child is not taught prayer in these unchurched homes there is the Sunday school.

"On any Sunday only about one child in four is in actual attendance at Sunday school," is the official report of the American Sunday school Union. "More than 28,000,000 children and youths are in this country we rightly pride ourselves upon our widespread popular education. With education of the mind must go spiritual teaching which will make us turn the trained intellect to good account. A man whose intellect has been educated, while at the same time, his moral education has been neglected, is only the more dangerous to the community because of the exceptional, additional power he has acquired."

Michigan's Dairy Situation Surveyed

One third of the dairy cows in the state of Michigan are losing money, a third are making up for what the first third are losing, and the other third are reaping profits for their owners, according to a survey of the state dairy situation, just completed by the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. Better feeding and better breeding is the solution of this problem, the Institute experts declare.

"The State of Michigan", continues the report of the Institute, "has dairy cows in milk on 85 percent of her farms. In 1880 the state had 3.09 percent of all dairy cows in the United States; in 1924 4.08 percent. In 1910 the state had 103 heads of all kinds of cattle per one thousand acres of improved land. Now in 1924, it has only 117 head. A few head more or less matters little. Have they improved in fourteen years? What will they be fourteen years from now? These are the questions on which the Institute's experts will enlighten the farmers.

Farmers want happiness and contentment. To get it they must make money. There are two ways of doing this—get more money for what they produce or lower cost of production. A quarter saved in the grain cost of producing a hundred pounds of milk by feeding better milk making grain rations, a dime saved per one hundred pounds of pork, or dozen eggs, is money ahead for the farmer. We don't need more cows, hogs or hens. We need better ones. More efficient animals mean lowered cost of manufacturing one hundred pounds of milk, pork, poultry, beef, mutton and eggs.

The average cow in Michigan makes only 3,965 pounds of milk and only 3.7 percent of all dairy cattle in the state are purebred. Better feeding will raise production and lower costs per hundred pounds of milk. The daughters of good cows, sired by purebred bulls, will increase that production and further lower costs of production. The same is true with other animals. In 1919, the peak year, only 11 percent of the entire state's income went to farmers. That is not enough", the Institute's experts point out.

There has been a rising tide of popularity in intensive farming. As agriculture is brought face to face with higher costs of production and farmers find that they cannot get by on highest priced land, it has been necessary to turn to diversification. Deflation has made every banker and farm leader see these things.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

STOP, LOOK AND LISTEN

"Aunt Emmy," said Jane, "I wish you would make something clear to me. Last night Mr. Wilkins and Ted were talking about bonds. Mr. Wilkins said a lot about 'public utility bonds,' whatever that means, and seemed to think that they are the greatest things ever, so I thought maybe Ted and I might buy one with that $1,000 Daddy gave us for a wedding present, but I'd like to know more about them first."

"You have the makings of a financier, Jane," laughed Aunt Emmy, "since you have sense enough to stop, look and listen before you buy. I like public utility bonds, too—that is, good ones. They are bonds issued by corporations that serve the public with something useful, hence the name, public utility. The gas company, the electric light and power company, the telephone and similar companies are public utility corporations. Their business is based on real public needs. But it is also essential that they be well managed to be a good investment.

"Of course there are other bonds equally good. Always bear in mind that when you buy a bond you loan money to the corporation whose bond you buy. You do not buy a share of the business, as you do when you buy stock. The bond you buy bears interest, and this interest must be paid to you before the company can pay out a single cent in dividends. Nevertheless bonds must be carefully selected with the advice of someone who knows."

"How do you think one can know if a company is safe or not, Aunty?" asked Jane.

"Well, that is difficult. But I should say that if a company whose bonds you fancy has been doing a good business for ten years and has not failed to pay a dividend during that time the chances are that it will keep on doing as well unless something entirely unforeseen occurs. The best thing to do is to check up your own opinion with your banker. Once you have bought bonds in any corporation don't put them away and forget them. Seek your bank's advice from time to time and keep informed of the progress of the corporation you are interested in. If you see anything in the papers that alarms you in any way go at once to your bank and ask their advice about selling out and reinvesting in something else. Banks have facilities for keeping in touch with financial conditions, and they are always glad to help."—ANNE B. AYMES.

The New York Bankers Association describes in a receint bulletin the campaign under foot to foster club work among boys and girls in the rural schools. Prizes have been donated by a number of the former presidents of the Association to be awarded to the children, the communities, and the banks interested in the work.

STRUCK DOWN

SYNOPSIS.—Ellen and Joe Latimer, orphans, without means, make their home with their Aunt Elsie, at Port Washington, small New York town. Ellen is studying art, her expenses being paid by Mrs. Sewall Rose, girlhood friend of her mother. Mrs. Rose invites Ellen to a Thanksgiving house party and the girl is delighted. On the way from the station to Mrs. Rose's Ellen rides with a remarkably attractive young woman and a much older man. She takes them for father and daughter, but they are introduced as Mr. and Mrs. Josselyn. Ellen does not "fit in" with the younger members of the party, and is miserable. Leaving for her home next morning, Ellen meets Gibbs Josselyn, son of her fellow guest. He has disapproved of his father's wedding and is not on speaking terms with the couple. Declining to stay at Mrs. Rose's, Gibbs drives Ellen to the station. They miss the train and Gibbs undertakes to drive the girl to Port Washington.

She told him all about it, inconsequentially, and he listened with genuine interest in his handsome eyes. Perhaps this artless revelation of a girl's heart was novel to a man who found the sex remarkable in all its phases, perhaps with beauty like Ellen's opposite him, and a delicious breakfast under way, he would have found anything she said equally absorbing.

Warmed and contented, they went out to the car again, and again Ellen was wrapped in snugly, and disguised by the big dark glasses.

"Half-past two," said Gibbs, again at the wheel. "That means that we will run into the city just about four o'clock."

The car moved smoothly away over the snow. Ellen was beginning to love the steady, gliding motion. She secretly wished that there was a longer journey ahead.

The snow was surely coming; dark little cottony clouds were gathering ahead, and pressing low over the silent earth. There was no sunshine now, and the air seemed heavier and colder. The roads were almost deserted.

"Never you mind, we'll beat it!" Gibbs said with great enjoyment. "Look out for a signpost, and tell me where we are."

"Columbus Circle twelve miles," Ellen announced, after a few minutes.

"Twelve miles—well, we must look out for the Sunday speed cops now!" He slackened his pace. They were running through a well-settled region. Ellen began to realize that the trip was almost over. The day had run away; a day always to be a wonderful and treasured memory.

Afterward, she tried to remember just how she was shaken from her musings. Like all accidents, the thing was simplicity itself. They were running parallel to a trolley track, on the wide street under the beginning of the elevated trains. There was a car on the track a few hundred feet ahead, and next to the car a man driving an enormous team of horses and an empty truck. Both truck and trolley were traveling in the same direction as the automobile.

The street was so wide that there was no question, even in Ellen's mind, of the propriety of passing the car and truck, especially as the stretch of street beyond was absolutely empty. Gibbs turned his wheel toward the left, and was running unconcernedly by, when the motorman suddenly sounded an ear-piercing whistle—a terrific, prolonged blast of the siren with which trolley cars are sometimes equipped in the country. The horses, with a wild plunge of terror, flung themselves straight across the path of the motorcar coming up behind them, almost unseating their driver, and tangling themselves in reins and harness.

Gibbs jerked his car violently to the left, instinctively avoiding the plunging hoofs; there was a moment of horrible skidding and grinding in the snow that edged the ditch, then the roadster turned abruptly on its side, and Ellen was spilled out, with Gibbs on top of her.

The girl had hardly time for a moment of hideous apprehension and panic before she was on her feet again, with his arm about her, laughing with the revulsion and the shock. The skid had saved them, for the car was turned at an exact angle, and so had slipped with her lights firmly wedged against the further side of the ditch, and had no opportunity to turn turtle, as she must otherwise have done.

For a few confused moments Ellen hid her dazed face in the fur of the man's shoulder; no, she really wasn't hurt, she had landed on her shoulder, honestly she was not hurt, it just hurt her for a moment, that was all! And it had scared her—

Gibbs, reassured, began to nurse a wrenched wrist of his own, and to discuss the accident with the two carmen and the truck driver with the usual anger and threats. What was the sense of blowing a whistle right into the horses' ears—

"You was passing too close to the edge of the road anyway!" shouted the motorman furiously. Upon Gibbs taking his number, he blew his whistle again, and banged triumphantly down the line. The truck driver, a little frightened, standing at the horses' heads, expressed his satisfaction that the lady wasn't hurt, and drove away.

"You've bust your front spring, mister," volunteered a youth gayly.

"I know I have," Gibbs said savagely. "You poor little thing," he added tenderly to Ellen. "I've scared you to death!"

"Oh, it feels all right, now," she said quickly, but she was white, and still shaken from the narrow escape. He read her expression truly.

With only one worried glance at her, he set about extricating them from the difficult position as rapidly as possible. The gay boy was left in charge of the car, and Gibbs caught up Ellen's suitcase, as, still in their heavy coats, they started on foot to the nearest garage.

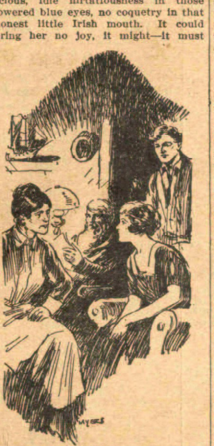
Fortunately this was not far away, and from here Gibbs sent mechanics back to the roadster, and engaged a taxicab to take Ellen and himself as far as the subway at Van Cortlandt Park.

All the while he was praising her, not only in words, but with his appreciative eyes, and in the sudden cheerfulness that the averted tragedy inspired in him. He talked to her frankly and gayly; she was a good sport, she had really shown incredible nerve. And they had had a great day, hadn't they?—since they missed the train from Hastings.

"It's been a—wonderful day!" she said, hardly above a whisper.

Perhaps the man's first impulse was to lay his hand over the small hand not far from his own, to say something that should meet her mood. It was not the only time that Gibbs Josselyn had had such an opportunity, it was the first move in a game that he had played with supreme success for many years.

But he did not want to play that game with Ellen. There was no conscious, idle flirtatiousness in those lowered blue eyes, no coquetry in that honest little Irish mouth. It could bring her no joy, it might—it must bring her pain—to know Gibbs Josselyn well. No, let her have this day's adventures to keep, an unclouded memory, and let the story end here. She had played her part fairly, and he would play his, too.



Aunt Elsie and Joe and Even the Old Captain Listened to Ellen's Tired and Excited Recital That Night.

There was barely time at the train for laughing goodbys. Ellen glanced back when she had passed the gate: he was watching her, and as their eyes met he gave her his disturbing smile again, and again raised his hat.

"He's thirty—or more, and every woman he knows is in love with him," said Ellen to herself, settling down in the train. "It's been wonderful—it's been heavenly, and I'll never see him again!"

CHAPTER IV

Aunt Elsie and Joe and even the old captain listened to Ellen's tired and excited recital that night; the woman exclaiming over descriptions of meals and clothes, the old man and the young anxious to grasp exactly what happened to the car, and Ellen sat up after the others had gone to bed and wrote a pretty note of thanks to Mrs. Rose. She said that she and Mr. Josselyn had had a "spill in the snow," but that fortunately no harm was done; it had been a lovely run.

After the letter was gone she sat reflecting; could she with any propriety write Gibbs? She knew she could not. She knew that he would read her motive in doing so as clearly as if she wrote the words: "I like you. I'm not married, and you're not married. I don't want to let you go."

She gave up the idea, and put her letter to Mrs. Rose by the clock, to be mailed in the morning, and went to bed, twisting and turning because the wrenched shoulder had begun to ache, but finally falling into deep, exhausted sleep between the cold sheets, too tired to dream.

Joe mailed the letter the next morning, and stopped at the drug store on the way back, for Ellen could not twist her sore shoulder into her dress, and came downstairs in her wrapper.

Her aunt and the captain prophesied that it would get better immediately, and a day or two went by. Ellen lay patiently through the long daytime hours, and wept with pain in the night.

Mrs. Baldwin persisted that it was either a cold in the shoulder, or a "wranch," or "the stiffneck." But she sent Joe for the doctor after breakfast, and Ellen felt better when she knew Joe had gone. Her aunt aired the dining room, anticipating the call, and had everything in order long before nine. But it was almost noon when the busy doctor came in.

That was the beginning. Ellen, who had never been in a doctor's hands before, smiled up at him uncomfortably as his skilled fingers pressed and explored. She made a rueful face when she heard her fate. She must lie absolutely still for an unspecified number of days, perhaps a week. Mrs. Bradley afterward told some intimates that she mistrusted Ellen was in for a bad spell when Doctor Older, who was fresh from the city hospital himself, said that he was going to see an old doctor in the city who was a spine authority in a day or two and discuss Ellen's case with him.

The preliminaries of a long illness are almost always wretched for the patient. Ellen was suffering acutely, she was mystified and shocked, and she was heartsick at the hideous possibility she suspected under the young doctor's frankly troubled manner. Joe came in to see her for a few minutes twice a day, her grandfather once, her aunt kept the room clean, and brought her trays she could hardly touch. Fevered, restless, dazed with lack of sleep and with the effect of the medicine that controlled the worst of the pain, she would stare at them dully.

Gradually she reached the second stage, and, if hope died within her then, as to the future, at least she found the present more bearable. Not as a whole, for her soul shrank from the horror of the thought that she might never walk free and young through the garden, and into Main street again.

A few days before Christmas the New York specialist came down, and was friendly and informal to a degree that enchanted Aunt Elsie. He could say little more than Doctor Older. Miss Latimer had done something mysteriously harmful to one of the delicate vertebrae at the very base of the brain. It was an unusual case.

The girl quivered into the invalid's invariable question.

"Doctor—do you think—can you give us any idea—it can be cured, can't it?"

"Almost anything can be cured. Doctor Older tells me that you want to be an artist," said the specialist for answer. "Now, there's nothing to prevent you from going right on with your work here. Get out your pencils, and don't bother your head about your back! You're not having so much pain, now—"

"Not unless I move," Ellen faltered, feeling the tears of bitter disappointment press behind her eyes.

Doctor Older immediately began to discuss a sort of harness he was having made for the neck, and when the city man had highly approved this experiment, the two went away. Only Ellen knew the bitter desolation they left behind them; and the long hours in the night she lay sobbing over what in her dark hour she thought the death of hope.

The harness gave her blessed relief, although its ugly brownness, pressing up against her white face, was a hurt to her girlish pride. And on Christmas day, with Joe's help, the doctor moved her down to the dining room, where a wide couch had been placed for her.

After that she came downstairs every day, and Aunt Elsie and Joe helped her tenderly upstairs every night. And there were hours, whole days sometimes between the moods of revolt and resentment, when she found a new, odd flavor of joy in her life.

Almost every hour something took her thoughts to Gibbs Josselyn and the adventurous day that had been her last day free from pain. At first it had seemed that he must know, that he had a right to know, what the accident had cost her. She longed—ah, how she longed, for his splendid concern and sympathy. There were whole hours when she lay and dreamed of it, his shock, his horror, his visits, and his flowers.

Sometimes the wording of the letter she knew she would not write flitted through her mind. "Dear Mr. Josselyn— I know you will be sorry—something that seems to puzzle the doctors—the pleasant land of counterpane—"

But she did not write. Pride kept her silent. She would not send him the three lines that must buy his friendship. If that was to come to her, it would come. She dared not beg for it.

And honest as she was to the core, Ellen knew that her motive in keeping silent was not quite unmixed. The note might bring him straight to her, it was true. But suppose he did not in the least realize that her life had been crushed and altered in the one brief moment of terror and shock they had laughed over and so quickly forgotten? Suppose he said to himself that he was sorry, and it was a pity and nothing more? Then she would lose not only the future, but the bright and precious memory of the past.

Again, he might respond to the little appeal with all the generous ardor that she knew was in him, waiting to be stirred. He might come straight down to the house in Main street—

To find Aunt Elsie, opening the door, suspicious of his errand, and find the dining room overheated and unaired, and find Joe's boots oiled and drying by the airtight stove, and adding their odor to the other odors—

And to find Ellen, his rosy companion of the furs and the laughter, a small white-faced thing under a patchwork quilt, with brown leather straps under her chin—

Reaching this point in her thoughts, Ellen would give a little shudder. Better that he should never know. Better that she had never crossed his path, or he hers. But for that memorable week-end she might be going to the Yacht club dance with Willa, Bobby Carnival, and the Henshaws tonight, she might be in the Mardi Gras Kermess that was to convulse and enchant the village next week. And summer was coming, a summer without driving and tennis and swimming for Ellen.

She must lie still, the old physical joy in living gone, and the old peace of mind gone, too. For Bobby and the Henshaws seemed changed now, and in the back of her heart and the back of her mind there lingered the disturbing vision that had displaced them: the memory of a cultivated voice; of deep kind eyes, and silver hair; of clever, groomed hands. There lingered the hurting knowledge that certain doors were closed to Ellen Latimer, that certain lips spoke a language she could not understand, that there was a world, so near her own, where her mere youngness and goodness and willingness to learn could win her no place. Other keys were needed for those doors, and through no fault of her own, Ellen had not those keys.

Mrs. Rose had gone to Bermuda. The check for Ellen's expenses had arrived promptly during the first week of the year, however, and had been the cause of some serious debate in the Latimer house.

Ellen wished to send it back, with a note explaining the circumstances. The warm-hearted Mrs. Rose might show her sympathy in some decided way, might even mention Ellen's sad situation in some quarter through which it would reach Gibbs Josselyn.

But Mrs. Baldwin, quite unsuspicious of this vague thought in her niece's mind, suggested that the check simply be banked for the time when Ellen could use it. No use distressing her generous friend with a tale of misery for which she was indirectly responsible, and which she could not help.

Ellen agreed to this somewhat reluctantly. The girl hungered for the romantic and dramatic; life thrust her back resolutely into the commonplace, do what she might. But she was learning patience and self-control, coming to believe that what made for happiness and harmony here, in the old house, was her first concern.

April was rainy, and May was rainy, but the miracle of the year went on despite the rain. A film of green showed on the hard dark earth of the garden and against the bare limbs of the trees, and sweet wild winds swept over the world with the odor of damp turned soil and bursting buds in their wake.

Then suddenly there were still hot days. All the windows were open, and a scent of lilacs drifted through the house.

Ellen, a little thin and limp, but dressed and radiant, had a comfortable chair under the lilac tree, and waved now and then at friendly passers-by in the street. She had a book, but often she sat dreaming blissfully, with the pages unturned, for hours at a time. No book was half so exciting as was a slow walk to the gate, with a stop on the way back to gather herself a dozen violets, or a plume of lilac. Spring had never seemed half so lovely, or the world so kind.

Now what? When does Prince Charming get back into the picture?

His "Office Clothes"

Old Aunt Sarah was that rare creation, a perfect laundress, and the Smith family rejoiced in her, with the exception of Mr. Smith, who said that he did not approve of Auntie starching his pajamas. So Mrs. Smith promised that auntie should be spoken to in the matter.

"Auntie," she began, diplomatically, "you need not be so very particular about Mr. Smith's pajamas; don't starch them at all; just iron them out smoothly."

Aunt Sarah looked at Mrs. Smith reprovingly. "I don't begredge him the work, missis. I wants Mr. Smith's office clothes to look jest as well as I kin make 'em."—Kansas City Star.

Human Body Composed 75 to 80 Per Cent Water

People think that their bodies are, literally, among their most solid possessions. But the human body is composed largely of water, the average proportion being from 75 to 80 per cent. We are three-fourths water, even including our brains.

I have heard people speak of a person as having "a fluid mind." They did not realize how close they came to the literal truth. From head to foot, all of us are so "fluid" that it seems almost a miracle when we continue intact, year after year, apparently as solid as ever.

You may think that we become more solid as the years go by; that old people really are, as we call them, withered and dried up. But they are not "drier." Human beings grow even less dry as age comes on. It is estimated that the water content of the body in old age is from 81.2 to 84.8 per cent, as compared with from 75 to 80 per cent in earlier life. So the common expression, "a dried-up old man," has no basis in fact.

If the amount of water content in the body is reduced by only 10 per cent, it results in very serious disorders. If it is reduced 20 per cent, death is almost certain to follow. There have been cases where a person has survived beyond this point; but a loss of 22 per cent is, I believe, a limit beyond which human beings cannot live.—American Magazine.

Ancient People

The Boeotians were the inhabitants of a division of ancient Greece, having Thebes for its capital. The Athenians regarded the Boeotians with contempt, as lacking appreciation for the culture and refinement of Attica. The Boeotians were devoted to agriculture and pastoral pursuits, and in the opinion of the Athenians were as thick and dull as their own atmosphere. Nevertheless, Boeotia produced Hesiod, Pindar, Plutarch, Epaminondas and Pelopidas. In the days of Epaminondas Thebes was the leading city of Greece.—Kansas City Star.

Mothers of Ailing Daughters, Attention
How Two Mothers Helped Their Daughters by Giving them Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound
Every mother possesses information of vital importance to her young daughter, and the responsibility for the girl's future is largely in her hands.
When a school girl's thoughts become sluggish, when she suffers the consequences of wet feet, pain, headaches, fainting spells, loss of sleep and appetite and is irregular, her mother should have a care for her physical condition and give her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which has proved a reliable aid to nature for just such conditions in so many cases.
First Bottle Helped Her
Richmond, Indiana.—"I am sending this letter to tell you how much good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did my daughter. She was troubled with nervousness so that she was restless at night, and then she could not sleep and she was afraid of everything. She could not work as she was not strong enough, and she had to quit school at 14 because she was ill so much. The doctor said she had a nervous breakdown and her system was all run down. She had pains in her right side and through her back, and the medicine she took did her no good at all. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's advertisement in our paper, telling all that the Vegetable Compound had done for other women, so I said, 'We will try it out and see what it does.' She had not taken the first bottle before it began to help her, and we will always say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the best medicine she ever took."—Mrs. E. Darby, 911 N. 16th Street, Richmond, Indiana.
An Ohio Mother Reports
Columbus, Ohio. — "When my daughter became 14 years of age she was ailing very much. The doctor gave her medicine, but she was very weak, and he always had to write excuses for her as she could not attend the 'gym' classes, and I often had to keep her home from school. I had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for my nerves and run-down condition, so I gave her three doses daily, and also Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine. Our friends are surprised to see how fine and tall she is getting and how well she is. I will gladly answer letters and give you a fine recommendation for other mothers." — Mrs. Marie Mielke, 814 Ebner Street, Columbus, Ohio.
Over 100,000 women have so far replied to our question, "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?"
98 per cent. of these replies answer "Yes." That means that 98 out of every 100 women who have taken this medicine have been helped by it. For sale by druggists everywhere.

A flapper and her best boy were seated alone together on the sofa, listening in for the first time with the latter's new wireless set. Nor did the fact that both of them were wearing their headphones prevent them from snatching an occasional kiss. Just as they were in the middle of one particularly long drawn-out embrace came the title of the next song: "Take Those Lips Away." "Oh George," gasped the girl, as she drew back, blushing. The
HOT BLAST AIR TIGHT FLORENCE

Burning soft coal will heat three times more space at one quarter the cost, than any other heating stove with the same size firepot.

WHY? Because the damper back of the firepot burns the cheapest soft coal or screenings and all the smoke and soot with the same regularity and cleanliness as the burning of gas, producing a steady heat day and night.

No Smoke! No Soot! No Dirt!

Two tons out of every three tons of soft coal are wasted in all heating stoves constructed without a damper back of the firepot. Besides the offense inside and outside the house from the accumulation of soot. The Florence makes its own gas and burns it, and makes its own coke and burns it. Steady heat day and night when the weather is 20 below zero. The medium size holds fire 3 days and 3 nights with one filling. Other sizes in proportion.

The Florence is an investment. It pays for itself every two years in the saving of coal. In zero weather it will pay for itself the first season in the saving of doctor bills and eliminating irregular heat.

Called by Death

Carl Hoffman was born in Exene Germany, July 13, 1854, and came to America in 1880 and located in Hillsdale county which has been his life-long home.

In 1885 he was united in marriage to Hattie Hanning. To this union were born three sons, Arthur Leon and Clarence, who with their mother, survive him.

Mr. Hoffman was a highly successful farmer and a director of the Citizens Bank at North Adams. Only recently he gave up active duties and moved from his country home to his residence in North Adams. A disease incurable in nature, fastened upon him, and although every form of treatment known to medical science, was resorted to in an effort to prolong his life, he succumbed Saturday morning, Sept. 13, 1924, at the W. A. Foote Memorial Hospital at Jackson.

Carl Hoffman will long be remembered by his many friends and neighbors as a splendid example of honesty, thrift and sterling character.

Mr. Hoffman came to this country 44 years ago a penniless German emigrant with absolutely no resources but a vigorous body and no understanding of our customs or language, During these momentous years he had adapted himself to a whole-hearted American citizenship and gained a competency beside the universal respect of all. With characteristic German thrift he overcame these obstacles and established a home in our midst where his precepts will long be cherished by all who knew him.

Funeral services were conducted at the home in this village Monday, Sept. 15th at 2:00 p. m. by Rev. Hedley Stacy of the Hillsdale Episcopal church and interment was in the local cemetery which is really a part of his own farm. The large number of floral tributes and attendance of so many of our citizens attested to the community's esteem for the deceased.

Card of Thanks

We are extremely grateful for the kindness shown us during our bereavement. The splendid floral tribute and expressions of sympathy were keenly appreciated.

At the Methodist church last Sunday morning an unusual circumstance made it possible to have three preachers present. Rev. Welden spoke in the morning and Rev. Hutton in the evening. The District Superintendent F. H. Clapp did not appear but from appearances it would seem he had mixed his dates also his orders to the preachers. Rev. Hutton should have been notified of the change in program but for some reason was not. However we were more than glad to welcome both gentlemen, and trust the mistake will be adjusted in due season.

Nix On Toe Work

The Methodist church in both Jackson and Saginaw Conferences just finished, have simply laid the dance question right on the floor and trod upon it. They will have none of it - and they are taking the same old stand as we notice. viz. "From public dance hall to brothel" and we don't blame them. From some little exhibitions we have seen we should say that "From Brothel to dance hall" would be the new translation. We don't just remember the name of the good bishop some time ago who moved that the ban be lifted from dancing and amusements of like nature but we believe his ears would burn and we aren't sure but he should burn anyhow. The hycoperacity and ignoramity of such silly drivelings should be shut off right where the chicken got the axe. When a good church man or any common moral citizen comes forth with an assertion the dance is all right and ought to be cherished he is just one who has escaped the bug college by the small fraction of one inch. Now that's awful to remark ain't it? Wonder how many will stop their papers for spite?

A Dangerous Precedent

It is claimed that the precedent set by recent commuting of the death sentence of Leopold and Loeb, confessed Chicago murderers, will result in increased crime throughout the country, the first signs of which are already apparent. This sentence will be the direct cause of at least six murderers, and probably more, escaping the gallows.

Ministers and religious bodies in different states unite in scathing terms of denunciation of both Clarence Darrow and Judge Caverly, accusing them of breaking down the efficent criminal code of Illinois, prostituting justice, etc. No uncertain definitions are used and it is probable a term of years will elapse before either of these men can pursue public life in peace, so widespread is the indignation of red blooded American citizens.

It is doubtful if there is a village, hamlet or countryside in the land where the details of this Chicago vaudeville lawsuit are not familiar to the smallest and youngest school children. There is a constant strong undercurrent of public opinion in Michigan which increases with age, demanding capitol punishment for cold blooded murder where the evidence is not circumstantial, and if it were not for so many maudlin silly female meddlers the law would become statute.

Michigan has become notorious for her murders, not recently but since 40 years ago whence the blood of the seven murdered Crouchs cries from the ground for justice. At that time the same conditions prevailed. Thousands of dollars were squandered by the county in prosecuting people whom everyone knew were plastered with guilt, yet as we remember it not a single penalty was ever paid for the most shocking crime ever perpetrated in southern Michigan. Every criminal escaped the law, though several were killed in one way or another afterward. Some became despondent under the strain of public opinion and ended their lives but as far as justice was concerned the whole fiasco was a fizzle from start to finish. Judge Peck who tried the case was a good man but weak as straw at the crucial hour, and there is no question but intimidation got in its work. Judge Caverly is but a prototype of jurists on the bench. Up to a few years ago the arch conspirator of the Crouch murder was peacefully pursuing his vocation in the city of Jackson—beloved of his associates, and actually able to ridicule the courts unmolested, Poor in funds, of course, and the joke went out broadcast that he was bankrupted by pitiless boycott, until some brilliant wag stumbled upon the fact that the criminal's estate had simply shifted to a couple of skin-flint disciples of Blackstone.

If the weep-rag bouquet aggregation of sentimental women and girls who are in the habit of laving vicious and depraved homicides with their tears, would shut up shop and go to tunket for a few days, some real necessary legislation to cut out crime could be put in operation. Now that's "just horrid" ain't it?

OPERATION ADVISED FRIEND SAID "DON'T DO IT!"

Try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound First. Proved Good Advice

Chicago, Illinois.—"Just a few lines to let you know what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me. I was married going on for three years, and went to a doctor and was taking treatments twice a week for pains every month. I used to lie in bed three or four days with them and the doctor would call and inject something into my arm to put me asleep so I would not feel the pains. At last she said I would have to be operated on if I wanted any children. Well, I just happened to go to see a friend with her first baby and I told her I was going to the hospital, and she said, 'Don't do it! You go and get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and you won't need any operation.' So my husband got me a bottle right away. Now I have two lovely children. Believe me, I recommend the Vegetable Compound to any woman I know has any kind of female trouble. It has helped me and a lot of my friends."—"Mrs. A. McANDLESS, 1709 S. Morgan St., Chicago, Ill. Weather Affects Tamors

That the growth of malignant tumors is related to the general weather conditions and to sunlight in particular has been shown by investigators in the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research. Drs. W. H. Brown, L. Pearce and C. M. Van Allen have had a number of rabbits suffering from malignant tumors, under observation. A comparison of meteorological records and the growth of tumors in diseased rabbits revealed a striking coincidence between the decrease of tumor growth and the periods of maximum and minimum sunlight, that is, in summer and winter seasons; while the greater malignancy occurred at the times of sudden and rapid changes in the hours of sunshine a day. The latter periods correspond roughly with spring and fall of this year.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Caucasus Revolt Against Soviets Is Spreading to Southern Russia.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

STARTING with a small uprising in the interior of Georgia, revolt against soviet rule has spread throughout all the states of the Caucasus and from there into southern Russia. The Moscow government evidently recognizes the seriousness of the movement, for it sent Trotzky to the Caucasus and the cheka is taking most drastic steps to suppress the rebellion. Great numbers of soviet troops are being sent to Georgia and Azerbaijan and no efforts will be spared to retain those provinces, which are rich in natural resources, especially oil. Dispatches indicate that the Russians are victorious in Georgia, pushing the revolutionists back from Batum toward the interior, burning all the villages and executing thousands of suspects. At last reports the Georgians, under General Danielenko, had cut the Batum-Tiflis railway in many places and the capital, Tiflis, was said to be isolated.

Turkish officers and Turkish munitions are aiding the rebels of Azerbaijan and most of the workers in the Baku oil fields have joined them because of the low wages paid them by the government. The peasants also are in revolt on account of the low government price of wheat. The Red army is reported to be shut up in Baku and many of the oil wells of the region are being dynamited.

In southern Russia, including Odessa, Sebastopol and the Crimea, the revolt is due mainly to the prospect of famine coupled with the fact that the government has been exporting vast quantities of wheat. Not only in that region but also in Moscow and Leningrad, the cheka is throwing thousands of persons into prison.

The revolt in the Caucasus is traced directly to the plan of Enver Pasha and Djemal Pasha, both of whom have been killed by the Russians, to free the Caucasus, Turkestan and Persia from bolshevik rule and set up a Turkoman empire. This scheme is supported by many Turks, but the Turkish government has decided to observe strict neutrality and has closed the frontier. Presumably it believes the present movement is not strong enough to warrant its support. Correspondents in the Near East predict that the rebellion will be suppressed before long.

The Moscow government made a considerable gain last week by the signing of a treaty with Hungary in which Hungary recognizes the bolshevik regime and agrees to resume diplomatic relations. Thus the soviets are aligned against both Rumania and the little entente. It is believed the treaty was fostered by Germany in order to strengthen the group of states that are outside the League of Nations.

Communists and government troops in many places in Bulgaria have been fighting, and a number of communist and peasant leaders have been assassinated.

CHIEF interest in the civil war in China has definitely shifted to the north, where the great armies of Gen. Wu Pei Fu, the Chihli chieftain, and Gen. Chang Tso-Lin, the war lord of Manchuria, are drawing together for what promises to be a mighty and possibly decisive battle. Already there have been two or three engagements north of Peking, toward which city Chang is said to be steadily moving both along the Mukden railway and by way of Jehol. Chang has intimated to President Tsao Kun that he intends to bomb Peking. Wu's troops, including those comanded by Feng Yuh Siang, the Christian general, are moving toward the eastern end of the great wall at Shanhaikwan.

Fighting in the region of Shanghai has become less intense, both sides having dug in to await the results of the conflict in the north. Early in the week, however, there were desperate and bloody engagements about the town of Liuho and the Chekiang forces were forced back. Both armies are obtaining great supplies of foreign guns and munitions, including airplanes and armored cars, despite the efforts of the Americans and British to prevent the smuggling of such supplies.

DR. EDOUARD BENES of Czechoslovakia and his sub-committee have drafted and submitted to the assembly of the League of Nations the proposed pacts for disarmament, security and arbitration. They are designed to put some new teeth in the covenant, for they offer an accord with regard to economic and military sanctions to be applied to any nation that refuses arbitration by the league, and every nation signatory to the league covenant is obliged to give full military and naval assistance to such sanctions, as well as economic aid. The members of the league are required to participate in conference for reduction of armaments which shall be convened as soon as possible under the auspices of the league. The compulsory arbitration clause will allow all countries, especially Great Britain, to make reservations when signing it, and the British will insist that their fleet, when engaged in the service of the league, shall not be subject to proceedings before the world court. In other words, if the British fleet in such circumstances comes into conflict with the citizens of powers that are not members of the league, it will have the backing of the entire league.

FRANCE has about abandoned the hope that her debt to the United States will be canceled and is planning to send over a commission to arrange its refunding. President Coolidge lets it be known that he will take no steps in the matter until he receives the recommendations of our own foreign debt commission which is headed by Secretary Mellon. This applies also to the Italian debt. It may be they will be accorded more liberal terms than those of the settlement with Great Britain.

FIFTY thousand former service men assembled in St. Paul, Minn., last week for the sixth annual convention of the American Legion, perhaps the liveliest and most interesting that organization has yet held. Fully 40,000 of them took part in a magnificent parade, with 214 bands and drum corps and numerous handsome floats. Among the prominent men present was Gen. Charles G. Dawes. He was invited to sit in the reviewing stand but very properly declined, saying that he was there merely as a member of the Legion and would "hoof it with the boys." Former Judge Kenesaw M. Landis was there, too, spectacular as always and high in the good graces of the Legion. He addressed the convention on Wednesday on political duties.

"The men and women who do not vote are lazy, good for nothing, shiftless, shabbling derelicts who should be treated as slackers of war times," he said. "Fine them on the first offense and if there is a second offense back the black maria up to their doors and cart them off to jail."

"You men of the Legion are always being told to do things," the judge went on. "I don't think you need to be told how to act in time of peace. You certainly knew how to act in time of war. Nevertheless anyone who does a bit of good is always being called on again. Get the vote out. It's one of your duties as Americans."

Omaha was awarded next year's convention. Most of the fun of the week was provided by the "40 and 8," which staged comic parades and a big jamboree.

FULL compliance with the federal trade commission's order abolishing the Pittsburgh plus system of quoting prices on rolled steel products is promised by the United States Steel corporation and its subsidary companies. The steel manufacturers thus abandon the intention of taking the case up to the Supreme court, but in their notice they state that the validity of the order and the jurisdiction of the commission are not admitted. The corporation and its subsidiaries undertake not to quote prices on their rolled steel products "upon any other basing point other than that where they are manufactured or from which they are shipped." This brings to an end a fight that has been going on for five years, but there is still no certainty that the outcome will inure greatly to the benefit of those who made it—the steel consumers of the Middle West.

STEADILY but with all due caution, the army's globe encircling aviators moved last week across the continent toward their final goal in Oregon, where they started on the epochal flight. Chicago gave them a mighty welcome and they were there two days. Then the honor passed to Omaha, St. Joseph, Muskogee and Dallas. From the latter city they were to fly over the Rockies to southern California.

SECRETARY OF THE NAVY WILBUR, who used to be chief justice of the Supreme court of California, addressed the California Bar association on Catalina island and made the lawyers sit up with a vigorous attack on the Volstead act and on all attempts to invade fundamental rights of the private citizen of the United States.

"State courts as well as national courts," the secretary said, "have overturned laws that preferred one religion to another, that attempted to invade the educational rights of children, that sought to do away with the right of trial by jury, and that tended to permit imprisonment without trial."

Referring to what he termed a "tendency of the times of emergency and public clamor to pass statutes in great public demand," Secretary Wilbur characterized syndicalism laws as an indication of this trend. Continuing, he said:

"The injunctive features of the Volstead act and of the red light abatement acts throughout the country, coupled with the power to impose penalties of imprisonment for a year without trial by jury are an indication of the possibilities of the legislation when once constitutional restrictions are removed."

Immediately afterward, Secretary Wilbur was hastily summoned to Washington by the President, and of course there were reports that his utterances were disapproved by his chief. These were denied at the White House, where it was stated that Mr. Coolidge wished to confer with the secretary concerning naval estimates in the naval budget which had been cut rather severely by Director of the Budget Lord.

Although the navy is now operating on a schedule of curtailment which has included a limitation of repairs to 70 per cent of the recommended program, it is understood that Director Lord has slashed about 20 per cent from the minimum estimates submitted by Secretary Wilbur. The total for the navy to be recommended by the budget director is said to be less than $300,000,000, which, naval experts say, is far below requirements of the department. This is said to cut $10,000,000 from the aviation program. President Colidge, it is understood, is greatly impressed with the possibilities of aviation in naval warfare and is inclined to keep expenses for battleship building as low as possible.

AWARDS totaling more than $65,000,000 were made by the American-German claims commission last week. Of this, about $37,000,000 goes to 61 American insurance companies and $24,300,000 to the veterans' bureau. Umpire Parker decided against American life insurance companies in ten typical cases arising from the sinking of the Lusitania.

FRANK CHANCE, the "Peerless Leader" of the old champion Cubs of the National league, is dead in California, and his passing is mourned by millions who admired him as a square sportsman and a genial gentleman. Yet another figure prominent in the sporting field went out last week when Jimmie Murphy, veteran auto race driver, was killed in an accident during a race at Syracuse, N. Y.

William L. Douglas, former governor of Massachusetts and well known as a manufacturer of shoes, died in Boston at the age of seventy-nine. He had been active in politics since 1884.

THE Prince of Wales, after seeing his countrymen defeated in the polo matches by the American team, spent a few days in and about New York city and has now gone on to his ranch in western Canada.

Really Working Hard for Peace in Europe

Geneva.—Plugging up every hole in the covenant of the League of Nations, so that nobody can crawl out and have an excuse to start a war, is the picturesque phraseology now used in Geneva to describe the efforts of the statesmen and jurists to construct a proctocol which will really make for peace.

Paragraph eight of article fifteen of the covenant declares that "if the dispute between the parties is claimed by one of them and is found by the council to arise out of a matter which by international law is solely within the domestic jurisdiction of that party, the council shall so report and shall make no recommendations as to its settlement."

This is regarded as negative and as leaving a hole in the covenant which must be plugged. Raoul Fernandez of Brazil, M. Politis of Greece and M. Loucheur of France have been charged with the plugging operation.

They seem to apprehend that any unlimited commitment of the services of the British fleet in the interest of maintaining peace would meet with disfavor.

There is a feeling that Great Britain does not wish to excite the apprehension or misgivings of the American people as to what the British might do in connection with American commerce in the event of any conflict arising in Europe.

Cold is a natural disinfectant.

The board of canvessers have announced that the poll books showed the vote to be 5000 for Bryant and 4,951 for Peapples, giving the former a plurality of 55.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Should Use Swamp-Root

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview of the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing, be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

Groesbeck's Peculiarities

Frederick I. Collins, writing in October's Woman's Home Companion says of Governor Groesbeck a few pointed things and we are reprinting them in part for the benefit of our readers. This matter is not intended for political gaff, but is just e plain everyday discussion of the life of Alexander J. Groesbeck and we like it from a novel point of view. It not only makes interesting reading but gives you a better idea of what a public man looks like close-up. Lots of people suppose that men in high offices are spiritual beings only who dont thfnk or act like you and I; but its all wrong; they are simply lucky ones who get in right on politics and have all necessary qualifications for the job:

"Groesbeck isn't bad looking when he smiles. He has less hair than Jack Dempsey but many of the great athlete's physical perfections. His eyes are remarkably bullety, like his head, but as bright as the brightest dollars you ever saw. It seems to bad that those eyes seldom glow, except in enthusiasm for the state penitentiary! Of course the Governor comes naturally by his interest in penitentiaries he spent six years in jail!

"My father was a miller, a saw miller" he explained in the softer mood that followed the first smile, "and he did very well at it. But after a while he had financial reverses which forced him to give up milling and try his hand at jailing. He had always been interested in politics, especially in the political fortunes of Grover Cleveland who was the big national figure of that day. and fell heir as a good party man, to the office of sheriff of Macomb county. There weren't many prisoners in father's constituency and the job was not a heavy one—but carried with it one great perqusite, the right to live in the jail. And that's what we did. Father, Mother, my two sisters, my three brothers and I. You see" the Governor concluded, without committfng himself to the Joke, "I was brought up in a sort of political atmosphere."

"Better begin your career in jail than end it there" I ventured.

The Governor must have heard this pallid jest before but he actually laughed out loud, and I knew from that moment we were to be friends.

"Mother used to say" continued the Governor, "that nothing could happen to the Groesbeck family that would seem very bad after that early experience. Sometimes when things looked pretty bad she would exclaim 'What's that to us" And then to the amazement of strangers, she would add "We have already spent six years in jail"

"During my four years as Attorney-General" he told me "I was amazed to find that the heads of the various departments never got together to talk over the business of the State. That seemed to me all wrong. So when I became governor I decided to change it. The State of Michigan now has a board of directors just like any business, —that meets every week and controls all the activities of all the departments."

COOLIDGE ACCEPTS WITH CONFIDENCE

Has Abiding Faith in Judgment of People on Accomplishments and Purposes.

SEEKS PEACE AND THRIFT

Wants Opportunity for All, No Government Monopolies, Independent But Helpful Foreign Policy.

Washington, Aug. 14.—No single question vital to the people of the United States was dodged by President Coolidge in the first great speech of the political campaign—his speech accepting the nomination as President offered him by the Republican party, and delivered in Washington the evening of August 14.

After outlining the sound foundation of the party system of government, the President said: "Party means political co-operation, not as an end in itself, but a means, an instrument of government. If founded upon a great moral principle and directed with scrupulous regard for its integrity, it cannot fail to sweep onward and upward, advancing always steadily and surely, a mighty constructive force, a glorious bearer of progress.

"That is what the Republican party always has been and is today. In full faith that such it will continue to be, deeply conscious of the high honor it confers and the responsibility it imposes, I accept its nomination for President of the United States.

"In the history of our country is recorded the public services rendered by our party for more than the three-score years. That is secure. I pass on to the recent past and the present."

Progress of Four Years.

The President pointed out the condition of the nation in March, 1921, when the Republicans resumed the reins of government after a lapse of eight years. Though more than two years had passed since the armistice, the nation was still technically in a state of war. No diplomatic relations existed with Turkey, Greece, Russia, Colombia or Mexico, the Far East situation caused "grave apprehensions." Because of the war, "a reckless extravagance had come to characterize the administration of public affairs and was all too prevalent in private life." The national debt had risen to the staggering total of $24,000,000,000, more than $7,000,000,000 of it in short-time obligations without provision for payment. Government bonds were below par. High war taxes burdened the people. Demobilization and liquidation were incomplete. Huge railroad accounts remained unsettled. Transportation was crippled. Unliquidated foreign debts amounted to $11,000,000,000. Banks were filled with frozen assets. Interest was high, capital scarce, and financial distress acute. About 5,000,000 were without employment. No adequate provision had been made for relieving disabled veterans and their dependents. The great powers continued to burden their peoples by building competitive armaments. An avalanche of war-worn people and cheapened merchandise impended upon America from foreign lands, the President pointed out.

Turning to the settlement of these vast problems since the start of the Republican regime, the President pointed out that treaties of world-wide importance have been ratified with Germany, Austria, Hungary, Colombia and Mexico, that 42 other treaties have met with the approval of the senate, while 6 still await action. Friendly intercourse with Greece and Turkey has been resumed. Peace and American rights have been assured in the Far East and the Pacific.

Turning to finance, the President called attention to the enactment of the budget system, and the resultant tremendous savings.

"For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921." President Coolidge said, "our expenditures were $5,538,000,000 and our surplus was $86,000,000. For the year just closed our expenditures were $3,497,000,000, and our surplus exceeded $500,000,000. This was a reduction in the annual cost of government of $2,041,000,000. The public debt now stands at about $21,250,000,000, which is a reduction in three years of about $2,750,000,000 and means an annual saving in interest of more than $120,000,000. The $7,000,000,000 of short-time obligations have all been quietly refunded or paid. The internal revenue taxes have been reduced twice, and many of them repealed, so that during the present fiscal year the tax receipts show a saving to the people of approximately $6,000,000 a day compared with 1921. One government bond has sold well over 105."

The President pointed out that more than 40 per cent of the debt due us from foreign nations has been liquidated, providing funds for liquidating about $13,000,000,000 of the national debt during a 62-year term.

"The finances of this nation have been managed with a genius and a success unmatched since the days of Hamilton," Mr. Coolidge declared.

"A great revival of industry took place, which is spreading to agriculture. Complaint of unemployment has ceased, wages have increased. Capital has become plentiful at a low rate of interest," Mr. Coolidge declared, "and the banks of our country, as a whole, show a high percentage of liquid assets."

M. A. C. To Continue Dairy Alfalfa Drive

Special Dairy Alfalfa campaigns conducted in many Michigan counties during the past three years, will be continued this fall, according to announcement just made by extension specialists at the M. A. C.

Eight counties are listed for the 1924 work, with a possibility that more will be added later. Starting in Mecosta county on October 6, the college campaign teams will eventually reach Ionia, Ogemaw, Alpena, Eaton, Saginaw, Branch, and Lapeer counties, ending in Lapeer on December 24.

The dairy alfalfa campaigns, which are handled on an intensive plan in the counties covered, carry information about farm crops and better dairy practices directly to the back doors of the farmers of the sections visited. Great practical results have followed similar drives held in former years.

M. A. C. Opens For 67th Year

The M. A. C. opened its doors to the young men and women of the state on Wednesday, Sept. 24, for the 67th consecutive year since the college's founding in 1857.

Early enrollment which indicated one of the largest freshmen classes, as well as total attendance in the history of the college featured the registration on Monday and Tuesday. Agriculture, Engineering and Home Economics continued to prove the most popular courses for entering students. although the new Liberal Arts and Applied science divisions drew many registrations.

Dr. Kenyon L. Butterfield, newly installed M. A. C. president welcomed the student body of its arrival, addressing a convocation in the gymnasium Wednesday morning

Rapid progress on the college's building program proved the out standing feature for the returning students. The new library has been finished during the summer and is ready for use by the student body; the college Union Building is rapidly nearing completion, work is under way on the new horticultural greenhouses and building, while a revised landscape plan is being worked out on the campus.

WOMEN OUT TO BEAT 1920 VOTE

Women are getting down to the business of voting.

Statistics show that approximately 25 per cent of the women eligible to vote, actually voted in 1920. This means only about one out of every four.

In 1920 one state had 3,462,879 voting citizens, her total vote was 2,090,468. What about the 1,372,411 who did not vote?

The women's bureau of the Republican National committee, with headquarters in Chicago, has just issued an appeal to the women asking them to see that every eligible voter in their families goes to the polls on registration day.

Women are out to round up the "civic slackers," and this means men as well as women.

Late Blight Shows in Po

Late Blight, a potato has been found in a nu Michigan counties recently by specialists at the M. A. C. who blame weather conditions for the outbreaks reported.

"Late Blight develops most rapidly" says J. W. Weston, college potato specialist, "when conditions are moist and humid, and the temperature is around 70 to 72 degrees. Conditions in the next few days will determine the extent of damage in the state from the disease.

"Potatoes which have been seriously injured by the blight should not be harvested until the afflicted tubers have rotted sufficiently so that they can be detected and will not be harvested with the sound crop, causing the whole masse to rot more or less in storage."

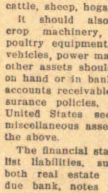
FARMERS' FINANCIAL STATEMENT AS AN AID TO BUSINESS SUCCESS

By D. H. OTIS, Director, Agricultural Commission
American Bankers Association



D. H. Otis

Farmers, like other business men, frequently need to borrow money. Business men furnish their bankers with a statement. Why should not the farmer? In order to safeguard the depositors' money which he loans out, the banker needs full information regarding the borrower's financial condition. Many farmers are entitled to better credit standings which such credit statements will give them. These statements will also tell the farmer whether his business as a whole is a going concern.

It is not such a difficult task to make out a statement at least once a year. The first year will be the hardest. After that it will come easy. The statement should include the value of land and buildings, the value of the crops on hand at the beginning of the year, such as grain, hay, fiber crops, fruits and vegetables, etc. The statement should also include the number and value of the different classes of livestock, including horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, poultry, bees, etc.

It should also show value of crop machinery, dairy equipment, poultry equipment, harness, pleasure vehicles, power machinery, etc. Under other assets should be included cash on hand or in bank, loans receivable, accounts receivable, cash value of insurance policies, stocks and bonds, United States securities and other miscellaneous assets, not included in the above.

The financial statement should also list liabilities, such as mortgages, both real estate and chattel, notes due bank, notes payable to others, accounts or bills due others, premiums on life insurance, interest on taxes, etc.

The net worth may be determined by taking the liabilities from the total assets. If there are any contingent liabilities they should also be listed. These would include endorsements on notes of others, security or bondsman for others, leases or contracts, judgments or suits pending.

Other Information

In addition to the above, general information could be given on the cash value of life insurance assets pledged as collateral or insurance carried on buildings, insurance carried on livestock, insurance carried on machinery or implements, taxes for the year cash received during the year and cash paid out during the year.

These various items can be arranged in tabulated form, and the figures indicating the amounts involved placed opposite each item. A copy of this credit statement should be preserved for use in making out next year's statement, and also for purposes of comparison when two yearly statements have been compiled. This comparison will give the farmer an idea as to how his business is going. It will be in the nature of an inventory, and will furnish abundant food for thought. If the practice is persisted in for a series of years it will be of untold value to the farmer in studying the business management of his farm.

Business men find it absolutely necessary to take inventory and prepare financial statements. Such practice has not been so general with the farmer. Here lies an open door of opportunity. The financial statement is the first step toward reliable farm accounting. Once the farmer gets started in making statements it will stimulate him to keep more records, to study more closely and minutely his business and to ascertain the sources of his profits as well as the factors that make up his expenses. When these are known ways will be suggested as to how to increase receipts and reduce expenses. There are both satisfaction and profit in following up from year to year these credit statements and the farm records that necessarily go with them.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

The Bible in Our Schools

We want to have our children prepared for the moral struggles of life. We know there is something that counts more than intelligence. "It is a good thing to be clever, to be able, to be smart"—Roosevelt, again—"but it is better to have the qualities that find their expression in the Decalogue and the Golden Rule. Honesty, first, then courage, then brains." We want school lessons that will emphasize these things in just about the order Roosevelt gives them. We would not send our children to gymnasiums where they would be trained to use only half of their bodies; or to dancing schools where they would be taught to dance on only one foot. We want the souls of our children made strong; we do not want to turn them out into the world with "moral natures that turn black and blue at the least shock from forces of evil." any Sunday school, Protestant, Catholic, or Jewish."

What about the public schools, then? American children may not hear about prayer there, but they may become aware of the Bible in their schoolrooms.

Half of the 27,000,000 school children in the United States are prevented by law or regulations or custom from hearing the Bible read in school.

With over 10,000,000 unchurched homes, wifh 28,000,000 Sunday schoolless youth, and with perhaps 13,000,000 debarred from hearing Bible reading in the public schools where is a fellow going to learn how to pray?

Perhaps half our children in America are equipped with a knowledge of how to pray, in their homes or at church or Sunday school. How the other half learns is a question. Does its learn?

Is it an even chance that the little fellow you meet on the street in America doesn't know "Now I Lay Me"? Or, "Give us this day our daily bread"? Or even "God help me!"

Why do we want religious instruction for our children? Theodore Roosevelt answered this in what he says:

We know that America is not Godless. God and religion are in many American institutions. This is by the wish of the American people. But the public schools, in which our children are trained, in which one sixth of our population spends its days, are Godless! This, I believe, after investigation, is not by the wish of the American people.

Consider how deeply God and religion are imbedded in our institutions.

The daily sessions of our lawmaking bodies are opened with prayer. Our Presidents kiss the Bible when they take the oath of office. Our various governments, city, county, state and national, pay money to the clergymen to minister to the souls of men in the army. The name of God is repeated daily and awesomely in every courtroom, in the presence of prisoner. Our children hear it in the juvenile courts. Acknowledgment of God is everywhere in our government; But acknowledgment of God by custom or by law sometimes by state constitution is practically barred from the public schools system of the U. S. The amazing part of all this is that it was unintentional. No one seems ever deliberately to have declared that religion should be barred from the American public schools. Our Godless public schools seem an accident, in the whole story of religious education in our public school system in the U. S. that any state, with one questionable exception, has ever deliberately closed the doors of its schools to religious instruction. None of our laws seems to have aimed at keeping God and the Bible out, we admit both into all our institutions except our public schools. Church and state must be separated, but religion and state, they are not separated anywhere in the four different forms of American government, except in the public schools. When a president dies, we gather Jew, Gentile and Catholic churched and unchurched as American citizens in service before one God.

We are in a mess about religious instruction in our public schools. It can be traced back as definitely as any other movement in our history. American forefathers were sick of European idea of education for the rich and none for the poor They were in favor of education of all the children of the whole people, they made America different from all the rest of the world. Beginning with the first settlement in Mass, the town and the church parish were nearly always one and the same. This was due of course to the religious nature of the settlement. The parish was a church division, the town a civic division, usually the same men headed both institutions.

Public money went for religious instruction, of a sort, in the school There was Bible reading and hymn singing and prayer and religious worship in the schools at that time, though teachers were not allowed to teach any special creed. The creeds, of course, were all Protestant, but special creedal instruction was reserved for the church and the home.

Gradually the schools that grew up through the colonies came to be private schools or schools of certain churches. Education got its urge from religion, and almost every school of any account in those times was a school of some certain religious denomination.

Short-Handed Drivers

A couple of weeks ago the Hillsdale Daily News came out with an editorial commending the aldermen of Flint, Michigan, because they passed an ordinance prohibiting or severely penalizing "one-arm driving" within the city limits.

Worse than that—the Hillsdale scribe being a married man—actually and shamelessly backs up the Flint city "dads" in their detestable round-up of cupid. The very idea! As the girl would say, "he is just horrid." Any man who would seek to criticise the boys for driving with one hand, presumably the left, is to say the least, hard-hearted and unfeeling to the extreme.

My dear sir: What do you suppose the boys buy those "flivvers" for, anyhow? Surely not to peddle potatoes with. The usual fellow owns a car in faith believing that some blushing female is going to occupy the off-side of the seat and if she does it will be necessary to use one arm at least (some use two) to keep her in proper position in the machine. Say Mister, did you ever experience the thrills of ownership of the first machine? Is it possible you never drove along the moonlighted road with "her" and the whole world shut out and no voices but the ceaseless katydid?

Well, we give it up. Old Dobbin is no comparison, nor ever was In the days of Old Dobbin and sandy roads, whiskers and underwear, things were different.

No! We don't presume young folks are going to be interfered with and right here we register a "holler" and our name isn't Hi Holler either.

Michigan Dairymen To Win Diplomas

Three hundred and eighty four Michigan dairymen, owners of herds in state cow testing associaions which have passed the 300 pound mark in butterfat production for a year, have earned recognition by the National Dairy Exposition, and will be granted special diplomas if they register at the exposition in Milwaukee the last of September.

Of the 1425 dairy herds in cow test association work in the state during the year from July 1, 1923 to July 1, 1924, nearly a third, or the 384 which have earned the diplomas, reached the coveted goal of 300 pound production. This percentage is said by dairy officials to be an unusually high one, reflecting credit on the dairy industry of Michigan.

Many of the farmers who own "300 pound" herds are planning to attend the dairy exposition in Milwaukee from September 27 to Oct 4, according to A. C. Baltzer extension specialist in dairying at M. A. C. who is arranging details of the trip.

"ELLEN!"

SYNOPSIS.—Ellen and Joe Latimer, orphans, without means, make their home with their Aunt Elsie, at Port Washington, small New York town. Ellen is studying art, her expenses being paid by Mrs. Sewall Rose, girlhood friend of her mother. Mrs. Rose invites Ellen to a Thanksgiving house party and the girl is delighted. On the way from the station to Mrs. Rose's Ellen rides with a remarkably attractive young woman and a much older man. She takes them for father and daughter, but they are introduced as Mr. and Mrs. Josselyn. Ellen does not "fit in" with the younger members of the party, and is miserable. Leaving for her home next morning, Ellen meets Gibbs Josselyn, son of her fellow guest. He has disapproved of his father's wedding and is not on speaking terms with the couple. Declining to stay at Mrs. Rose's, Gibbs drives Ellen to the station. They miss the train and Gibbs undertakes to drive the girl to Port Washington. Their auto is wrecked. Ellen is hurt, but it is not thought to be serious, and she and Gibbs part. He has been attracted by the girl, and she by him. Ellen's injury proves to be severe, and for months she is an invalid.

The glory of the year deepened swiftly, and joy kept pace with it in Ellen's heart. The harness was long gone, the couch was upstairs again, and only a cushioned rocking-chair in its place. Ellen could sweep the garden path again, with her blue sunbonnet over her eyes. Ellen could cut out cookies on condition that she went straight upstairs and lay down for an hour afterward. Except that she usually went to bed at eight o'clock, and avoided the more violent forms of youthful amusement, Ellen might live her old life again.

But it would never be the old life. It was so enriched and so enhanced by the five long months in prison that Ellen felt sensations of freedom absolutely birdlike, warmth and flowers and blue sky intoxicated her. Leonard Henshaw, for whose attentions she had wistfully longed a year ago, was her captive now, but she did not want to marry Leonard Henshaw. She only wanted to be alive, and to claim her work and play among the living again.

May thirtieth, always a great day in Port Washington annals, broke cloudless, and found all the village already in holiday mood. The yacht clubs would go into commission at high noon, with every imaginable form of gayety to do honor to the occasion. At the Port Washington club, where Ellen and her friends would presently gather, there were to be swimming races, a great outdoor luncheon, a baseball game between the married and the unmarried men, moving pictures, games and prizes for the small children, a dance until long after midnight, and, of course, the raising of the colors.

Ellen was taken down by the Henshaw boys, in their car, at eleven o'clock, and was under parole not to race, even if she swam, not to "crew" even if she sailed, and to be home at five o'clock to get three hours' rest before the dance.

Strings of color were fluttering everywhere, women with baskets were gathering on the clubhouse porch, eager boats were cutting about the pier end like restless gulls, tenders, loaded to their capacities, were making for the yachts. Presently the colors went up, fluttering gayly against the blue, and the cannon, fired from the grassy mound before the clubhouse, was answered by twenty booming shots from the boats. As the detonation died away the band burst madly into sound, and thirty young figures plunged from the pier end for the first swim, to pull themselves upon the float a moment later as sleek as seals, and add their shrieks and laughter to the general uproar.

If Ellen Latimer, one of the seals, who was warning Bobby Carnival that if he pushed her into the water again he would be sorry for it the longest day of his life, had chanced to glance toward The Eaglet, one of the visiting yachts in the bay, anchored three hundred yards away from her, she might at this moment have received a shock. For a man with a thick mop of silvered hair under a visored yachting cap was standing there, yawning happily in the warm sunshine.

Gibbs Josselyn, if he had been through no such schooling as Ellen in the last few months, had suffered, too, in his own way. Like Ellen, he had seemed to lose his place in the world, with his father's marriage, his resignation from his father's firm, and the transplanting from his father's house to his club. Sensitive and proud, he found the attitude of his intimates equally distasteful, whether they sympathized with him or criticized him, he missed his work, and found no incentive to take up anything new.

Without his realizing it, the pretty little Miss Latimer had touched him. She was not flirting, like Lucia, she was dead in earnest, the bright-eyed, rosy little enthusiast.

He chanced to come to Manhasset harbor with George Lathrop and George's motherless boy and girl in time for the opening of the clubs on Decoration day.

George, Junior, leaping out of the cabin ready for swimming, the older men followed suit, and Gibbs, whom the boy adored blindly in all things, passed him in the fresh dancing water, and dragged himself up on the anchored raft at the side of the club pier, where they got into conversation with a boy in a dirty gray sweater, who was sitting there idly in the sun.

"This is going to be the girls' race now," said the boy, when he and George, Junior, had discussed several important matters. "They'll all line up here, and dive, and swim to the float, and touch it, and then swim back."

On the pier, the crowd was gathering to watch the races, and presently a dozen slender laughing girls in wet bathing suits formed a line on the edge of the float, and at the crack of the pistol were into the water with one shout, and tearing like so many salmon for the swimmers' float. The sweatered boy was now heard to observe to George, Junior:

"That's my sister out there on the float. She could beat 'em all! She got first prize last year, and two years ago. She fell out of an automobile, and hurt her spine, and they won't let her swim yet."

"I don't know what she's doing in that rig, then," Gibbs observed.

"Oh, well, she swims, but she can't race!"

Gibbs thought the big, loosely-built country fellow had a most engaging smile, and paid small attention to his words at the moment. Meanwhile Ellen, wrapped in a mantle of drying black hair, was rocking herself back and forth on the float, discussing the races, and congratulating the winner. Perhaps she noticed the two strange men and the boy who dived suddenly from the anchor float, but as this chanced to be the moment when the Henshaw boys, with two girl passengers, elected to upset their canoe, it was probable that she saw nothing of the visitors.

Later, when she and Aunt Elsie were busy at the lunch tables that had been built on the green between the clubhouse and the tennis courts, and with a score of other women were cutting cakes, helping salad, and pouring coffee, Joe lounged up to them, gorging on sandwiches, interested in all other forms of food, and even willing to be useful in some not too conspicuous way.

"There's a feller on one of the yachts that ast me to come out with a boat, about four o'clock, and bring him in to get cigarettes and ice and butter and things," Joe volunteered. "He asked me my name, and I said Latimer. I get sick of this 'Joe—Joe—Joe' business. Every wop in the place is named Joe! Gosh, that kid with them must have things pretty easy. His sister was there, a little kid—but Gosh, she was a pippin! Harriet! She's about ten or twelve with her hair all hanging round!"

Ellen laughed, and for the young Latimers the episode seemed closed. And yet not only to Ellen, and to Gibbs Josselyn, but to Joe and the innocent Harriet of the hanging locks, the hour was filled with possibilities, and never to be stricken from the calendar of the four lives again.

For Gibbs had caught the name Joe called to George Lathrop, Senior, and had mused upon it.

"Latimer—that's funny. Latimer and Port Washington—he might be her cousin or something. I suppose the same names run through all grades in these old country places. If he comes at six, I'll ask him if he knows my little lady. What did Mrs. Rose call her?—Helen, that was it!"

"Is there any one down here named Helen Latimer?" he duly asked Joe, late in the sweet summer afternoon, when the races were over.

"No, sir. I guess my grandfather and my sister and I are the only ones of that name," Joe answered, after a moment's thought.

"You never heard of a lady named Mrs. Rose—Mrs. Sewall Rose?"

"Sure I did!" Joe said, smiling. "She's the lady that got my sister started in the art school!"

"Well, of course!" Gibbs was surprised at his own pleasure in identifying her at last. "Your sister, that's it! And what is her name?"

"Ellen," Joe smiled.

"Ellen, of course!" Gibbs echoed. "Well, how is she?"

"Oh, she's all right now," Joe answered carelessly. "If you're coming ashore for the dance tonight, you'll see her. She can't dance, except just a little, but she's going down."

"I hardly think we will come in for the dance," Gibbs answered. "Funny—she looks as if she could dance! But you give her my love—Mr. Josselyn, will you?"

At the dinner table George Lathrop asked Gibbs if he had noticed that boy. That was no sort of boy to be knocking about the water front of a small fishing village, he had an exceptionally fine face.

"I'd like to get hold of a boy like that, and keep him about the place," Lathrop said, enthusiastically. "It would be the making of George."

"Well, if you like the boy, I assure you you'd be amazed at the sister," Gibbs said. "She's a little beauty; dainty, clever, quick as a whip! I take it they're the best sort of American blood, come of a long line of simple, decent people—"

"What's the matter with her?" Lathrop asked.

"The matter with her—how d'you mean?" Gibbs, who was mixing a salad dressing, looked up sharply.

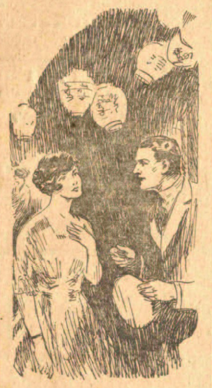
"Why, she's sickly, or something," his host answered innocently. "Didn't you hear the boy say this morning that she couldn't swim any more, and just now, didn't you hear him say that she couldn't dance?"

"He said she'd been in a motor accident, and hurt her spine," little George said. "But she got the prize for swimming last year, and second prize in the ladies' singles—What is it, Uncle Gibbs?"

For Gibbs had laid down his fork and was staring at him strangely.

"Great Lord!" he said in a horrified undertone. "But that couldn't be!" And as they all looked at him in surprise, he turned toward his host. "You remember when my car was in a smash-up, last November, George?" he said. "It just occurred to me—it just occurred to me that that little girl was with me! I don't suppose there's one chance in a thousand that that was where she got hurt—I don't suppose there's one chance in a million—"

He got up and walked to the cabin window. The sunset gun had fired, the banners were lowered. Port Washington was dotted with lights in the early darkness, other lights mirrored themselves in the quiet bay.



Then She Stopped Speaking and One Hand Went With a Quick Gesture to Her Heart, and in the Dimness He Saw Her Breast Rise Suddenly, and Her Lips Part a Little.

"I guess you and I will have to go over and have a look at that dance, George," he said.

* * * * * * *

It was a night made for youth, and beauty, and the innocent, radiant egotism of beauty and youth. Ellen knew, when the girls told her she looked perfectly adorable, that they spoke no more than the truth. To her happy eyes they all looked adorable, and she truthfully returned their compliments.

Gibbs, his host, and both the children came ashore in the rowboat of the Eaglet at eight o'clock. Lathrop, Senior, had friends among the club members, and was quickly taken to the heart of Port Washington's younger set. He was a democratic man, and he liked to see his daughter's blonde locks bobbing over the shoulder of the boy who had rowed the boat that afternoon. Gibbs had declined to enter the ballroom at once, and had remained on the porch to finish his cigarette.

From the darkness here he watched the dancers, and he had no difficulty in finding Ellen, in her pale pink ruffles, with her exquisite, radiant face. She was not dancing, although the blue eyes and the pink slippers evidently longed to dance, and when Gibbs first saw her, was talking prettily to some older woman with great gravity and attention. A youth came up and she transferred her earnest gaze to him, and presently Gibbs felt a quick sensation of almost pain near his heart as her face brightened into an actual laugh.

So sweet, so young, so innocently fresh and good! Gibbs wondered whether summer and moonlight had gotten into his blood, as he felt it run warmer at the sight of her. Too dignified to write him what a day of pleasure had cost her, too honest to make capital out of the fortuitous chance, she could adjust her little affairs with courage and character, and, having chosen her path, pursue it to the end.

The man who won Ellen Latimer would be a lucky man, he thought, with a curious wistfulness.

And suddenly, with an unaccustomed flush of color in his face, the question sprang into his heart full formed. Suppose such a girl could come to care for a man like him? Where could he find anything better, or sweeter, or more rich in promise for the years to come? He was tired of the old life, he had never really cared for the false standards, the superficial women, the intriguing, shallow girls, the show and glitter and cost. To put his arm about that lovely young body, to feel her close to him as she raised her flowerlike face for his kiss, to see Ellen in the sort of gowns he could design for her, crouched beside a studio fire—crossing an old garden in spring— Nothing in months had so stirred his old delight in living as the thought of pleasing her, spoiling her, finding the untouched deeps of her joy always fresh.

Suddenly the plan was born. Paris! They would go to Paris, and there they could both work, and could make for themselves a life nothing short of the ideal. A dim old studio, one of those clever maids who delight in the cooking art, summers idling in Brittany or Holland. And the lovely young Mrs. Josselyn, a picture in gipsy hats and summer smocks, or velvet, childish winter gowns, would fill his life with sweetness, and inspiration, and everything that was clean and good and honest.

He crossed the porch to the door of the ballroom as the dance ended, and met her, in the group of girls and boys who were coming out for a breath of cooler air. She was talking to another girl, but she saw the strange man, and turned her bright eyes curiously toward him. Then she stopped speaking, and one hand went with quick gesture to her heart, and in the dimness he saw her white breast rise suddenly, and her lips part a little.

He got her hand, and held it, and still she did not speak, merely stood breathing high, and looking steadily at him.

Gibbs found his own voice curiously unmanageable. He cleared his throat.

"Ellen!" he said.

Another dance began, and another, and yet another. And through them all Ellen and Gibbs sat on the dark porch, over the softly moving water, and talked with that desperate deep relief that pilgrims know who find fresh, icy springs after the parching desert, or mothers know who weep beside the bedside of the child that will live.

It seemed to Ellen that all her life had been only a preparation for that talk. Sometimes he made her laugh, and she would flash him a look from averted blue eyes, and bring all her dimples into sudden play, and often she made him laugh, and would regard him with delicious childish seriousness until his mirth was explained. But for the most part they were serious, there was much to explain, much that was sad and poignantly sweet to remember, and with eloquent looks and monosyllables they relived it all, and found it inexhaustibly wonderful and strange.

And at midnight Ellen was driven away, by Leonard Henshaw, her hand still warm from the touch of Gibbs' big hand, her shoulder still feeling the pressure of his protective arm, her heart and mind and soul in a whirl of starshine. She undressed, wrapped in a sort of love for the gown and the hair and the eyes Gibbs had praised, and lay down on her small white bed and extinguished her light so promptly that her restless aunt, in the next room, felt a sensation of gratitude.

But Ellen had no time to waste with sleep tonight.

Nor did Gibbs sleep. He sat outside his stateroom far into the morning, smoking, thinking, smoking again. At about four o'clock, when a faint hint of dawn was glimmering into the darkness, George, Senior, looked yawning out.

"For the Lord's sake—old man!"

"I know—I'm coming now." Gibbs arose, cold, yawning and stretching. "I know," he apologized, smiling. And coming near to the tousled and pajama-clad form of his friend he said with a certain boyish appeal in his voice: "I'm awfully happy about something, George, and awfully—sort of scared. Wish me luck, old man!"

> "Well, it's evident Gibbs and Ellen are to be married. How will their marriage turn out? That's the next question.

Use of Columns Gave Charm to Old Houses

Much of the charm of old Colonial houses in the United States and of the plantation mansions of the old South was inherent in the use of the architectural column, an element popular wherever men build beauty as well as sound construction into the structures they erect.

For thousands of years, from far off antiquity, architects and builders have found nothing so utilitarian and beautiful as the column. Most all of the famed buildings of the ages owe much of their character and beauty to the use of columns as important exterior and interior structural details.

A column fulfills its purpose when it really supports the structural weight above it. It should never be a false ornamental detail, forcing the structural support to be gained elsewhere. Steel is a material which lends itself particularly well to column construction and is capable of yielding that sharpness of line that a genuinely attractive column ought to possess.

As a general rule it will be found that Roman or Greek Doric goes well with the simpler design of building. Roman Corinthian, Greek Ionic and the more florid variations due to Renaissance influence fit in logically with the more pretentious type of building, interiorly and exteriorly.

"Patented Leather"

"Patented leather" is the real name of the japanned and permanently polished leather that nowadays we speak of as "patent leather."

When boots made of this leather first began, very many years ago, to be put on the market, they were described as "patented." As a matter of fact, it is doubtful whether the whole process was patented, though, of course, each successive inventor has patented his particular varnish, and so on.

Listening for a Metal

Old legends tell of men who had the power to look down into the earth and see where gold and silver lay hidden.

We cannot do this yet, but something almost as wonderful is now possible, says London Tit-Bits. We can listen and hear the veins of precious metal.

Two Swedish engineers, Hans Lundberg and Harry Nathorst, have invented an electrical instrument which will locate metallic ores under the ground and indicate their presence by making a sound that can be heard.

The prospector carries the instrument over the ground he is prospecting and, with telephone receivers fixed on his head, listens. When the instrument passes over a vein a sound is heard, and the prospector knows that what he seeks is somewhere beneath his feet.

Burning soft coal will heat three times more space at one quarter the cost, than any other heating stove with the same size firepot.

WHY? Because the damper back of the firepot burns the cheapest soft coal or screenings and all the smoke and soot with the same regularity and cleanliness as the burning of gas, producing a steady heat day and night.

No Smoke! No Soot! No Dirt!

Two tons out of every three tons of soft coal are wasted in all heating stoves constructed without a damper back of the firepot. Besides the offense inside and outside the house from the accumulation of soot. The Florence makes its own gas and burns it, and makes its own coke and burns it. Steady heat day and night when the weather is 20 below zero. The medium size holds fire 3 days and 3 nights with one filling. Other sizes in proportion.

The Florence is an investment. It pays for itself every two years in the saving of coal. In zero weather it will pay for itself the first season in the saving of doctor bills and eliminating irregular heat.

No one seems to have any use for a bachelor. Some seem to think there ought to be a bachelor tax; just as if every old sod buster was himself to blame! And they want every bachelor taxed 60 per cent of his income. To a novice bachelors are selfish rascals that the world has no use for A well-meaning old lady said to a beautiful girl the other day: "You should set your cap for W. J. my dear. The Big Fair Was A Winner

Secretary Terwilliger and the entire Association of the fair are deserving of great credit and recipients of congratulation for the success of the 74th exhibition and races. There is not one person who attended the Fair last week that can say it has an equal anywhere in Southern Michigan—but some will probably try their hands at it.

In every department from the furthermost point of the racing stables to the topmost parts of Floral Hall a completeness and elegance reigned.

Well, Jackson friends what d'ye think? How'd you trade your wonderful location in the heart of a big city and the backing-up of a rich agricultural county and your financial up-lift for a clean, morally decent, sweeping display of everything a good Fair can have—a mighty good reputation and prospects of a yet better patronage next year? Eh! What? You won't trade. Neither would we.

The wonderful success of the "most popular fair" can be traced to a number of sources, chief of which are fairness, decency, popular admission prices and sanitary management. Never since the days of auld lang syne has Hillsdale Fair been tainted with a concession in the least off color, and the conscience of the Association is as clean as a Dutch kitchen—Jackson papers please copy.

The Pawnee Indian show attracted as much attention probably any show on the grounds. These Indians are making the rounds of the country fairs giving their talks, native songs and war dances, also incidentally calling our attention to some things which the Red men would like done for their benefit, at the same time thanking the pale face brothers for all that has been done for the Indian race. The Wild West show under the supervision of the society proved a popular drawing card.

We did not see any of the pretty little buzzing wheels whereby you lay down your money and depart sadder but wiser. The mercantile exhibits were fully up to the standard of excellence and a record breaking display of live stock is reported. Farm machinery of all kinds was of the best.

The little gasoline driven walking cultivator drew the farmer contingent like a swarm of bees.

Automobiles were exhibited in great variety and the man who couldn't find one to suit his taste or pocketbook was a Tarter. From the small shiny Greyhounds of Ford manufacture to the big Lincolns and Buicks that moved with the silence and precision of a watch, the array was endless. An old pioneer Ford runabout of 1910 came in for its share of approval and we'll bet it looked a mighty sight better to the young fellow of that date who had pedaled a bicycle until he was knee-sprung, than the modern Rolls-Royce does to the average plebeian to-day.

The races thongh mostly by foreign horses, were above the average. Old Doc Hart showed up well, notwithstanding he was pocketed and practically shut out.

Secretary Terwilliger states officially that if the attendance during the week amounted to 65,000 he would be well satisfied, and it might even do better than that when the returns were all figured up. Some of the papers get wild eyed on fair week and deliriously estimate the total attendance of the week from 100,000 to 125,000. Possibly few realize what the later number would mean on the fair grounds but it is likely many years will elapse before that number can be recorded at the fair.

An Apology

Owing to the fact that we were misinformed we want to say that the item last week concerning the plumbing of the Jonesville school house was in error. Mr. Keefer did not take the contract but simply does the work by the hour. He has no partnership with Mr. Parish but hires the latter by tbe hour.

Had an Odd Sound

The Dutchman still retained a strong Fatherland accent altho' he had been here forty years, and he was a church warden. When the rector complained that a certain parishioner had called him an ass, and asked advice, the reply though well intentioned, sounded ambiguous: "All you should do vill pe youst to bray for him, as usual."

The proper method to estimate the range of a radio receiving set is to see how far the set can receive signals in the daytime, between 11 o'clock in the morning and 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Stations that can be picked up regularly between these hours are the ones upon which the receiving range should be based.

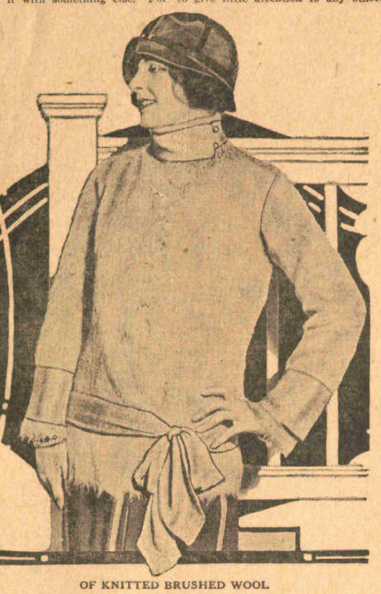
BRUSHED WOOL IS IN STYLE; FALL BLOUSES ARE NOW HERE

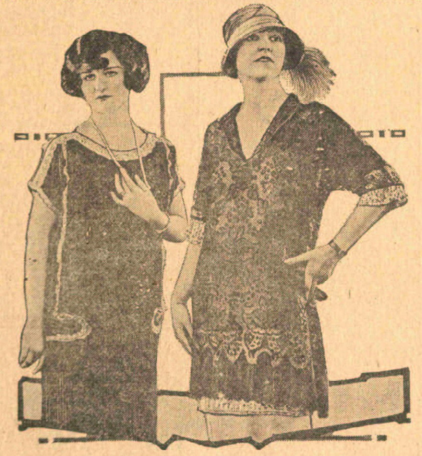
WHEN it comes to ultra style, much of the new fall knitted outerwear seems to "say it" with brushed wool. Not that brushed wool in itself is an unknown quantity, but it is because of its fascinating knitted interpretations, that we are experiencing new thrills this season. Designers have succeeded in lifting the brushed wool theme out of the commonplace, until today it is the outstanding expression of knitted style distinction.

Part of the scheme of displaying brushed wool at its handsomest is to contrast it with something else. For instance, in case of the effective sweater here pictured, the brushed wool assumes a greater shagginess and attractiveness because of its wide trimmings of fiber silk at collar, hip and sleeves. This mode of finishing is a decorative feature emphasized throughout the brushed wool collections this season. Note, also, the new Russian neckline.



OF KNITTED BRUSHED WOOL

It is a foregone conclusion that the schoolgirl's wardrobe will include a brushed wool sweater in some one or other of the newest jeune fille models. Especially popular is the middy of brushed wool, and long sleeves must it have to be up-to-the-moment in modishness.



TWO FALL BLOUSES

These favored middies are knitted in shaggy white with plain knit fiber scarlet trimmings, in buff with blue and the most recent cool weather arrivals stress ruddy browns, cocoa and beige.

If a brushed wool sweater with fiber silk knit details be not chosen, it is only because it has been outrivaled by a fiber silk or rayon sweater reversing the order, by using the brushed wool for its trimming. Brushed wool bandings, collars, cuffs and belts on plain smooth-knit silken garments is one of the ways designers have in setting forth a new fashion. Sometimes straightline knit frocks are elaborated with borders of shaggy knit wool. The fact that such novel effects as brushed wool, also clipped or sheared wool, have come into play this season adds a refreshing note to the styling of present-day knitted outerwear.

In the fall showings hiplength jackets of brushed wool striped in colorful patterns are featured, also fanciful scarfs of brushed wool.

When new blouses for fall began to arrive they brought in their company the tunic-blouse. There is never any question as to the welcome that awaits blouses each season; the overblouse has made a comprehensive success, paving the way for its next of kin, the tunic-blouse, which has already established itself among the new modes for fall and winter.

Overblouses are developed in tailored, sports and formal styles, but the tunic-blouse, so far, confines itself to the dressier types and seems likely to give little attention to any others. It varies as to length, having grown longer with the advance of the season, and employs all the fabrics at hand for making afternoon or evening costumes—as georgette, brocaded chiffon and other brocades, crepe de chine, velvet and laces. It impresses embroideries, beadings, plaitings into its service for adornment and undertakes all the responsibility of afternoon or evening dress when worn with plain satin skirts. One of the earliest arrivals in tunic-blouses is shown at the right of the picture in which black and white all-over laces are combined with plaited georgette. Edges of the black lace are finished with bindings of black satin

Tunic-blouses and overblouses reveal variety in necklines, with the "V" shaped neck opening, high at the back, a favorite. Convertible collars, which may be worn up about the throat or open at the front, scarf attachments and several styles in high collars are points of interest in autumn blouses.

Crepe de chine continues to rank first among fabrics for making the overblouse, but canton crepe, knitted bengaline, georgette, lace and metal brocades are all represented—the last three for blouses to be worn with the costume suit. Simple models for afternoon are shown in long and short-sleeved designs and are very often trimmed with emplacements of filet lace or narrow val lace edgings—or both. Val lace frills and a lattice decoration of narrow ribbon give a good account of themselves as a finish for the simple and pretty blouse pictured here.

Lingerie of Linen

Lingerie of fine white linen is again in favor. The ultrasmart French woman seldom favors lingerie of any other sort, but nowadays she permits it to be embroidered in cashmere-shawl tones of faded blue and red and gold.

Chic Autumn Colors

The three colors most chic in jewelry for autumn are sapphire blue, deep red, and emerald. Oriental bracelets in all these colors combined are a novel and delightful idea.

Effective Trimming

More than a touch of luxury is added to a pair of flesh-colored girdles that are covered with two ruffles of black chantilly lace. A brassiere of the same filmy material over flesh color silk completes the costume.

Colors That Blend

Trimmings, whether for headgear or gowns, employ many nasturtium shades. Brown and sand are popular color combinations, as well as black and white and two shades of gray.

Famous Character in Popular Books

"Oliver Twist," as at first born in the brain of Dickens, was a different creation from the Oliver we know. It was a visit by Dickens to Cruikshank's studio that changed the life story of the workhouse boy. There the author saw a series of sketches illustrating the career of a London thief. There was a sketch of a Fagin's den. There was the Artful Dodger, Charley Bates and Bill Sikes. All these Dickens worked into the book which the world knows so well.

Sir Rider Haggard won greater fame by his strange creation, the never-dying queen, "She," than by anything else he wrote. "She's" origin was the legend of the Queen Majaji, well known to the natives of the hills around Zoutpansberg, which Sir Rider was one of the first Britishers to hear. Majaji has really been dead for many years, but the natives believe she still lives, hidden in some mysterious cavern of the mountains of the Transvaal.

Changes in Sun's Spots

By means of photographs of the sun, Prof. G. H. Peters, of the United States observatory, showed members of the American Astronomical society in session at Hanover, N. H., how the number of spots on the sun had decreased and increased during a period of many months. Few spots in August, 1923, after several months of decrease in numbers and followed by a sharp increase in September were taken to indicate the ending of a cycle of 11 years of solar activity and the beginning of a new period of similar length.

Better Than Lawyers

"Where's your lawyer?" demanded Judge Collins recently of a colored man who was up before him for trial. When the colored man replied that he did not have a lawyer the judge assigned one of the assistant prosecutors to defend him. The man looked at the judge for a moment and leaned over the bar and "whispered" in a voice that could be heard throughout the courtroom. "Judge, if you would give me a couple of good witnesses, I think they would do me more good than the lawyer."—Indianapolis News.

"After all Tanlac has done for me I will sing its praise the longest day I live," is the grateful statement of John Coakley, 518 Spies Ave., Menominee, Mich., a resident of this place for 50 years.
"When I began taking Tanlac I was helpless from rheumatism. I couldn't raise either hand and had to have help to put on my clothes and get up when down. I couldn't eat or sleep and my wife and children were downhearted thinking my time was about over.
"My wife wrote a Mrs. Miller in Milwaukee about my condition and the reply came back: 'Give him Tanlac.' So I began taking Tanlac and after my fifth bottle I was able to get back to my work. And in seven months my weight increased from 128 to 165 lbs. and my troubles were in the past. I am feeling fine now and I want the world to know that Tanlac is what did it. Anyone wishing to verify this statement, just call on or write John Coakley, 518 Spies Ave., Menominee, Mich."

Aeroplane Mail Service

The great man-made birds which circumnavigate the heavens of today are a wonderful tribute to the perseverance and genius of the Wright Brothers who worked so faithfully for many years to bring about the innovation notwithstanding they were scoffed at and jeered as was Robert Fulton when he built the Clermont on the Hudson and as was Cyrus W. Field when he sought to clasp hands with the nations of the Old World across the Atlantic by means of the cable.

Probably there is no invention so far in our history which is so useful to man as the air mail from coast to coast. You all are familiar with the record made by one aviator of dawn to dawn from New York to San Francisco not long ago but the regular schedule is now a day and a half. The airmail leaves New York City at noon and arrives in San Francisco on the evening of the next day, which of course necessitates some 1200 miles of night flying, and to facilitate this the government uses a superb system of electric lighting. The usual night hours are between Chicago and Cheyenne Wyoming but this has been lengthened eastward to Cleveland and westward to Rock Springs.

The main area lighting towers are located at Chicago, Iowa City, North Platte and Cheyenne besides 18 inch incandescent beacons at all emergency landing fields between Cleveland and Cheyenne. These last are of 5,000,000 candle power. The big 36 inch lights are of 450,000,000 candle power and revolve in a circle three times each minute throwing a beam visible 150 miles away. Between the emergency fields at intervals of three miles are placed gas lights. So t at the route during the night hours is one continuous illuminated white way. Even in the stormiest blackest night no aviator can lose his way.

The aeroplane shortens the distance from coast to coast by many miles as it is practically an airline. These religious fanatics who preach the end of the world as near, seemingly are not so terribly far off center as one might imagine. When we think of every modern improvement which the world is using we sometimes wonder if the zenith is reached and we can go no further.

If the progress of science and invention is to go on for the next 50 years as it has in the past 50 years one naturally conjectures "where will we be at?"

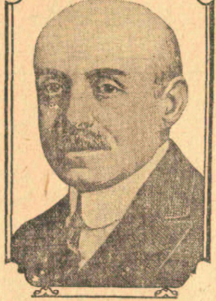
State To Entertain Crops and Soils Men

Leading farm crops and soils specialists of the country, members of the American Society of Agronomy, will visit Michigan in the summer of 1925, their annual meeting being scheduled for the M. A. C.

More than 200 men, drawn from practically every state in the union from Canadian provinces, and from the U. S. Department of Agriculture at Washington, will be included in the list of visitors, according to Prof. J. F. Cox of the M. A. C. crops staff, through whom the invitation was extended to the agronomists.

The cooperative state and government sugar beet and field bean work being carried on at the M. A. C. station will be one of the features studied at the convention along with the large development work with alfalfa and sweet clover at the East Lansing plats. Special soil tests will also be available, while a planting of all leading wheat varieties of the central and northern states will be set out especially to provide material for the visiting crops men.

OPPORTUNITY IN AMERICA



WILLIAM E. KNOX

Radical demagogues sometimes accuse the capitalistic system with favoring the rich and powerful as against the poor and lowly. Fifty-three years ago an Irish lad of nine was brought to the United States by his parents. He went to the public schools and then began work as an office boy. A few days ago, on October 1, he was elected president of the American Bankers Association, the world's largest financial organization. He is president of one of the largest savings banks in the United States, the Bowery Savings Bank of New York City. This election of William E. Knox, who has risen from Irish immigrant to chief of American bankers, is the most striking reminder of the year of the democracy of opportunity in capitalistic America.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

On How Not to Make Out Checks

"The most annoying thing has happened, Aunt Emmy," exclaimed Helen. "I sent a check for $5 to the hospital to help them in their drive and some one cashed it. Isn't it a shame, for I simply can't afford to send another."

"I don't see how that could happen," said Aunt Emmy, "if you made out the check properly."

"Why, of course, I did," Helen said. "I made it out just as I always do, to 'bearer.'"

Aunt Emmy laughed. "No wonder you lost it!" she said. "Any one at all could cash a check made out like that. It's very careless of you to do it, no matter to whom the check is given. It would only take a few seconds to write the name of the payee properly. A check made out to 'Bearer' may be cashed by any one who gets it. It is regrettable but true that not every one is honest. You know that lots of people would take a five dollar bill if they happened to find it. A check made payable to bearer or to 'cash' is just as tempting to them as a five dollar bill would be."

"But, Aunty, it was so frightfully mean to steal from the hospital!"

"You invited this particular theft by neglecting to make your check out properly," Aunt Emmy admonished Helen. "You may be glad your loss is no greater. Even when you go to the bank for money yourself you should not make your check payable to cash. Suppose you should lose it on the way? The same thing that happened to the hospital check might happen to it. Better take an extra minute and make the check out to yourself, sign your name to it as usual and indorse it just as though it were one you received from someone else."

"That seems like a lot of times to sign your own name on one little check, doesn't it, Aunty?" objected Helen.

"It's ever so much better to be on the safe side than to lose your money through carelessness," retorted Aunt Emmy.—Anne B. Aymes.

Government Does Not Own Reserve Banks

In the discussion of the Federal Reserve banks and their operations, undue emphasis has frequently been placed on their relation to the government, and they are frequently called "government banks." As a matter of fact, they are not "government banks" in a true sense, but are corporations organized under an act of Congress, and owned entirely by their member banks. The government does not hold a single share of their stock. The control of the banks' operations is also largely in the hands of the member banks, who elect two-thirds of the Federal Reserve bank directors, the remaining one-third being appointed by the government to represent the interest of the government and the public.

The Federal Reserve banks, it is true, are agents of the government in addition to their other activities, and in this capacity they must follow the instructions of the government in handling transactions which they perform simply as agents. We believe that it is important that the fact that a clear understanding of this point should be generally had, as many of the criticisms made against the Federal Reserve banks have been based [illegible] apprehension as to their rela- [illegible] the gov-

The Results of Moonshine Drinking

The fact that moonshine liquor is now made by every conceivable kind of a person, good, bad or indifferent, should lead some of the guzzlers who drink to either quit the whiskey habit altogether, or else prepare their souls for the ascension and call in the undertaker. Reports of the prohibition agents about the country as to the nature and content of the stuff which is sold by "bootleggers" its certainly enough to frighten most any person into being a total abstainer.

Notwithstanding scores of people have been made blind by drinking the vile stuff, and notwithstanding insanity has been brought on too, the liquor yet appeals to some men.

The simplest and probably most dangerous method of manufacture yet known is practiced by using an old copper boiler as a still and laying an old blanket over it to catch the fumes after which the blanket is wrung out and the contents in some cases is labeled with high sounding names.

"Moonshine liquor often contains metallic poisons, due to the practice of bootleggers of peddling it in fruit jars which have zinc lids. The acids in the liquor form what is known as zinc salts, the drinking of which causes acute gastritis and other serious ailments. The presence of these salts cannot be detected by taste alone, but a thorough chemical analysis is necessary which the average drinker can neither afford nor considers essential.

"The almost inconceivable conditions uuder which moonshine whiskey is manufactured lend further elements of danger in its consumption. The illicit still by its very nature must be clandestine. It hides itself in thickets, fields and barns. The containers consist of old barrels, rusty ice cream cans galvanized oil cans, milk cans, wash boilers, and other metal vessels, unspeakably filthy and ill smelling after repeated use without cleaning. The unprotected fermenting mixture attracts animal life of every description which feed upon the material and often drowns in it. The materials used are of the worst, and even though it were possible to procure a pure yeast culture, the contamination produced by wild yeasts and bacteria would result in poor fermentation.

The principal ingredients of one batch of liquor mash confiscated by raiding agents were lemon and orange peelings and watermelon rinds which had been taken from garbage cans, the water used being pumped from a pool into which the garbage had been dumped. Concentrated lye is sometimes put in the mash, thus reducing the period of fermentation six or seven days, and increasing the number of deaths from poisoning alarmingly Hydrofluoric acid is sometimes used to stop fermentation at a given point. Illicit wine makers have been known to add permanganate of potash, a deadly poison, to freshly made wine to give it the appearance of age. With these deadly poisons put into the mash, who can wonder at the strange burning sensation or at the deaths which occur after the use of whiskey thus made by unscrupulous persons?"

Senator "Jim" Couzens of Detroit called at the White House for a conference with President Coolidge. Jim is very optimistic concerning his campaign in the home state. He is vejy confident of receiving the election and also that Coolidge and Dawes will receive the strong endorsement of Michigan voters. As far as Coolidge is concerned he is correct but further than that he is flirtfng with chance There are several thousand sober minded temperance electors likewise many thousand church people who have the ballot and they are going to administer a stern rebuke in the shape of a grand bumper degree in the election. These several thousand we mention (the salt of the earth) do not believe that cigars and "Hell and Maria" have any place in our halls of Congress, nor that we should repeal the Volstead law by permitting even light beer and wines. Politicians of the Joe Cannon type or of any other breed that would make the United States capitol to a vaudeville are not desirable timber. Couzens' great landslide at the primaries was not the voice of the electorate of Michigan, but the vote of a few who went to the polls while a great multitude committed the unpardonable sin of flunking because they were peeved or did not realize the importance of the primary. When the final "roll is called up yonder" at Washington your "Uncle Jim" while possibly elected, will feel the effects of that bump, in other words he must be kicked by a ten-ton hammer on one side and tickled with a feather on the other, except that the hammer in his case, happens to be in the rear.

BREWER FAILS TO SAVE SELF

UNEXPECTED DESCENT ON BREWERY FINDS FORBIDDEN LIQUOR THERE.

Co-operation between State Police and Federal prohibition officers resulted in the successful raiding of the National Products Company brewery in Detroit and the arrest of the president of the company, Hans W. Havemann, and five employees.

State officers had been watching this and other breweries for some time and tracing deliveries of real beer. The making of real beer in a brewery is not a crime since it is usual to make beer and then remove the alcohol from it in order to make near-beer. The offense comes in selling real beer or shipping it.

When they were sure of their ground the state troopers trailed a truck containing a load of half barrels full of real beer This they seized and on making sure of the contents, telephoned the federal prohibition officers. The latter have the right to enter a brewery at any time while the State Police must first secure a search warrant.

When the federal squad reached the brewery, they claim that Havemann and his men were engaged in pouring out beer by removing the bungs from barrels: This was stopped and sufficient evidence was secured to allow of taking out warrants for the men.

In a number of other instances the State Police have secured evidence which led to the closing up of breweries.

Demand for real beer is so extreme in the larger cities that there is a temptation for brewers to take a chance on selling it. Constant vigilance by the prohibition officers has been found to be the only remedy

Plan State Potato Show For February

Announcement that the Michigan State Potato Show, held a year ago in Grand Rapids, will be staged at East Lansing during the annual Farmers Week at M. A. C. February 2 to 6 this year, has just been made by H. C. Moore, secretary of the state Potato Producers Association and extension specialist at the college.

A long list of prizes is being offered for the show, which will be expected to break all Michigan records for number of entries and quality of product shown.

Potatoes for exhibits should be selected at digging time, according to Moore, who has issued instructions for preparing exhibits along with his announcement of the show.

"Select potatoes for exhibits at digging time, doing the work on a clear, cool day when the soil is comparatively dry", says Mr. Moore in discussing the selection ot show stock. "Show potatoes should not be harvested until they are well matured.

"Dig the potatoes by hand, taking care not to bruise or break the skins. The potatoes should be true to type, smooth, bright in color, and should average seven to nine ounces each, for early varieties such as Early Ohio and Irish Cobblers, or eight to ten ounces each for late varieties such as Russet Rural, White Rural and Green Mountain. Remember that uninformity in size, shape and color are very important."

THE IMPORTANCE OF FOREIGN TR

For many decades we hav duced a surplus of products farm that has been sold in f countries. As long as we co to produce a surplus above do consumption, it is a prime ne that there be a market that true that this surplus is bu tion of our total production. theless, it exerts an effect up price of the entire output wh is entirely disproportionate to its relative size. A country store-keeper may sell a hundred straw hats at a fair margin of profit, but the twenty which he may not be able to sell at all will wipe out the profit on the entire stock. The same thing is true of wheat, of corn, of any product of the farm.

It is true that we might exist without foreign trade, that we might depend exclusively upon domestic consumption. To do that, however, would require a complete reorganization of our whole commercial and industrial structure, a reorganization which would require years of time and which would entail losses beyond calculation The more reasonable alternative is to take steps toward the restoration of a normal foreign market.—Walter W. Head, President American Bankers Association.

The Bible In Our Schools

(Written by Cora Eggleston)

And then, with a sudden rush, came Horace Mann and his idea of an American public school system. There are a lot of people alive in the United States today who are older than the American public school system. Any G. A. R veteran can look back to the beginning of the public school.

The public schools, supported by taxes, began to crowd the private schools and the church schools out of existence. They often absorbed them or took them over. Owners of profitable private school and heads of religious schools made desperate efforts to save their institutions. Only two states before 1875, prevented religious teaching in the public schools. The efforts of sectarians to force sectarian teaching into the public school system has caused every state in the Union, with two exceptions, either by constitution, custom, or law, to abolish religion from the public schools since that date.

When a school in those days was being forced to give way to the oncoming public school, religious leaders made an effort to keep their particular creed alive in the new public school which was taking over pupils of their faith. Perhaps they had good reason to be disturbed. To them it was a tragedy to see children suddenly cut off from religious instruction in their everyday schools. Of course their idea of religious instruction was creedal; it meant Episcopalian instruction or Catholic instruction or Methodist instruction. And, now that taxes were to be raised, according to the Horace Mann idea, for public instruction, they insisted that some of these taxes ought to be spent in instructing the young in various creeds,

Of course, this could not be done. If it could have been done, this wouldn't have been America. It was to the glory of America that it was not done.

That cry of church schools of all sorts, "Give us part of the school taxes," was like a battle cry. And right there, in this demand of religionists, is the idea that has rendered the American public school system Godless.

This battle to protect taxes from the churches reached into every American home. It became a presidential issue. "No public money for sectarian schools" was the answer to the demand of the religionists, who were trying to keep their sectarian schools alive. President Grant suggested, in 1875 "that not one dollar appropriated for the support of schools shall be appropriated for the support of any sectarian school."

That idea rang the bell in America. It stood like granite. It stands like granite today. It must always stand. After Grant gave that idea to America, ten new states were admitted into the Union. Each one was forced by Congress to provide in its constitution that no public money should be appropriated for sectarian instruction. Older states in the East amended their constitutions or passed laws to prevent any public money from being spent in support of any schools where any sectarian doctrines were taught. It became the aim of all state constitutions to get this idea imbedded in their state laws, "No public money for the teaching of creeds."

In all this struggle please note that no one was trying to render the public schools Godless or Bibleless. Americans are protecting their schools against creeds, not against religion.

In the fight against creeds, all religion was tossed out through the door of the public schools, especially in the newer states, It is true, of course, that some of the older states kept their heads. Wise statesman and wise religionists here and there found ways of keeping religion in the schools and barring out the church. The state of New Jersey, for instance, has never barred Bible reading and non sectarian religious exercises from its public schools. In that most worldly city in our land, the great sea-resort, Atlantic City, sessions of the public schools are opened daily with Bible reading.

teachers may read from the Bible without comment, if they choose. This is the case, also, in the state of Ohio and in several other states Georgia and Maine were not stampeded into narrowness. But farther West a baleful thing has been happening. The state of Washington has a constitutional provision, not against sectarian education in the public schools, but against religious instruction. Not long ago the courts in that state ruled the Bible out of the public schools, even as literature, and advised the public that, if they wished the Bible in the public schools, it must amend the Constitution. Arizona, just before the war, provided that no public funds should go for any religious worship, exercises, or instruction.

In California, Wisconsin, Illinois and Michigan it is believed by lawyers that if a teacher introduced Bible reading into the public schools she would violate the present laws.

OCTOBER 1

Let Us Not Be Weary In Well Doing for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.

As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith.—Galatians 6;9, 10.

Electric Power Is Coming

There is no doubt but that Henry Ford started something when he set out to buy up all available water powers in the state of Michigan and use them for manufacturing purposes. Following his example electric companies have branched out in all directions and are stringing their high tension wires from one end of the state to the other. The Detroit Edison Company is building a dam and power plant on the Huron river at Belleville eleven hundred feet in length which will supply two vertical turbine wheels capable of furnishing 3,000 kilowatts for lighting and power. Over at Jackson the Consumers Power Company which is really a part of the great interstate electric companies has contracted to supply Brooklyn Cement City, Clark Lake and Clark Lake Village with the juice and the end is not yet. In fact electric exploitation is in its infancy, because the plants are not all erected which will some day dot the country side. The funny unseen current which runs along on the wires is soon going to furnish most of the light, heat and essentials of the home no matter whether in the heart of the city or in the depth of the wilderness. If good old Benjamin Franklin could only be rejuvenated and brought back to earth in his flesh—active and human as he once lived—what a jolt the old shaver would receive! Ben calculated that he was in the front ranks in electric science in 1775, and the extent of his knowledge was confined mostly to conducting the current down a cord or wire from the clouds and watching the savage little sparks jump from the cord to any metal instrument which might be applied. Little did Franklin in his most ethereal dreams dare to imagine what this giant of the unseen world should one day perform. And we repeat if Franklin could be brought back to earth for one day he would suppose himself insane and such things could not be. For instance we can in our mind's eye see the dear old bespectacled gentleman gazing upward in open-mouthed awe at a gantic electric crane which laughs at 50 tons, or rubbering his neck to get to the top of a 600 volt generator. Again we might see his gray powdered wig bobbing sagely toward the receiving plant of a great wireless which transmits messages across the Atlantic.

To get back to power companies we want to say it looks more logical every day that electricity is going to take the place of all mechanical helps which we use at present. For instance steam locomotives for hauling long trains of heavily loaded cars are not economical nor the highest type of power; the electric locomotive which carries neither smoke, fire or steam is able to out-haul the steam giant and do it cheaper. Actual tests have been made by hooking the two back to back and giving the steam engine the advantage of a running start. The speed gradually slackened until the engine

Electric locomotives haul the big boats through the Panama Canal, the machinery of the locks is all operated by the "juice", most of our bridge draws are operated by the same unseen slave. In our great ship building yards the cranes which carry heavy pieces of machinery to the hulls are propelled by electricity. By means of damming every available running water or stream in the state Henry Ford has brought this current to our very doors, and the next step is going to bring it into the house at a price which will render all other agencies out of competition.

In our own village, the day is not far distant when we shall be able to get a reliable current sent to us over best insulated wires for a price we can afford to pay. Our present system is only a crude botch affair in comparison with what we will get five years hence.

Any person who expects to live twenty years can reasonably anticipate the general use of electricity for heating our houses, since by that time not much wood will be available and coal will be so high in price few will want it. The invention of heating devices for the "juice" is a new field which will be worked to a finish as necessity demands.

HOME AGAIN

SYNOPSIS.—Ellen and Joe Latimer, orphans, without means, make their home with their Aunt Elsie, at Port Washington, small New York town. Ellen is studying art, her expenses being paid by Mrs. Sewall Rose, girlhood friend of her mother. Mrs. Rose invites Ellen to a Thanksgiving house party and the girl is delighted. On the way from the station to Mrs. Rose's Ellen rides with a remarkably attractive young woman and a much older man. She takes them for father and daughter, but they are introduced as Mr. and Mrs. Josselyn. Ellen does not "fit in" with the younger members of the party, and is miserable. Leaving for her home next morning, Ellen meets Gibbs Josselyn, son of her fellow guest. He has disapproved of his father's wedding and is not on speaking terms with the couple. Declining to stay at Mrs. Rose's, Gibbs drives Ellen to the station. They miss the train and Gibbs undertakes to drive the girl to Port Washington. Their auto is wrecked. Ellen is hurt, but it is not thought to be serious, and she and Gibbs part. He has been attracted by the girl, and she by him. Ellen's injury proves to be severe, and for months she is an invalid. Recovered, she is taking part in the town's Memorial day festivities when Gibbs Josselyn, on a yachting trip with a friend, George Lathrop, meets her again. The feeling of mutual attraction has strengthened since they parted. They leave Port Washington man and wife.

"Tommy, dear," the little mother in the big blue coat said presently, lifting the child from her lap, and setting him upon his own sturdy legs on the deck, "run and tell dad that mother wants to see him! Tell him we're almost—almost in!"

Her voice rose almost to song on the last phrase, and although the child was already out of hearing, her nearest neighbor, an elderly woman also comfortably stretched in a deck chair, heard her and smiled.

"You sound glad to be back, Mrs. Josselyn!" said she.

"I didn't know how glad I was going to be," admitted Ellen Josselyn, her happy eyes leaving the prospect of the dark waters of the harbor mouth, and the unmistakable approach of the solid blue shadows that mean land. "Mr. Josselyn and I went abroad the very day after our marriage, and that was six years ago last October. We've lived in France all this time. Tommy was born there, and when we decided to come back to America I felt a sort of terror, actually! It seemed much, much harder than the original uprooting, strangely enough! I never have been homesick for America, but I'm homesick already for France! And yet, now that we're almost in, I'm beginning to be terribly thrilled!"

Ellen let her eyes rest on the tumbling water again, and the nearing land. America again! Thirty-fourth street again, Central park again; after all, it was home. She had curiously, vaguely dreaded it, she had had her times of hoping never to return, and yet now she felt a sudden thrill and a rush of something like rapture in her heart.

She was an older Ellen, at twenty-nine, and an astonishingly developed Ellen. The six years had made a woman of intelligence and charm. Travel and study had done their share, joy had had its part in the change, and sorrow, too. Wifehood had brought her generous nature only what was fine and good, motherhood had brought her the boy that was the core of her heart. And motherhood had brought sorrow as well, for little Tom had had a sister for a few happy months, three years ago, and the baby grave, in a strange cemetery, was never long out of Ellen's thoughts.

But that was the only shadow. Otherwise, it was all gain. The radiant girl that had sailed with Gibbs from this same harbor more than six years ago had not been an exacting wife. There was no background of spoiling and selfishness to make Ellen Josselyn a difficult woman to live with. Her joyous: "Oh, Gibbs, won't that be fun!" had charmed him, and perhaps a little touched him, a thousand times in those first days. Everything was delight to her, the ship, the new friends, the new gowns. Her eyes and heart were never tired of new impressions.

Paris was all she had ever dreamed for her life, much, much more than her brightest dream. And before Tommy came, and afterward, and always, how wonderful life was for Ellen! Exploring the magic city, with her hand in Gibbs' arm, watching content and ambition mark new lines in his face, hearing him say, a dozen times a day, that she had given him back his life; her happy, grateful heart was only too full. He began to work at once, and for awhile she worked, too. But swiftly she saw that her earnest and clever beginning was as that of a promising child. There were ten thousand girls in Paris who could do what Ellen could do.

Gibbs was a genius, she never doubted it, and it was only a year or two after they came to Paris that his world began to see it, too. He went straight at his portrait work, and he lived only for that, and for her. And Ellen, watching other women struggle and despair, in loneliness and poverty, wondered, with her old, sweet, childish surprise, why God had been so good to her.

And presently she had Tommy, and they were playing at housekeeping in the tiniest of little lost villages in Brittany. These were days of sunshine, while Gibbs, wonderful in knickerbockers and a paint-smeared smock, painted, and Yvonne walked bareheaded to market, and Ellen played under twisted old trees with Tommy. Tommy had no nurse but his picturesque little mother now, for Ellen was thrifty, even in Paris, and Ellen had spent more than one evening on the arm of Gibbs' chair, working out the financial end of their problem. Their money must last until this time—or that time—they must think of the future.

When Tommy was two years old, and before the second child was born, Gibbs painted his wife. They were in Brittany again, and Ellen, with white sewing in the lap of a checked blue gown, and figure and face already caught in the first rising tide of motherhood, was set against a background of gnarled old grapevines.

The picture was hung in the Salon des Independents, and Ellen, when her delicate little girl was a few weeks old, went to see it. There was a crowd about it; there was always a crowd about it. It was the discussed picture of the year, but she always looked at it with a little pang at her heart. She had been so happy in those sleepy July days in the grape-arbor; she had thought that the new baby would be like Tommy, strong and gay and hungry. And the tiny new thing, who had been named Rose for Gibbs' mother, was so frail. Even while she was looking at Gibbs' picture, his first success, Ellen's heart was in the little nursery on Mont Saint Etienne, hanging agonized above the little bed where Rose Josselyn lay quiet, apathetic, half asleep.

The picture, during the winter, caused a widening circle of comment and admiration, and presently Gibbs had his first commission, and was to paint a boy of ten, in the trim gray uniform of a military school, and receive two thousand francs for the picture.

So fame was coming, and fortune would come close on her heels. Ellen, sitting by the studio window in the winter afternoons, and looking out at the fluttering snow into which Yvonne had taken the dancing Tommy, mused upon the dream that had become the fact. She had Paris, Gibbs, and Tommy—so much more than she had asked! But the silent, apathetic little Rose was gone from the nursery now, never to lie against her mother's heart again.

Was that the cost of success—she wondered. Success was new, but ah, this constant hunger at her heart was new, too. How gladly—how gladly she would let the one go, if she might lose the other!

Gibbs painted three more portraits the next winter, which made them feel rich; but he was working hard and enthusiastically in the atelier six mornings a week, and neither he nor Ellen were inclined to extravagance, so that there was no particular incentive to seek commissions.

And so the exquisite years went by, and Tommy was three and then four, and still the Josselyns lived in their own happiness, shut away from the world, and glad to forget it. Ellen's whole heart was wrapped about her husband, her girlish idealism had never been disturbed. True, she knew now that Gibbs was human. She knew now that he could be unreasonable, that he had moods in which she and Tommy and Yvonne must keep even a crumpled roseleaf from his path.

But he loved her, she amused him and pleased his pride, and her happy ways with him, that sometimes were those of a daughter and a pupil, sometimes wide-eyed admiration, sometimes all motherly, were dear to him. He did not have to ask her if she loved him; he was all her world.

Suddenly, in the seventh year, a new note came into their conversations. Without any premonition they began to say: "If we do go back to America." Ellen was as innocent as Gibbs of any prearranged planning to that effect. They simply felt the possibility in the air.

Presently Gibbs' mind had seized strongly upon the idea. He would go to New York, and find a studio, and see what the prospect was of painting portraits there. After Tommy's birth, at Ellen's request, he had written his father, enclosing a little photograph of the small, bald-headed lump of babyhood that was Thomas Gibbs, Third, and the grandfather had eagerly responded to the overture. A magnificent gold-lined cup had come from Tiffany's for the baby, and presents on all formal occasions.

Now Gibbs began to think he would like to show his father the stalwart Tommy, who spoke two languages at five, and played his little violin so nicely.

Then, abruptly, it was settled, and they began to wonder how they had managed to stay away so long. Ellen, during the last busy days, would stop sometimes in her packing to look out of the undraped studio window. They had been so happy here since the marvelous days when she and Gibbs had unpacked the boxes, and laid the rugs, and hung the pictures with their own hands. Was it wise to run away from it all?

And then came the memory of Fifth avenue in spring sunshine, and the sound of one's own tongue spoken on all sides and the garden in Main street sweet with lilacs, and she would smile again.

She smiled now as the little boy and the tall man crossed the deck to her. Gibbs was young, at thirty-eight, despite the silver hair. He had been playing bridge, and was glad to get into the fresh air, after the hot smoking room.

"You packed everything!" he accused her.

"Because I wanted you to be free to see the very first of the city!" she answered eagerly. "Look, Tommy, that's Ellis island, dear, where all the immigrants have to get off. And look, there's Liberty!"

"It is darned thrilling!" Gibbs said, smiling, as they leaned on the rail. The ocean was left behind them, they were well into the river now, and on both sides the land was coming down to meet them. Trees were still bare, but Easter was near.

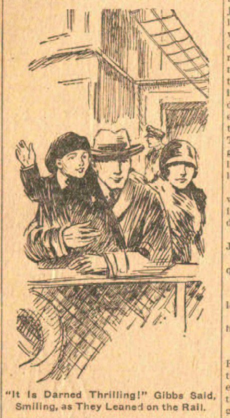
"We've missed all the ugly, hard part," Ellen exulted, "and we'll get all the glory of the spring!"

"I wrote the old man we'd go to the Brevoort," Gibbs said. "I bet we'll find a message there. They'll ask us down to the new house."

Ellen smiled. Her father-in-law and his wife had recently taken possession of a new home at Wheatley Hills, a fashionable colony only a few miles from Port Washington. It would be rather fun to visit there, as Gibbs' wife, with little Thomas, Third. She well remembered the handsome woman who had been so bafflingly superior in her manner toward Mrs. Rose; her own—what was it?—stepmother-in-law now, so curiously had events come about.

"Gibbs!" she said suddenly. "Look—there by that little boy on the pier who's waving the flag! Isn't that your father—of course it is! And your stepmother, too—and there's Joe—there's Joe, the old darling—that's Uncle Joe, Tommy—Oh, Joe—Joe—Joe!"

"That is dad," Gibbs said, deeply pleased and touched. "And there's old George—I call this decent! We've been away so long, Ellen, that I'd forgotten how nice it is to have folks! I suppose the dashing lady in the black hat is my mamma? Wave your hand, kid, that's your family! And try to remember the English for things, or they'll not like you!"



"It Is Darned Thrilling!" Gibbs Said, Smiling, as They Leaned on the Rail.

Five minutes later they were all together in a jumble of landing. Ellen was kissed on her suddenly wet cheeks by her father-in-law, and by George Lathrop, who had been best man at their wedding, and by the sweet and rather silent Joe. Joe was taller than ever, he would never be well-dressed or well-groomed, or have a particularly happy manner in company, but Ellen clung to the big, boyish arm, and laughed into his handsome, kindly face as if she could never feel and see and hear enough of him. He had improved so, and he looked so—well, so grown-up! After all, one's little brother was one's little brother, even if he was twenty-five! She found her father-in-law aged, he was somehow shrunken, and his face had grown leaner in its aspect. Lillian was so changed as to be hardly recognizable.

She was dressed with great severity, but everything she wore was fine and rich. Her skin was like a rose leaf, her dark eyes were rimmed with faint violet shadows—eyes made for sorrow, but shining with pleasure and hospitality now. Ellen thought she had never seen whiter teeth, or a more beautiful scarlet mouth to enhance their whiteness.

She had been beautiful seven years ago, she was more than that now. She radiated charm and personality, there was a hint of sadness in her face when it was in repose, there were a hundred provocative attractions in her thoughtful smile. She was ready with a French phrase, a German phrase, she touched lightly upon the Italian political situation, she had the name of a Russian novelist readily upon her tongue.

Ellen thoroughly liked George Lathrop, who was Gibbs' senior by only six or seven years, and his best friend. George was a lawyer and a man of importance, but he was somewhat insignificant in appearance, and his manner still betrayed the country boy who has fought his way to the top.

"You must help me get some new gowns," Ellen said, realizing for the first time in seven years that gowns really were important. "Of course at home—in Paris, I mean, I've worn only studio things."

"But, my dear, you should have gotten loads of things in Paris!" Lillian said. "You'll think they're pirates here!"

"Well, I did get an evening gown, and an afternoon dress," Ellen said. "Gibbs and I tried to pick out something smart. But really it is hard, there. There are so many new models, and one can't tell which is going to be adopted—and so many women dress just to fit their own types, now, regardless of style!"

"Here we are!" Joe, who could not move his delighted eyes from his sister, said suddenly. They all got out at the great hotel, where, Ellen learned, they were to stay for a day or two, instead of the Hotel Brevoort, before going down to the country house, to which Lillian had given an Italian name, "Villino dell Orto."

Josselyn, Senior, it appeared, kept a suite at the Biltmore throughout the entire year. He and his wife could come and go at their own pleasure, change in their own familiar rooms from street attire to evening dress, keep an appointment there with manicurist or masseuse, or entertain their friends with a cozy meal served before their own fire. Today he had engaged the adjoining suite for his son's family.

"Isn't this corking?" Gibbs exulted, when the younger Josselyns were alone.

"Oh, Gibbs, it's such fun! And aren't they dears to do it all—and aren't you glad now that I made you write when Tom was born!" Ellen had taken off the big blue coat, and the jacket of her suit, and appeared in a loose little blouse of dark-blue velvet with a deep collar of old lace. She opened the door into the drawing room of the other suite, and there, to the child's delight, was the lunch table, with two waiters hovering about it, and a shining display of covered dishes and steaming pots. They gathered about it immediately, Ellen between Joe and George Lathrop, Tommy chattering to his enraptured grandfather, Gibbs and Lillian making each other's acquaintance after the long years.

Afterward, Ellen walked to the lift with her brother, and stood there talking to him as if she would never be done.

"You seem to like Mr. Lathrop, Joe?"

"He's a king!" Joe said, with a quick meeting of eyes.

"And the boy, is he nice, Joe?"

"George—he's all right. He's in college now. Harvard."

"And how's Harriet? She must be—"

"She's nineteen."

"Is she all over the sickness now?" Ellen had remembered suddenly that the tomboy Harriet had had a frightening illness about a year ago—something that their vague reports had given her to understand was like an infantile paralysis.

"Sure. She limps some—she's getting well." Joe fell silent, straightening the corner of her lace collar carefully. Something in his gravity troubled her vaguely, and she turned thoughtfully back to her room, wondering. At the doorway she met George Lathrop, also departing.

"My little brother has grown up!" Ellen said, with a rueful smile.

He answered her with another smile.

Enter the handsome stepmother and all sorts of new factors into the life of the Gibbses. New happiness or trouble?

Ocean Temperature

The surface water of the ocean varies in temperature with the latitude. The hottest water, about 80 degrees, is at the equator, and the coldest at the poles. At a depth of 700 feet, however, the ocean, even in the tropics, is extremely cold. This icy water has drifted down from the poles, spreading its chilling effect over the entire sea. In the lowest depths the temperature is very close to the freezing point. There is no danger that the ocean will ever freeze, because the water is in perpetual motion through waves, tides and currents, and also because the warm water at the equator keeps the general temperature from dropping too low.

Good Detective Work on Part of Chemist

An epidemic of abusive anonymous letters broke out in a small suburban town near Albany recently. The town's chief of police finding he was making no progress in his investigations, enlisted the aid of consulting a chemist interested in curious problems of crime susceptible to scientific detection.

Scrutiny of a hundred or more of the letters convinced the scientist the unknown writer was a middle-aged woman, says Capper's Weekly. All kinds of writing paper were used, but always a sharp-pointed steel pen and the same kind of ink.

Dust in the ink indicated an open ink-well was used by the writer. At this point the chemist made up a lot of pelets, using a different chemical for each, but every chemical capable of identification if mixed with ink. Then, in the guise of an inspector of electric wiring, the chemist gained access to the houses of all suspects. Whenever he found an open ink-well he dropped a pellet in it.

The next anonymous letter led him to the woman responsible for it. And in a few days she was trapped in the act of sending off another one. That ended the case in a regular Sherlock Holmes style.

Odd Playing Cards

A pack of Hindustani cards in the possession of the Royal Asiatic society of England is supposed to be one thousand years old. It consists of eight suits of various colors. The kings are mounted on elephants; the viziers, or those second in rank, are upon horses, tigers and bulls. Some of the cards have such curious marks as a pine apple in a shallow cup and an object similar to a parasol without a handle but with two broken ribs sticking through the top.

Insulin Valuable in Malnutrition

Insulin injected into the blood stream of an undernourished infant will help to utilize the sugar in the food given, Dr. W. K. Marriot of St. Louis reports to the American Medical association.

A malnourished child needs more food in proportion to its weight than normal children, but sometimes the malnourished child lacks ability to take care of all the food it should get. Glucose, the sugar of corn sirup, is injected into the veins along with insulin. Children using this food so strangely taken in, increase in weight, which is not lost later when the treatment is discontinued.

Doctor Marriot used insulin after observing that diabetic patients on insulin treatment often gain weight at a phenomenal rate, even when their food intake is not excessive. He uses the treatment for infants only in the worst cases of malnutrition.

Not Satisfactory

Mr. Smith and Mr. Jones, wardens of a prominent city church, were not in accord concerning the new rector's introduction of extreme ritual into the service.

Mr. Smith was aggressively on the rector's side, Mr. Jones quite the reverse, and on one occasion their difference of opinion cropped out in a lively, though brief dialogue.

Mr. Smith, having exhausted his arguments on his unresponsive brother warden, said:

"At least you will own that art is the handmaiden of religion."

"Yes," returned Jones savagely, "and I wish religion would give her a month's notice!"

Embarrassing Offer

My little niece, who accompanied me to the dentist several times this summer when I was getting my set of teeth, won a large box of caramels at our church fair recently. Trying to stop her from eating so many, I said, when she offered me some, "No thanks, dear, they're bad for the teeth," when in a loud, shrill voice, before a lot of people standing in front of my booth, she replied, "I'll hold your teeth for you, Aunty, while you eat 'em."—Correspondence, Kansas City Times.

Mankind's Use of Metals

Gold was probably the first metal to be used by man. Metallic gold was found in the beds of streams. It was used for ornaments before any other metal was discovered. The first metal put to practical use was copper, made into knives and other implements at least 6,000 years ago.

Permanent roads are a good investment —not an expense

How the Motor Industry Set the Pace for Highway Building

The "horseless carriage" of yesterday is now being produced as the modern automobile at the rate of 4,000,000 a year. The total number of motor vehicles registered in the United States is over 16,000,000.

And automobiles built today are more than ever capable of economically serving both business and recreation needs.

But there is an obstacle standing in the way of their maximum service to owners.

For while the automobile industry made paved highways an economic necessity, the mileage of such roads is today years behind the requirements of modern traffic.

Happily motorists everywhere are boosting for more and wider paved highways.

And extensive experience has taught them that Concrete Highways are one of the best all-around investments they can make—an investment that pays big dividends.

As one of our 16,000,000 motorists you know better than anyone else the need for more and wider Concrete Roads. Start now to help your local officials provide them.

Burning soft coal will heat three times more space at one quarter the cost, than any other heating stove with the same size firepot.

WHY? Because the damper back of the firepot burns the cheapest soft coal or screenings and all the smoke and soot with the same regularity and cleanliness as the burning of gas, producing a steady heat day and night.

No Smoke! No Soot! No Dirt!

Two tons out of every three tons of soft coal are wasted in all heating stoves constructed without a damper back of the firepot. Besides the offense inside and outside the house from the accumulation of soot. The Florence makes its own gas and burns it, and makes its own coke and burns it. Steady heat day and night when the weather is 20 below zero. The medium size holds fire 3 days and 3 nights with one filling. Other sizes in proportion.

Natives of India who preach righteousness by the mortification of the flesh have various methods. One method consists in the subject rolling over and over for a journey of a couple of hundred miles; another will have himself buried alive in a cramped but not entirely filled in pit, up to the nostrils where he will remain for a long period. Another will hold his arm up for years at a stretch until the member withers, gaunt and horrible, like the dead arm of a mummy.

At the bottom of a lake in the Alban Hills of Italy lie two galleys which were fitted out as floating palaces of pleasure for the Roman Emperor Caligula. They were incrusted with marble, ornamented with precious metals and painted woods and were adorned with statuary. At the Emperor's death his successor took no interest in the vessels and allowed them to rot until they finally sank. The water may be drawn off the lake until the vessels are exposed to view.

BRYAN OGRE LOOMS IF VOTERS SUPPORT LAFOLLETTE TICKET

Coolidge or Chaos Is Sole Choice of Citizens as Deadlock Menace Threatens.

LITTLE DOUBT WHO SENATE WOULD NAME

Analysis of Situation Shows Danger of Nebraskan Going to White House.

Coolidge or chaos.

That is about what the coming election resolves itself into. A vote for Davis is a vote for Bryan. It is generally believed that Davis cannot possibly muster the necessary majority of the electoral votes to be named President. A vote for LaFollette is a vote for Bryan. It is not claimed by the most enthusiastic supporter of LaFollette that he could by any remote chance be elected. What he could do, however, is throw the election into the congress, with the chances favoring the naming of Bryan as vice president. The house being unable to give a majority to any one of the candidates for President, as it is at present organized, the senate, under the Constitution, would elect a vice president and the vice president elected by the senate would become President on March 4. That is why a vote for Davis or LaFollette is a vote for Bryan, and a vote for Coolidge is a vote for Coolidge.

The official counting of the electoral votes is not done until February. The Twelfth amendment to the Constitution provides as follows for the conduct of the congress in case the electoral college makes no choice:

Constitutional Provision.

"And if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the house of representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the house of representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the vice president shall act as President, as in the case of the death or any constitutional disability of the President.

"The person having the greatest number of votes as vice president, shall be the vice president, if such a number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the senate shall choose the vice president; a quorum for the purpose shall consists of two-thirds of the whole number of senators and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice."

Meets in February.

Complying with this provision of the Constitution, when the time comes in February for the Presidential electors to report, and it is discovered that there is no majority choice for President, then the house and senate will begin to ballot. But, this official report of the electors does not occur until a month before it is time for the next administration to take office.

From election day, November 4, until some solution of the tangle is found—and the untangling of the knot cannot come before February—the country will be facing the possibility of a deadlock, or the putting of a man into the highest office of the land who was not voted for as President, who was not even selected by his party for President.

If LaFollette could secure enough votes to keep Coolidge from having a majority of the electoral votes, throwing the election of the President into the house, the house and senate would act independently of each other in their votes. That is, the senate does not await the result of the effort of the house to elect a President before proceeding to the selection of the vice president.

The peace and quiet of a small township not far away was very much disturbed. A prominent farmer had been murdered by a jealous husband on suspicion of being too familiar with his wife. The subject was on everybody's tongue, and at the only store of which the township boasted, two citizens were talking the matter over when farmer Brown said to farmer Green: "That was a terrible murder down your way the other night" and Green replied: "Yes, but it might have been worse; it might have been." Brown looked very much surprised as he remarked: "It might have been worse, what are you talking about? Jim Lewis comes home very unexpectedly and finds his wife sitting on another man's lap He pulls a gat and kills the interloper, and you say it might have been worse. How in the name of common sense could it have been any worse?" "Well, just like this" replied Green. "If Jim Lewis had come home the same way the night before he would have found me there."

LILLIAN

SYNOPSIS.—Ellen and Joe Latimer, orphans, without means, make their home with their Aunt Elsie, at Port Washington, small New York town. Ellen is studying art, her expenses being paid by Mrs. Sewall Rose, girlhood friend of her mother. Mrs. Rose invites Ellen to a Thanksgiving house party and the girl is delighted. On the way from the station to Mrs. Rose's Ellen rides with a remarkably attractive young woman and a much older man. She takes them for father and daughter, but they are introduced as Mr. and Mrs. Josselyn. Ellen does not "fit in" with the younger members of the party, and is miserable. Leaving for her home next morning, Ellen meets Gibbs Josselyn, son of her fellow guest. He has disapproved of his father's wedding and is not on speaking terms with the couple. Declining to stay at Mrs. Rose's, Gibbs drives Ellen to the station. They miss the train and Gibbs undertakes to drive the girl to Port Washington. Their auto is wrecked. Ellen is hurt, but it is not thought to be serious, and she and Gibbs part. He has been attracted by the girl, and she by him. Ellen's injury proves to be severe, and for months she is an invalid. Recovered, she is taking part in the town's Memorial day festivities when Gibbs Josselyn, on a yachting trip with a friend, George Lathrop, meets her again. The feeling of mutual attraction has strengthened since they parted. They leave Port Washington man and wife. Nearly seven years later Gibbs and Ellen Josselyn, with their son Tommy, come back from France to New York. They are welcomed by Josselyn, Senior, and his beautiful wife, Lillian, the old ill-feeling forgotten.

"Joe? Joe's a great fellow," he said. "We're very fond of Joe at my house. In some ways he's the most remarkable boy I ever knew! He's absolutely and utterly honest. Things don't deceive Joe. I like to introduce him to people—if they've got anything that interests Joe, he gets it out. If they haven't, it doesn't matter how much champagne they open, or whether they have a season opera box or a villa in Italy, they simply don't register with Joe. I think that fellow will go a long way! He's taught my boy more now than I could ever teach him, more than he'll get out of college."

Ellen went back to Gibbs with her eyes shining.

"Mr. Lathrop was talking so nicely about Joe, Gibbs!"

"Oh, that's a love affair all 'round!" Lillian said lazily. "Of course Harriet's feelings are no secret. She's plain, and she's not likely to meet anyone else on the same intimate terms that she's known Joe. George is willing, Joe is willing—I suppose—and Harriet is more than willing."

"Joe!" Ellen could only echo, in amazement.

"Joe is clever, and steady, and sensible," Lillian said, "and George doesn't care about anything else. His one terror is that his precious child will be snapped up for her money. Joe's position doesn't make the slightest difference to George!"

It was said so pleasantly, in her good-natured, indifferent manner, that the oddity of this sentiment, coming from Lillian, did not occur to Ellen nor the propriety of her saying it to Ellen at all. The two women, utterly different in type, were inclined to like each other, perhaps for the reason that they lived in alien worlds, and spoke alien tongues. Ellen, clear of vision for all her simplicity and inexperience, knew that Lillian regarded her with a sort of indulgent contempt. A woman who was cheerfully unfashionable to the point of dowdiness, who was domestic and unselfish and contented, had no common ground upon which to meet Lillian Josselyn.

As the pleasant days went on, Ellen marveled at her more and more. Lillian never talked of herself. She had her mysteries, her cryptic reserves. She had friendships of a sort with women, sometimes she tried to make Ellen express herself about them. And she had friendships with men, but of these she never spoke at all. She was the type of beautiful woman who can remain silent with perfect self-possession, and when she did speak it was to amuse her old husband, or to encourage Ellen and Gibbs to talk.

In the evening occasionally all four went to the theater. But Lillian liked better to dine at leisure somewhere, and to meet friends, as they always did, and to dance. Gibbs danced a little, Ellen less. They sat and chatted with Josselyn, Senior, quite happily, enjoying the music and the general gaiety of the scene. Lillian's partners would bring her back, flushed, lovely, silent; she would exert herself to be pleasant to the group at the table until she was claimed again. She taught Gibbs new steps, but it was quite apparent that she enjoyed dancing with good dancers, regardless of her feeling for them as men. Sometimes they went to the tea dances that were the latest attraction at the big hotels; Ellen would feel a little sorry for her father-in-law. He was always well-groomed, interested, alert. She found a little pathos in his eagerness to join them in all their amusements, not to be a clog, or to affect their plans.

He treated his wife with unvarying courtesy, but he grew deeply fond of Ellen, and little Tom became the joy of his life. There were days when the three went together to the park or the zoo and chattered all day as if they had been of one age. And Ellen felt no pity for the silver head when she saw it bent against Tommy's black locks; somehow there was a dignity and a fittingness here that was lacking at the dances and the teas.

CHAPTER VI

Rain kept the two families in the city hotel for more than a week of luxury and pleasure. Aunt Elsie, upon whom Ellen had descended for the day, had found a pleasant little country nurse for Tommy, the same maid that she had had during her illness, and Ellen consequently had nothing to do but amuse herself. The big car was at the ladies' disposal, Gibbs often went with them, his father less frequently. Joe sometimes joined them in the evenings, and George Lathrop duly gave them a dinner party.

To this party Harriet came, a thin, nervous, sweet girl, plain of face, but with a pretty manner, and most at ease with Joe. She accepted Ellen's overtures of friendship eagerly, sent her flowers, and showed in more than one way her pleasure in the companionship of Joe's sister.

So ten days went by, and long before they were over Ellen began to long for a simpler life, where Gibbs would seem her own again, and where Tommy might always be free, in the happy old way, to be in his mother's company. They would visit the Long Island house, that would be a simpler life, at least, and then they would find a studio and apartment of their own, keep the little Port Washington Lizzie for Tommy, get a cook besides, and go back to their own way of living.

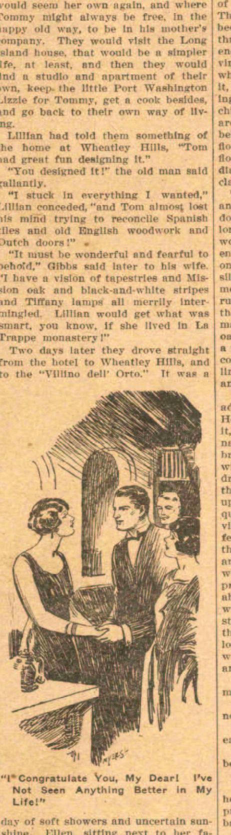
Lillian had told them something of the home at Wheatley Hills, "Tom had great fun designing it."

"You designed it!" the old man said gallantly.

"I stuck in everything I wanted," Lillian conceded, "and Tom almost lost his mind trying to reconcile Spanish tiles and old English woodwork and Dutch doors!"

"It must be wonderful and fearful to behold," Gibbs said later to his wife. "I have a vision of tapestries and Mission oak and black-and-white stripes and Tiffany lamps all merrily intermingled. Lillian would get what was smart, you know, if she lived in La Trappe monastery!"

Two days later they drove straight from the hotel to Wheatley Hills, and to the "Villino dell' Orto." It was a day of soft showers and uncertain sunshine. Ellen, sitting next to her father-in-law, who was driving the car, was in an ecstasy as she began to recognize the familiar country.



"I Congratulate You, My Dear! I've Not Seen Anything Better in My Life!"

"This is our little outfit," Josselyn, Senior, said, at last, turning in at a white-pebbled drive, between great trees and spraying, enormous rose-trees that already wore young green. The hard-rolled lawns showed a faint, emerald film; bushes ready to bud were everywhere; in a few weeks the place would be a mass of fragrant bloom. All about were the curves and rises of wooded hills, beyond lay the Sound, coldly blue in the distance. Here and there another country home was visible; a stately facade of dark brick, or the classic green and white of the modern colonial wood. Each of these had its fifty or a hundred acres, its stables and garage and lodge to match the house. The Josselyn estate was small, less than ten acres in all; there was a handsome fence, and some of the finest woodland on the entire island, but no lodge.

But Ellen had only a confused impression of these things at the moment; her whole attention was centered on the house. She gave Gibbs one amazed glance, he met her look, and they both burst into laughter.

"We've been had, old dear, what?" he said shamefacedly.

Lillian smiled contentedly.

"You do like it?"

"Like it!" Gibbs merely echoed. And Ellen said honestly: "I think it's the loveliest house I ever saw!"

It was Italian in type, the plaster walls stained a warm cream, the windows and doors placed irregularly; some large, some narrow. A wide stone stairway rose from the pebbled path to the second floor, climbing against the side of the house, at its base stood great jars of potted hydrangeas. Under the stairway water poured from a lion's mouth into a shallow basin, and above it, in the smooth facade of the house, a blue plaque was embedded in a vine-wreathed arch, a Della Robbia bambino spreading his little hands in untiring blessing over the doorway.

There was the perfection of exquisite simplicity in the whole, the perfection of absolute order and appropriateness. The three years that the house had been standing here might have been three hundred, so kindly did the trees enclose it, so readily had the bare vines made themselves at home. Even while the newcomers stood gazing at it, a nesting bird, with a thread hanging from his bill, disappeared into the chimney ivy, and a maid, opening an arched door in the house wall, showed behind her trim little figure a sun-flooded vista of stone arches and tiled floors that tempted Ellen to an immediate investigation, and made her exclaim again.

They went up the wide outside stair, and through the dark carven wooden door at the top, and were in a quaint, long room marvelously paneled in rich wood, with a glorious view through enormous windows that were curtained only by thin widths of some dark silken stuff. The room was devoid of merely ornamental things, one splendid rug crossed the floor, logs blazed under the carved acanthus leaves of the great marble fireplace. There was a black oak table that might have come from a monastery, the chairs were large and comfortable despite their severity of line. The effect was of space, silence, and shadow.

Lillian, enchanted by her visitors' admiration, led them to other rooms. Here was a piano, with a harp beside it, in a small room lighted by three narrow gothic windows. Here was the breakfast room, bright and square, with Quimper plates ranged on an old dresser, and Perugian blue cottons at the windows. Sometimes they stepped up, and sometimes down, through exquisite doorways deeply arched, every vista had been studied, and made perfect. Sometimes Ellen looked down at the formal garden, with its moondial and its trimmed cypresses close to the woods, sometimes she laughed in surprise at finding herself unexpectedly above the tiled courtyard where maids were chatting in the sun, or crossed a stone balcony presumably leading into the library, to find herself in one of the long, bare corridors again. Everywhere was the same effect of space, and restraint, and emptiness.

Gibbs presently went to his stepmother, and took both her hands.

"I congratulate you, my dear! I've not seen anything better in my life!"

She looked up at him with unsmiling eagerness.

"No, but truly—? You know I've been waiting for your verdict, Gibbs."

"It's a fairytale!" Ellen said.

"Of course I had a big architect to help me do it," Lillian said, with a prettily deferential glance at her husband.

"And we had that d—n Pepper in the house for three months," the old man said mildly.

"Who's that d—n Pepper?" Ellen asked, with her gay laugh. "Lindsay Pepper, the man we met?"

"He's a very nice fellow," Lillian corrected, with an indulgent smile. "He decorates, and picks out things for you, and so on—it's his business. Most people are afraid of him, but I am one of the very few who boss him about, and he likes it. He and I had great fights about everything, and I always got my own way. So, if you like it, I won't have Lindsay Pepper get the credit!"

"He got more than the credit, he got the cash!" said Josselyn, Senior, in an undertone, and with a mischievous look at Ellen.

"Don't listen to him," said his wife. She took Ellen and Gibbs to their own rooms, and before she even left them she stood for a moment, with one hand on Ellen's shoulder, and the other holding Gibbs' hand, as they stood before her.

"I hope you're going to be comfortable," she told them, with a wistful smile. "It means so much to your father, and to me, we—" There was a hint of feeling in her voice and as if she had not meant to show it, she laughed a little shakily. "We want you dears to like us!" she said. And immediately she was all practical. "I've put you both in here, Ellen, it's not the largest room, but it has the prettiest view, and the fireplace. And in summer, you can move if you like. And Thomas is right next door, across the bath. Lizzie can either sleep there or have a room upstairs with the other girls. Little Keno will look out for you, she's Japanese, but she understands everything, and if you ring, she'll bring you anything. Don't dress unless you want to; I'm going to get into something comfortable—"

She was gone, and the younger Josselyns left to smile upon each other like children in a fairy tale. Ellen explored the little domain; every need had been anticipated, everything was perfect.

"These aren't Pembroke beds, but by George, they're awfully good imitations," Gibbs said, investigating. "And I like the goldfish floating about in that tall bowl."

"There are other goldfish downstairs, and did you ever see anything so wonderful as the flowers?" Ellen contributed. "Just freesia lilies in the music room, and masses of pussy willows in the hall, and early violets here—Gibbs, dear," and she came close to him, and put her hand on his shoulder, "are we lucky, or what?"

"Did you get that delicate insinuation of what we were to do in summer?" her husband questioned in turn. "Do you suppose they expect us to live here?"

"Gibbs," Ellen answered, with a cautious look about that amused him, "it looks like it!"

"And you know," she went on happily, when she had taken a simple, soft little brown dress from the closet where Keno had carefully arranged all her clothes, and was brushing her dark hair, "you know, it would be simply wonderful beyond words to be here, Gibbs, and then for you to have a studio in town. I've always felt that it was a mistake for families to combine, but if we had the studio, and could stay there for a night or two, and then with your father and Lillian going to town as much as they do, and leaving us alone here, it wouldn't be like falling over each other all the time! And, Gibbs, if it's like this now, imagine what June will be—and how Tommy will love it!"

She was happy tonight, happier than she had yet been in this old atmosphere that was yet so strangely puzzling and new. Life in the city had been trying, she had been conscious a hundred times a day that she was unfitted for it. But now she was back in the country, Aunt Elsie and Joe and grandpa only a few miles away—this was her own atmosphere. They would soon dilute the luxury of Lillian's home with intervals in some simpler place where Gibbs could lunch in his old painty jacket, if he liked, and where Ellen could cook a little, even if it were on a gas stove, and garden a little, even if it were only in a window garden. And he would be painting all through the happy mornings, and she would go to market with Tommy beside her, and hear him his reading lesson, and make him spend half an hour on exercises with his violin.

"What are you smiling about?" Gibbs asked, as they went downstairs, with his arm about the velvet dress. He had told her he liked that foolish little dress, and the violets pinned beside the prim white collar.

"You!" She gave him the usual answer, and as usual, he tipped her bright face up for a kiss.

A moment later her father-in-law called her from the entrance hall downstairs. Ellen ran down to join him, and to walk about the bare garden with him, respectfully asking him questions about the lawn and the roses.

Gibbs went on to the long drawing room, where Lillian was standing, dressed in some Oriental shapeless garment that gleamed with rich embroidery. She was staring down at the fire, her beautiful dark head bent; she did not seem to hear him come in.

When his shadow fell across her vision she looked up, her eyes grave. Then she smiled, and merely shaped the word "Gibbs" with her lips before dropping her eyes again.

"Ellen is out in the garden with dad," Gibbs volunteered, rubbing his hands before the blaze. Lillian gave him an absent look, and fell to dreaming again. Little flames licked noisily about the back-log, in the silence.

After a few minutes Gibbs gave his stepmother a quick look; it was as if he saw her, young, beautiful, troubled, for the first time. Something was making her unusually silent tonight; he wondered what it could be.

"Headache, Lillian?" he ventured. The words sounded curiously intimate and tender as he heard them fall, he had a quick flash of diffidence. Did he call her "Lillian?" But of course he did!

She looked up with her slow smile.

"No, Gibbs. Just one of—" she passed her hand quickly over her forehead, frowned faintly, and sighed—"just one of my bad times," she said, very low, looking down at the fire again. "I'm not on speaking terms with your friend tonight!"

His friend? Gibbs could not understand her. She would not call Ellen that. She would not speak so of his father. He could only echo her words stupidly:

"My friend?"

"Your friend Lillian," she elucidated smilingly. Gibbs felt an unexpected sensation at his heart. He did not speak again, nor did she, and when Ellen and the old man came up from the garden, chilly and laughing, with a few early violets adding their wet freshness to Ellen's other violets, Lillian and Gibbs were still standing before the fireplace, and still silent.

> "Satan Finds mischief for idle hands to do." Gibbs and his wife have been too happy. What now?

Meaning of Putting the Right Foot Forward

In getting out of bed in the morning always take care to place the right foot first, or the day will be unlucky. Many otherwise practical people also take care to place the right foot first when entering a house, says London Tit-Bits.

The origin of the very common superstition with regard to the right foot is easily accounted for by association. It is a psychological offspring of the word "right," and its meaning of "in conformity with moral law, permitted by the principle which ought to regulate conduct." and so on.

The word as applied to the side of the human body which is toward the east when the face is turned to the north is of exactly the same derivation, and owes its present application to the fact that most people are "right-handed," and therefore, the right hand is the right hand to do things with.

By extension the word came to cover that whole side of the body. And so, in getting out of bed, if the right foot is right, the left foot must be wrong. Moreover, the word "left" is from the Anglo-Saxon, meaning worthless, and, applied originally to the left arm, has suffered the same extension as the word "right" over the one side of the body.

Rocks for a Park

At the registry office in Bath, Maine, there is recorded a deed from the United States to the state of Maine of Sugar Loaf islands at the mouth of the Kennebec. The deed says that these islands shall be used for park purposes, and in the event of their being used for any other purpose the title shall revert to the United States. But the islands are a couple of large rocks each about 200 feet long. A good deal of their area is devoid of growth, while on the rest shrubs, grass and a few small trees struggle for life.—Exchange.

MAN TOLD MRS. SPENCER "TANLAC SAVED MY LIFE"

And Then She Tried Treatment and Found Relief From Her Own Troubles.

"I am 69 years of age, but since taking Tanlac I have gained 9 lbs. and don't feel over 40," are the splendid results Mrs. Sarah Spencer, 2109 22nd Ave., S., Minneapolis, Minn., declares she has obtained from the celebrated treatment.

"For two years stomach trouble, constipation and biliousness kept me awfully run down. I was almost a nervous wreck, got very little ease or rest and was right on the verge of giving up.

"One day I asked a man, whose picture and testimonial I saw in the paper, if Tanlac really helped him. He said, 'Tanlac saved my life,' so I lost no time buying Tanlac and the results are, I have gained 9 lbs. and enjoy splendid health. I now know for myself that Tanlac is wonderful."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 million bottles sold.

Tanlac Vegetable Pills for constipation; made and recommended by the manufacturers of Tanlac.

"Prose" and "Pro's"

In sporting matters the average boy's erudition is aptly illustrated by a story a certain educator is fond of telling. A teacher was trying to explain to a group of youngsters the respective properties of poetry and prose. Her audience was rather bored but she thought she caught a glimpse of understanding on one boy's face. Brightly turning to him she said: "Now, Tommy, give me one definition of prose." "People who get paid for playing golf," was the answer which proved enigmatic to the teacher.

September's Many Names

September falls within the zodiacal sign of Libra, the balance, or scales. September gets its name from the Latin numeral septem, because the month was the seventh of the ancient Roman calendar, which had but ten months. In the days of Charlemagne the French called the season the harvest month. Among the early Saxons it was known as barley month. The American Indians called it "Moon of Falling Leaves."

Densmore Cleans Up "Sops"

Most of our citizens are quite well acquainted with Feno Densmore formerly of this place and son of Homer Densmore. For some time he has been located in Monroe county which as previously stated, is the stronghold of Catholic activities in the state. Not very long since he had a set-to with a couple of Followers of his Royal Highness, the Pope, and found it necessary to administer a "knock down" in fact they found that Densmore was more than a match for their bull dozing tactics but the latest stunt it seems is a crusade which he has inaugurated against intemperance and Moonshining in his vicinity.

A recent issue of a Detroit paper appeared with a double column article headed by a picture of the little country church and its minister Rev. Densmore whom it styled the "Fighting Parson". The minister having been appointed a member of law enforcement committees has been the leading light in cleaning up about 40 illicit stills in Monroe county and rounding up a gang of bootleggers who operate from Canada. The State Police have given him their aid and together the combination has proved too much for the "wets" so far. Threats of instant death have been made by the whiskey crowd but nothing has happened as yet. If Densmore would move up to Hillsdale county and find as good support here as he had in Monroe, we believe he would be a winner, but of course no such thing as this could happen. We are looking forward to election with interest wondering what it will bring us in the shape of a Sheriff. If we get the right man look for some important doings right off the bat.

It Pays Big Interest to Vote

What is your share of the expenses of our government? Did you ever figure it out. Statistics indicate that the average per capita tax in this state for government upkeep is $77.00, Now if your family consists of three, you are paying annually into the United States government the sum of $231.00 and if you want to protect your yearly investmdent and see that it is properly aministered, you must go to the polls on November 4th and vote, thus making your own personal statement as to how you want this money used. If you don't do it you are certainly criminally negligent and if the state and national affairs are not to your liking, you have no reason to complain.

It is a sad and deplorable state of affairs when not over 50 per cent of the eligible voters visit the polls as in our last primary election.

Everyone who remains at home was negligent in managing his or her own business, and this method if followed up would eventually make bankrupts of us all in our private affairs.

That kind of apathy toward government affairs is menacing the Democracy of the country. Do you know what that means? Simply this: When the National electorate no longer cares to direct the doings at Washington, the grafters and boodle officials who have for years been trying to get control will step in and from that it is only a short cut to chaos and dissolution such as Russia is undergoing,

What makes America such a splendidly governed nation? Why is this country the Meccha of all theemigrants of the European nations? There is but one answer. Freedom of thought and speech is the great objective of all peoples. Upon the surface of Plymouth Rock our forefathers founded a government unique and benevolent a government that has weathered the storms of centuries, because it is my gyvernment, your government and our government. Are you going to stay away from the polls, repudiate this splendid system, thereby shifting the management of this country from the people to a few political grafters?

We believe you will give this your profound attention.

Some More College Filth

Over at Albion College one of the students, by name Smale, who hails from Flint, made an effort to start a small college paper and in the first issue made so many offensive remarks toward the faculty, the fraternities and in fact repudiated everything and everybody at all considered decent, that the effort was squelched by the faculty.

Jackson papers reported that he even advised students to break away from the staid old traditions of a Christian college and make a saturnalia of anarchy and dissipation of the Methodist institution. His euphonious remarks of course created considerable comment and things warmed up to the extent he was called upon the carpet and expelled by the President. He went home to Flint and even at that would have been unmolested if he had not signified his intention of putting out another issue. Smale was arrested in Flint, brought to Albion and jailed Nobody seems to know just what he is driving at and no one is quite certain whether he is subject to brain storms or just plain deviltry. How he got in to the institution is not half so important as how he got out, however most anyone with his views would quite likely run afoul of the discipline unless his credentials were gilt edged. We should laugh to see one of his kind fall into the hands of President Ferris of the Institute at the Rapids. We are watching the outcome with interest. Smale has a hearing before Justice Wright and may possibly be bound over to Circuit court if they find his misdoing serious enough, and no evidences of aberration of the think tank.

The Latest Gossip

Mr. and Mrs. Abe Potash (formerly Miss Liza Schnapps) who were recently "marriaged together" have returned from their honeymoon trip which included a tour of Jackson, Moscow, Wheatland and Hoxie and are at home at the residence of the bride's parents, on Ash-heap Lane. Mr. Potash is one of the town's most up-to-date whittlers and for several seasons he could be found on all sunny days between July 2 and Sept. 23 at the main corner, and it is believed a great future is in store for him as soon as the Moscow-Chicago turnpike is opened to traffic.

With his usual business sagacity immediately after the wedding Abe said to his wife: "Every time I kiss you I will give you one dollar." He then handed her a dollar which she put in a large wooden box. Soon after he was obliged to leave home and go to a neighboring township to work. He took along a picture of his wife and every time he kissed the picture he mailed a dollar to Mrs. Potash. When he got home he said: "Now let us open the box and see how much we have saved." They did so and found inside ten one dollar bills, three $5's six $2's, some $10's and four boxes of candy, a sealskin coat, two wrist watches, a lavalliere, four new hats, a pair of silk stockings, three shirtwaists and seventeen trading tickets from the store.

Abe looked at Liza and Liza looked at Abe. Finally the surprised husband blurted out: "How is this? I gave you only one dollar at a time. Liza executed a hop skip two-step as she smiled sweetl and said: "Vell Abie, you see everybody iss not so stingy as you vas."

M. A. C. Dairy Judges Win National Honors

Competing against teams from 23 different states and Canada, student dairy cattle judges from the M. A. C. won the sweepstakes prize at the recent National Dairy Show, held at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, thus bringing to the state for the first time the highest honor of its kind in the dairy world.

In addition to the team prizes, F. H. Williamson, of Pontaic, an agricultural student at M. A. C., won the sweepstakes award for individuals in judging all dairy breeds. Williamson was first among all contestants in Jerseys as well as winning the all around ribbon.

Other members of the victorious team were placed high enough in the different classes to bring the team in first. The team was number one in the Jersey and Guernsey classes and sixth in Holstein judging, ranking somewhat lower with the Ayrshires, the fourth breed in the contest.

The team and the different individuals won a long list of trophies for their performance, cups, plaques, statues and other awards being included: Williamson also brought back the $400 scholarship offered by the American Jersey Cattle Club for best judging in the breed.

The Michigan Club Boys dairy judging team, while not so successful as the college outfit, finished seventh among more than twenty entrants.

J. E. Burnett, of the M. A. C. dairy department, coached the college team and accompanied it to Milwaukee, while Nevels Pearson, of the state Boys and Girls Club staff, handled the club judges.

Exhibit Planned To Show Apple Quality

Believing that their apples are not excelled in quality by those of any other state in the country, Michigan growers, through the State Horticultural Society, will stage a big apple show at Grand Rapids from Dec. 2 to 5, in an effort to educate consumers to the high quality of the state crop.

It will be the third annual Michigan Apple Show, and plans call for the biggest exposition yet. In order to interest more consumers, the gate is to be free this year, according to horticulural society plans, as announced this week by Roy H. Marshall, of the M. A. C. staff and also superintendent of exhibits at the show.

Every commercial producer of apples, no matter how small his orchard, is urged by Prof. Marshall to lend his support to the show, in an effort to make it the biggest event of the kind held in the country. Very liberal premiums, including each awards and various special trophies, are to be up on all classes. "Exhibit apples can best be selected while the fruit is being harvested", says Marshall in discussing preparation of exhibits for the show. "When a well colored specimen, free from blemishes and of good commercial size for the variety, is noticed by the pickers or graders, it should be laid aside. Surprisingly little effort will thus be envolved in collecting enough fruit of several varieties to exhibit and compete in the numerous classes.

"Suggestions for preparing fruits for exhibit, score cards used by the judges in making the awards and a list of the various classes and prizes may be had by addressing H. D. Hootman, Secretary, Michigan State Horticultural Society, East Lansing, Mich. Furthermore, the Secretary of the Society, the Superintendent of exhibits or any officer of the Society will be glad to furnish any information on application."

105 Miles For A Lantern

To earn enough money to buy a pint of ink, an American railroad has to haul a ton of freight 48 miles, Dr. David Friday, director of research of the National Transportation Institute, said in a report on railroad earnings.

"To buy a cross tie," the report says, "a railroad has to haul a ton of freight 75 miles: to purchase a hand lantern, 105 miles; to replace a freight car wheel, 1,287 miles a monkey wrench, 115 miles. To pay for a day's work of a freight train crew a ton of freight must be hauled 3,350 miles. A day's work of a machinist must be paid for by a haul of 534 miles.

"Average compensation paid each railroad employe in 1923 was $1,488 to pay which was necessary to haul one ton of freight 133,441 miles, or more than five times the distance around the world."

Give Twelve Reasons For Davis' Election

Democrats Name All Campaign Issues in Arguments for Their Presidential Candidate.

Washington, D. C.—Twelve reasons why John W. Davis and Charles W. Bryan should be elected on November 4 have been offered by voters in Washington, D. C., and are now being used by speakers in the campaign in various parts of the country. All the leading issues in the presidential contest are stated in epitome in the twelve reasons.

Here are the reasons the Democrats are advancing for the election of their presidential and vice-presidential candidates:

1. Davis and Bryan are progressives, have clean records and are men of outstanding ability.
2. They would raise national administration from insignificant mediocrity to dignity and distinction.
3. They are not only honest themselves, but they would demand and enforce honesty in all parts of the government.
4. They would turn out rascals and replace them with conscientious public servants.
5. They are the enemies of the protective high tariff which takes money out of the pockets of the general public to put it into the pockets of an already rich favored class.
6. They believe that public office is a public trust and not a private graft
7. They believe in an erect, responsible foreign policy whereby America will frankly and courageously take her place in the council of nations instead of pussy-footing through the back door or sitting on the doorstep.
8. They believe in equitable taxation. They do NOT believe in removing taxes from the excessively rich and keeping them on the less fortunate, as the Mellon plan proposed.
9. They believe labor as well as capital should get a square deal.
10. They pledge themselves to the Democratic policy of benefits for all the people as opposed to special favors to special classes.
11. They advocate the ratification of the Child Labor Amendment to the Constitution, and the protection of women in industry.
12. Their election means honesty at home, honor abroad and world peace and prosperity.

WOMEN DEMOCRATS WIN NOMINATIONS

Women who have sought Democratic nominations in the primaries this year have been unusually successful; one woman holds a gubernatorial nomination, three hold Congressional nominations and two have been nominated for Secretary of State. A fourth has just been nominated in New Jersey in her district for Congress.

Mrs. J. A. Ferguson holds the nomination, which is virtually equivalent to the election as Governor of Texas. Mrs. Mary Ward Hart, of Benton, Illinois, is running for Congress-at-large on the Democratic ticket; Miss Phebe Sutliff was nominated for Congress in her district at Warren, Ohio, in the Democratic primaries, and Miss Nellie Cline, of Larned, Kansas, has the Democratic nomination for the seventh district.

Miss Sutliff won in the district in which Mrs. Harriett Taylor Upton, former vice-chairman of the Republican Executive Committee, unsuccessfully sought the Republican nomination for Congress. Miss Cline is a lawyer, and has been twice a member of the State Legislature in Kansas. Mrs. Mary I. Norton, of Newark, New Jersey, is contending for the nomination in her district, and if she wins, is virtually assured of a seat in Congress, as the district is overwhelmingly Democratic.

TARIFF COSTS MORE THAN INCOME TAXES

Burden Is Ten Times Greater, According To Fair Tariff League's Experts.

New York.—Investigations made by the Fair Tariff League, a protectionist organization, serve to show that tariff taxes paid by the people of five States—Texas, Kansas, Idaho, Washington and Oregon—are nearly four times the amount collected by the Federal Government on all incomes of $5,000 and less in the country as a whole.

The tariff costs Texas $177,774,781; Kansas, $66,418,876; Idaho, $18,876,744; Washington, $52,348,100, and Oregon, $30,313,300. The combined population of these States is 10,279,788, or less than twice the number of all the persons in the country paying on incomes of $5,000 or less.

The tariff costs the people of these five States $33.10 per capita annually. They pay in income taxes an average of $3.14 per capita a year. In other words, the tariff is a burden more than ten times as great as their Federal income taxes.

REPUBLICAN FOR DAVIS

Says Democratic Candidate Is "Wonderful Man" and "Honest Doer."

New York.—John W. Davis, Democratic presidential candidate, was described by P. B. Noyes, of Syracuse, as "a wonderful man" in the course of a speech he delivered there recently. Mr. Noyes was formerly American Rhineland Commissioner. He explained that until recent years he had been a Republican.

"John Davis is the most all-around able man I have ever known," declared Mr. Noyes. "He is an honest thinker and an honest doer. He has no axes to grind. He comes to the nomination with no obligation to any man. He knows his country. He knows Washington. He knows as few other men do the real condition of international affairs. He is practical and has a life-long habit of working vigorously and doing thoroughly whatever needs to be done.

"We have been waiting for just such a man as John Davis. He would make a President of whom we could all be proud. He would make this country prosperous. He would help to bring peace to the world."

The Bible in Our Schools

(Written by Cora Eggleston)

Wyoming practically provides in effect, so lawvers believe, against any religious exercises in the public schools. Idaho, Colordao, and Montana have provisions that might be similarly construed by the courts.

Investigations discloses that in the states where Bible reading is not prohibited the custom of reading it has never been adopted, or if it has been adopted, is falling off. The Bible—and that is the source of our religion—is out of our educational system; so is religion. Here is astonishing proof of how our educational system, even up through the universities, ignores religion.

What kind of religion do we want taught in our public schools? That's a fair question. It must be a broad religion, but it can not be too broad. There are nine Bibles in the world: nine great books that teach men, spirtually, how to live. The Bible of our civilization is the Mosaic Bible; in the religion of America we can go outside this Book. The translation of our Bible was the beginnig and the foundation of popular education. Our religion must be based on this Book.

And how shall we define a religion that may be acceptable to the churched and the unchurched, to Protestant, Jew, and Catholic? In the great reading room of the Congressional library at Washington stand eight statues, each with a sentence written over it. One of these statues represents religion. Over it are these words—and they may well be taken as a definition of the religion of America that can be taught to our children in the public schools:

"What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly and to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God?", the man who selected that verse from the book of Micah for the purpose of placing it above this statue. He was selected by officials of the United States government to choose the incriptions for all the statues.

This man is Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus since 1909 of Harvard University. His selection from the Bible of that definition of religion for the Congressional library was made after a lifetime of pondering how to define a religion that would suit America and that could be taught to childhood and youth in the public school years are the years for religious instruction.

Dr. Elliot says it is in the town school that religion must be taught In almost every instance the character of the youth is determined before he goes to college.

We ought to make it possible, in the entire public school system of America, for a teacher, without running the risk of breaking school rules or the state laws, to be able to answer this question, asked by a pupil: "Teacher, what does that motto on a quarter mean, In God We Trust?"

There are many public schools in the United States today where teachers, knowing school rules and customs and state laws, would have a right to be dismayed by such a query.

America will be a better place if He and knowledge of Him are present in the schoolrooms where America's children prepare for life.

Scientists have been working in some of the schools of America spending large sums of money measuring the characters of our public school children. This has been done by tests, these tests show that over one-half of our American school children will, under temptation, have an unethical outlook on life.

They show, more than this, that under temptation over half of them will act dishonorably or dishonestly. To put it plainly, science shows that over half of them will cheat and lie and steal.—they did better than we had any right to expect them to. Only three out of every ten of them receive any sort of organized religious instruction, but way down in them somewhere was a little something that their school teacher hadn't put there, but which kept them from being seven out of ten bad. If you can think of any thing more pathetic about childhood than trying to be good, under almost irresistible temptation, when you don't know how—when you haven't been taught how by the folks you love and trust.

The True-False experiment was a test of the opinions of children in regard to honesty and ethics. The Purchasing Test was a test of how children would act under temptation to dishonesty. In this test storekeepers and clerks were taken into the confidence of the experimenters.

The children were sent to purchase an article that was supposed to cost twenty-five cents. They were each given a quarter for the purchase. At the store the clerk would say, "We are selling this article for fifteen cents today," and would return a dime to the child. This test was sometimes varied by having the clerk give the child a dime extra, in change, apparently making an error.

The test was to see how many children—and which ones—would bring back the dime to the teacher

APPROPRIATING MONEY

The tests were ingeniously disguised. In one city a test was given in a restaurant where the children thought they were giving a banquet for the restaurant keeper who, some weeks before, had made a gift to their school organization. Every child brought a certain amount of money to pay for his share of the banquet. At the conclusion of the banquet it was announced, privately, to each child that the cost was less than had been expected, The children were supposed to return the excess to their school organization. This test involved not only honesty, but gratitude to the restaurant keeper and loyalty to the school organization. Only a small percentage of the children returned the money.

Elixir Vs. Brains

Years ago, in our town, for one week during the summer, a street faker held forth of an evening in the public square. He sold a mysterious concoction to which he gave the high sounding name of "Elixir of Life." According to the lecture, which invariably preceded the sale, it would cure all the pain and aches to which mankind and womankinb might be heir.

To attract a crowd within the circle of light cast by the flaring gasoline torches on his gaudily painted wagon, he would give a talk on phrenology, illustrating his points with the aid of a human skull and such small boy subjects as he could induce to aid him.

I recall one such a night and occasion, when, having an evening of leisure on my hands, I joined the village folk congregated about his motley equipage. He had just reached the point in his phrenological discussion where he required a human subject to operate upon. He called for volunteers.

After a moment's hesitation, a small, unkempt figure mounted the steps that led to the wagon bed and stood beside him. With that good natured ridicule which is a common attribute of small town people, the crowd nudged one another and laughed hilariously.

The "subject" who had volunteered was the son of Pete, the village drunkard—probably regarded as the sorriest specimen of the rising generation in the environs of the town· "If he's got any bumps on his head", said a voice near me, "the old man put 'em there."

The boy stood blinking in the light of the torches—a typical waif of the streets, such as might be a common sight in cities, but a rara avis in our parts. He was plainly nervous and ill at ease yet there was a certain touch of courage in his daring this publicity that caught my fancy. I watched with livelier interest.

Our friend, the phrenologist, knew something of the psychology of crowds, for he was quick to take advantage of this opportunity to play upon the rough and ready humor of his audience.

His nimble fingers played over the boy's head; he turned this way and that; he tilted his chin, then lowered it—the while he kept up a running fire of comment and explanation that convulsed the bystanders. Here was a rare specimen—mental motive type—a student—an executive—a leader benevolent— courageous industrious forceful—dominant. So he ran on until he saw that the crowd wearied of the jest, when he abruptly dismissed the boy and turned enthusiastically to extolling the merits of that peerless remedy, "Elixir of Life."

The villagers watched him, but I watched the boy. Why, I do not know, but it seemed to me that I caught something in his face, a new light in his eyes, an awakening of something dormant. He slipped from my sight, however, as I looked after him, and the incident was forgotten in the press of the weeks that followed.

All I have narrated occurred long ago. This summer I visited again the old town. A street faker held forth in the square. So almost identical was he with the one of long ago that the incident of the boy came back to me. I turned to the "old inhabitant" who was with me "By the way," I asked, "whatever became of old Pete's boy?" He laughed. "Funny thing—that, he replied. "Ever hear of the Hon Henry Porter Donnellson, who's made such a stir up at the capitol as a representative of the State's big business interests? Well that's him,"

The Silent Motorcycle

The noise and vibration of the motorcycle are two features which have worked somewhat to the detriment of this mode of travel. But these objectionable features seem to have been overcome by a motorcycle design which has been recently shown in England. The noise is eliminated by entirely inclosing the engine of the transmission and several new features are introduced to overcome the vibration. As a test recently, a motorcycle of the new design and a standard automobile were driven toward an observer on the roadside. The latter heard the automobile at 134 yards, but the motorcycle approached within 70 yards before its noise was noticed.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best--Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says, "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by parcel post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

Modern Life

As two pedestrians were starting to cross a busy thoroughfare a man almost grazed them with his high-powered car and forced them back to the curb. Before they could remonstrate he was well on his way.

"Isn't that Flubdub?" asked one.

"The same."

"I heard he was out of work."

"He is."

"Then how can he maintain an expensive automobile?"

"That, my boy, is a secret which baffles master minds. Many of us apparently no longer need fairy godmothers."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Arsenal Unearthed

Twenty-two rusting and rotting muzzle-loading muskets and several copper sabers were unearthed in a sandstone cave on a small island ten miles from the mainland by Emerson Wray, a blue fox farmer. The weapons are believed to have been hidden by a landing party of Russians who acted as hijackers against sealers in the early days of Alaska's Asiatic history.

"Hey Hiram!"

"What is it?" inquired the grizzled agriculturist as he lounged over the fence.

"The postmaster up to the village says please call and git your mail."

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

"A Blessing to Suffering Women," Writes One

Louisville, Illinois.—"I certainly thank you for the great benefit I have received from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I first learned about it from my step-mother who got so much help from it. Several years ago I took it for inward weakness and since then I have taken it during the Change of Life and it has been a great help to me. It certainly is a blessing to suffering women and I take pleasure in recommending it. My health has been better this summer than it has been for five years. I am now able to do all my work and have canned 340 quarts of fruit and vegetables this summer."—Mrs. KATE McPEAK, Louisville, Illinois.

Wants Letter Used As Proof

Frankford, Pennsylvania.—"I am sure if women who suffer through the Change of Life as I have, with hot flashes, nervousness and other weaknesses, would give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial they would be benefited as I was. My nerves were so bad that every little noise made me jump, but now I am not bothered that way at all. My husband says he really hated to look at me I looked so miserable. I hope you will use this letter as proof of the help the Vegetable Compound is giving me."—Mrs. ABBIE HARVEY, 5701 Leonard St., Frankford, Pa.

Forced To Remain in Bed

Carlisle, Illinois.—"During the Change of Life I suffered with severe nervousness and with disturbances of the entire system. These continued probably two years before I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I could do none of my work and was not always able to be up. For ten days at a time I was forced to remain in bed with my hips propped higher than my head and the pains were terrible. The doctor helped some but each time I was forced to go over the same suffering. I had taken the Vegetable Compound in 1910 after my twins were born and it had helped me so I decided to try it again. I became better and gained in strength. I have taken it for about three years now but not steadily. I am able to do my housework but I avoid all heavy lifting and washing and ironing as I know I am not strong enough yet. I give the Vegetable Compound to my daughters and recommend it to my friends."—Mrs. LOUISA B. BRAND, 450 Fairfax Street, Carlyle, Illinois.

In a recent country-wide canvass of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, over 100,000 replies were received and 98 out of every 100 reported they had been benefited by its use. For sale by druggists everywhere.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Japan Wins Victory in the League of Nations—Baseball Scandal.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

JAPAN has, for the time being, put one over on the member nations of the League of Nations, and all the world is waiting, rather anxiously, to see what the result will be. It all turns on the matter of regulation of immigration, which the Japanese will not admit is a purely internal question that each nation is entitled to determine without outside interference. They refused to accept the league's proposed treaty of arbitration, security and disarmament until it had been amended to accord with their view on that point, and after a strenuous debate the committee in charge yielded to them and framed a so-called compromise which satisfied them. The "protocol for pacific settlement of international disputes," as it is officially known, was then submitted to the league assembly and accepted. In the opinion of most Americans and of Australia, Canada and other British dominions, the league has overreached itself by attempting to become not only an international arbitrator but an international lawmaker, and the result is more likely to be war than peace.

Briefly stated, the amendments insisted upon and obtained by Count Adachi and his Japanese colleagues oblige the league to arbitrate the immigration question or any other question of internal policy even after the world court has refused to have anything to do with it. This, as one correspondent puts it, means that "Japan is entitled to drag the United States into a long, dangerous dispute on the race question before the world's nations, even though the highest court of justice in existence has declared the question at issue is America's own business. No time limit is set for this operation, and if at any time during this process the United States kicks over the traces and decides to handle its own problems in its own way the league is obliged to punish it by the military power of 54 nations."

If the United States should refuse to obey the league's orders, Japan could declare war on us and could count on the support of as many of the signatory nations as would honor their signatures to the document. In the same case would be any other nation that has adopted legislative measures to check Japanese immigration.

In the debates in Geneva the Japanese had the support of Greece and Italy—quite understandably—and of Belgium, whose reason for such a stand is not clear. The French and English representatives were so set on adoption of the protocol that they gladly accepted the compromise, which in fact was practically complete surrender to Count Adachi's demands. However, adoption of the protocol at Geneva is not binding until the document has been ratified by the governments of signatory powers, and the prospect now is that it will be rejected by at least the British, Australian, New Zealand, South African and Canadian parliaments. Australia, which is determined to remain "white," is especially concerned over the matter and its press is outspoken and bitter in comment. In the United States the consistent opponents of American membership in the league see further justification for their position. Those who have advocated American membership are in the main noticeably silent.

In one respect the discussions in the league worked out to the disadvantage of the Japanese, for they were compelled to admit openly that they were considering the possibility of making war on the United States over the immigration question. This might well result in the making of an agreement by America, England and the British dominions for parallel action, co-operation and support.

ENGLAND'S labor government has run up against a crisis that is likely to bring about its downfall. Some days ago Prime Minister MacDonald announced that if the house of commons failed to ratify the treaties negotiated with soviet Russia he would appeal to the country through a general election. He said that under the pacts Great Britain secured many valuable concessions and would only guarantee, not make, a loan to Russia. Wednesday night the Liberal parliamentary party, on which the Laborites rely for their control of the house, met and gave notice to the government to abandon the Russian treaties or get out of office. When the autumn session of parliament opens on October 28 the Liberals will offer a motion rejecting the treaties on the ground that they threaten "to divert resources that are urgently needed for national and imperial development," and that they "contemplate that the British taxpayer should be made liable for further loans to the Russian state, raised by means of a guarantee by the British government, as a condition upon which any part of the private claims of certain British creditors should be recognized or met by the soviet republic." The motion of repudiation will be supported by the Unionists.

FOR the first time in ten years France has a balanced budget, and Finance Minister Clementel says the equilibrium between receipts and expenditures will be maintained, the policy of raising loans to meet normal charges being abandoned. Assurance is given that none of the measures proposed are such as to harm capital. Taxes will remain unchanged, but they will be more thoroughly collected. Among the estimated receipts is 800,000,000 francs from Germany.

FINANCE Minister Luther of Germany has gone to London to sign the agreements in connection with the Dawes plan loan, which he said would be floated before the American elections and put on the market at 97 and bear 7 per cent interest. The British bankers informed him that unless Germany was prepared to let down the customs barriers against British trade she need not expect further credits there.

Germany's immediate worry is a prospective wheat famine, for the crop has been full half destroyed in regions that were devastated by great storms. East Prussia, Westphalia and the Rhineland suffered the most. Government agents have been sent to the United States, Canada and Argentina to purchase grain. Not much can be obtained from Russia for the crops there also are short. The reich plans to put an import duty on grain, the money obtained to go to the farmers, many of whom are facing financial ruin.

CHINA'S civil war goes along merrily but neither side seems to have won any decisive advantage. On the Shanghai front the fighting has been severe for several days and the defenders of the city appear to be getting the worst of it. These Chekiang forces, however, though driven back, claim to have strengthened their lines. Their troops in the Sungkiang area are now commanded by Ma-liang, once a famous general and later a bandit chief. In northern China Wu and Chang have not yet engaged in a real battle.

Just to complete the record about wars, it should be said that the Spanish troops in Morocco, after relieving some of the garrisons that were beseiged by the Riff tribesmen, were again in difficulties because the Moors cut the Tetuan highroad and once more surrounded Zauen where there is now a Spanish force of 6,000. Also it is reported that the Wahabis, the fundamentalist fanatics of Islam, have captured Mecca from King Hussein's Arabs.

NEW YORK Giants and Washington Senators, having won respectively the National and American league pennants, are playing the world's championship series. But on the eve of its opening there came to light another sad scandal. Commissioner Landis blacklisted two members of the Giants, Outfielder Jimmy O'Connell and Coach Cozy Dolan, for attemping to bribe Shortstop Heinie Sand of the Philadelphia team to throw a game to New York so as to make their victory in the National league more certain. Sand refused the $500 offered him and promptly informed his manager. O'Connell, called before Commissioner Landis, President Heydler of the National league and John McGraw, manager of the Giants, confessed and vainly tried to implicate three of his fellow players. O'Connell was bought from the Pacific coast by the Giants in 1922 at a cost of $75,000 and had been much lionized in California. He says Coach Dolan suggested the bribery scheme to him, but where the $500 came from is not yet revealed. Dolan has been in professional baseball for 20 years.

CHICAGO was host last week to the American Bankers' association, which wound up its final session with the installation of the new president, William E. Knox, head of the Bowery Savings bank of New York. Several of the financiers who addressed the convention made severe attacks on Senator LaFollette, terming him "the nation's chief liability" and "the archdemagogue." The independent candidate for the Presidency, indeed, found no defenders among the bankers, which is not surprising.

SENATOR BROOKHART of Iowa, who is running for re-election as a Republican, prepared his way to bolting the G. O. P. national ticket by a letter to Chairman Butler in which he demanded that Charles G. Dawes resign or be compelled to resign as candidate for the vice presidency. He declared Dawes had wrecked the campaign, especially in the Northwest, and that he had organized a disloyal group—the Minute Men of the Constitution—to conduct an illegal defense of the Constitution with the secret purpose of destroying the constitutional rights of union labor. He also held that the Dawes candidacy was an insult to the co-operative movement in agriculture. Brookhart has long been in sympathy with the LaFollette policies. Neither Butler nor Dawes has replied to his demand at this writing. The "regular" Republicans in Iowa are wondering what to do about Brookhart. He cannot be removed as the party nominee, but the state committee may decide to support Luther A. Brewer of Cedar Rapids, an independent Republican candidate for the senatorship.

Democrats of Rhode Island nominated Gov. William S. Flynn for United States senator. Their platform denounces the Ku Klux klan and calls for modification of the Volstead act to permit the sale of light wines and beer. Similar planks are in the platforms adopted by the Democrats of Vermont and New Jersey.

REPORTS received by Secretary of the Treasury Mellon show that financial conditions in the agricultural sections of the Northwest have improved steadily under the operation of the $10,000,000 agricultural credit corporation which was formed by New York and Chicago bankers at the suggestion of President Coolidge.

"Attention was first directed by the corporation to the banking situation, then in bad straits, and loans were made to some of the 230 banks to an aggregate amount of over $5,000,000," says the statement from the treasury. "Deposits in the banks aided were over $53,000,000. It is difficult to estimate how many of these banks would have been closed if the aid had not been given—probably 70 per cent, and the effect of their closing would have embarrassed other banks.

"It is safe to assume that by stopping the excessive number of bank failures in the Northwest until the crop began to mature and the spirit of the people in this territory revived, the corporation safeguarded at least $25,000,000 of the people's deposits.

"The banking situation having so improved by the increased prosperity in the territory, the corporation has now concentrated its attention on farm diversification."

Brisk Dealings in Stolen Passports

Hamburg.—American passports and foreign passports vised for the United States are now worth their weight in gold in central Europe, and passport thieves are busy on trains, in hotels and on steamers and wharves.

Scores of stolen passports are reported weekly to American consular officials. It is a frequent occurrence for a foreigner who has obtained a vised document for America to have it stolen before he starts on his journey.

Americans are warned by consular officers to keep the numbers of their passports, and make speedy reports of theft to the nearest consul, so that the papers may be canceled from Washington and steps taken to prevent impostors from reaching the United States. Travelers are warned not to leave their passports in their luggage, even if it is locked, and advised to carry them in inside pockets beyond the reach of sneak thieves.

The situation has become particularly bad since the new immigration law went into effect. There are evidences that organized gangs are dealing in papers supposed to guarantee entrance to America.

While purchasers of altered passports will probably come to grief, sooner or later, there are so many persons clamoring for admission to the United States that sharpers find a ready market for their stolen wares.

Great Britain's smallest borough is Montgomery, with 951 inhabitants.

How the Motor Industry Set the Pace for Highway Building

The "horseless carriage" of yesterday is now being produced as the modern automobile at the rate of 4,000,000 a year. The total number of motor vehicles registered in the United States is over 16,000,000.

And automobiles built today are more than ever capable of economically serving both business and recreation needs.

But there is an obstacle standing in the way of their maximum service to owners.

For while the automobile industry made paved highways an economic necessity, the mileage of such roads is today years behind the requirements of modern traffic.

Happily motorists everywhere are boosting for more and wider paved highways.

And extensive experience has taught them that Concrete Highways are one of the best all-around investments they can make—an investment that pays big dividends.

As one of our 16,000,000 motorists you know better than anyone else the need for more and wider Concrete Roads. Start now to help your local officials provide them.

COOLIDGE CLAIMS SHOWN AS FALSE

New York World Recounts Waste And Graft Under Present Administration.

MAKES NO MENTION OF FALL

President's Talk Of "Economy" Saves Him From Discussing Campaign Issues.

President Coolidge's claims of economy are reviewed and refuted in an editorial recently published in the New York World under the caption, "Penny Wise, Pound Foolish." One by one the extravagances and spoilations committed by Republican officials of the Harding-Coolidge administration are recounted and interpreted in this editorial. Here is what the World said:

"'I am for economy,' the President says. 'After that I am for more economy.'"

"What better issue to go campaigning with two months before election? It emphasizes none of the President's quarrels with his Congress. It brings to life no ghost of Albert Fall. It invites no fresh dispute between those divergent wings of the Republican Party whose chief point of agreement is their willingness to stay in office. To be for 'economy' is as safe and genuinely popular as it is to be for Decoration Day, a white Christmas and a happy New Year.

"Where do the Republicans find their figures?

"There is the matter of the public debt. The President has talked of that in all his recent speeches. General Dawes has mixed his Hell and Marias with it. And the text-book of the Republic National Committee talks about it at great length. What a Republican Administration did, the text-book says, was to reduce the public debt by $3,070,442,686 in a period of three years and six months. That is an average monthly cut of $75,000,000.

"The figure is accurate enough. But it is also true that between the peak of the country's war indebtedness and the date when the Wilson Administration left office a Democratic Administration cut down the public debt at an average monthly rate of $141,000,000, which is almost double the Republican figure, but one of the items which Republican experts in economy omit.

"Then there is the matter of economy in cutting down employees on the public pay-roll. There is a great to do in the Republican text-book because, in three years' time, Mr. Harding and Mr. Coolidge between them have cut 95,504 public servants from the list. Mr. Wilson, in two years' time, cut the public service down from war peak by 277,575 employees. The smaller number figures heavily when Republican economists check up accounts. The number three times larger doesn't.

"There is, again, the matter of a budget. 'The greatest constructive law ever written by a Congress,' the campaign text-book calls it—entirely a Republican achievement. But what of the fact that Woodrow Wilson went to Congress to urge a budget law and the fact that Congress, then Republican, refused to enact such a measure until his term had almost ended, in an effort to discredit him? Mr. Wilson vetoed the measure Congress passed, on the ground that its provisions affecting the Comptroller General invaded the prerogatives of the President. That he was right the Republicans themselves admitted a year later.

"Again, there is the triumph of a tax reduction, with Mr. Coolidge urging it. But Mr. Wilson when the war was over went to Congress to propose a tax-reduction bill. Beating that bill was meat for a Republican Congress. It fitted in with the accepted Republican tactics of making the Wilson Administration as unpopular as possible.

"Moreover, when a tax reduction bill was ultimately passed it was a Democratic measure that won votes enough to break a deadlock. Mr. Coolidge had put himself behind a plan that favored 6,000 people who pay taxes on incomes of $70,000 or more at the expense of the 6,000,000 people who do not. Had he stayed there, and a compromise not been effected on a Democratic bill, the country would have no reduction in taxation now.

John J. Pershing

General John J. Pershing has retired at the age of sixty-four years As yet, a man unschathed by the storms of life, and vigorous as an oak, army regulations have made it necessary for him to throw off the khaki of the soldier and don the everyday clothes of a private citizen. But no matter what his outward aspect may be, to Americans he will remain a man sans peur et sans reproche.

The code of ethics of John J. Pershing may be summed up under three heads—In the first place discipline; second, Training; third, Preparedness. The logical sequence of these three things in the making of men will be observed at a glance, for there can be no training without discipline and no preparedness without training.

With him consciousness was almost a fetish, and thoroughness was his motto. He has followed the dictum of another great soldier Wellington, who said "If a thing is worth doing at all, it is worth doing well." General Pershing above all things, has been a plodder. His career as a soldier could not by any flight of imagination be salled "meteoritic" but his record has been of work well done and obtacles overcome.

Though a soldier he was not a militarist. But he never willfully shut his eyes to impending trouble. "Be prepared" has been his slogan and defense not defiance, his ultimate aim.

Though General Pershing retires into private life through the exigencies of military discipline, the country will feel that he is here to aid by his example and wise council those upon whom the responsibility must now fall. It is for him not "Taps" that is sounded but the "Retreat" which rings forth in the atmosphere of a glowing sunset.—Dearborn Independent.

The Brooklyn Exponent reports that several acres of land has been purchased in Cement City by the Consumers Power Co. preparatory to establishing a large transformer station there to take care of the high voltage lines, thus stepping down to a minimum country voltage for the different lines which wiil supply surrounding towns. Brooklyn, Cement City and Clark Lake are supplied with light and power over these lines, and it is rumored that a franchise has been applied for by the company to extend their lines to Hillsdale on the N. Y. C. right of way, When this is accomplished North Adams will be in direct communication with two systems.

HAMILTON IS HERE!

The Evangelist With a Message From God

Rev. H. G. Hamilton of Warsaw Indiana, arrived in North Adams Saturday evening to begin two weeks Inspirational meetings in the interest of practical christianity. He addressed the congregation of the Baptist church in the morning, and in the afternoon he spoke at Wheatland and in the evening to a packed house at the Methodist church.

Monday night saw an unusually large throng in the church to hear the address "The Forgotten Secret of The Church" and on Tuesday evening the place was packed, and it is clearly seen the church is not going to be sufficiently large to hold the congregations of next week.

Pres Max Rapp, President of the Warsaw Conservatory of Music is expected to arrive Wednesday night. All lovers of music in North Adams will be delighted to hear Mr. Rapp on the piano. He is a consecrated Christian gentleman who is still in the twenties. Has appeared a number of times as pianist on the same platform as the great musical stars of the world, Madame Galli Curce, Schuman Heinke and many others.

Rev. Hamilton's messages are practical. He denounces in a severe way the cant, hypocracy, the sham of modern christianity. He is forceful in his style and pungent in the delivery of his message.

A number of requests have come in for a men's meeting to be held Sunday afternoon at 2:30 If it is thought to be most desirable an address will be delivered entitled "The Patriotism America Needs."

If your receipt says your time on the Advocate has expired, call in and renew.

A Pleasant Occasion

About thirty relatives met at the home of Mrs. Josephine Thompson to remind her it was Oct. 12th and her eightieth birthday. An elegant potluck dinner was served at noon to which all did ample justice. As for quality and quantity it was number one. Mrs. George Smith of Plymouth made the birthday cake which plainly told the story of 80 years. Guests were from Hillsdale, Plymouth, Jefferson, Hanover Jonesville, Mosherviile and North Adams. As the evening shades gathered each repaired to his or her separate homes wishing Mrs. Thompson many returns of October 12th.

Bidwell-Rice Company Entertains

One of the best musical-comedies which we have been privileged to hear in this village appeared on Wednesday evening at Knowles opera house as the first number of the Senior Lecture Course, and it is a pity the audience was not larger. The character sketches of Bidwell were superb and the cornet double triple of Miss Rice was certainly better than anything heard here for a number of years. Mrs. Bidwell gave an exhibition of ventriloquism which brought down the house.

Enchores were numerous and musical numbers were very well rendered, especially the old-time selections with ukelele and bass viol. Dimming of the lights aided materially in the production.

These excellent artists hail from Chicago and cannot but awaken a sincere interest in their line of work. We hope to listen to them again at some future date. They came here under the management of the Abbott Lyceum Bureau.

HELPED HER IN EVERY WAY

So Writes Mrs. Trombley of Sharon, Vt., Concerning Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Sharon, Vermont. — "I was weak and run-down, had a tired feeling and bearing-down pains. saw an advertisement in the newspaper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and began taking it. It has stopped these bearing-down pains and other bad feelings, and has helped me in every way. I have so much faith in the Vegetable Compound that I keep it on hand all of the time and recommend it whenever I have the opportunity."—Mrs. LEWIS TROMBLEY, Sharon, Vermont.

Glad to Help Others

"I had pains in my back and sides for many months, and my work would have to be left undone at those times. My sister told me what good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was doing her, so I tried it, and from the third bottle I was well and every one thought I looked better. I am glad to help others regain their health, and you may use my testimonial." — MABEL HARTMANN, 1824 Greene Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y.

Skin so sore could not touch water to it

Resinol relieves it within few hours

Washington, D. C., Aug. 25:—"I am so grateful to you for your splendid products and for what they have accomplished for me that I feel I must give you the details.

In attempting to improve the appearance of my chin, I used a soap which had been recommended for that purpose but which proved to be too harsh for when I washed off the lather, the skin came with it. I applied cold cream, but the damage was too severe to yield to so mild an agent. My husband consulted our neighborhood druggist and asked if it would not be advisable to call in our family doctor. The druggist said: "You do not need a doctor in this case. Get a jar of Resinol Ointment and a cake of Resinol Soap and have your wife use them according to directions — they will beat everything else a hundred ways." So my husband bought the Resinol products and hopefully brought them home.

My skin was so tender and sore that I could not touch water to it, so I cleansed it gently first with pure olive oil and then applied the Resinol. I used a soft handkerchief that night for protection. In the morning, I bathed it gently with warm water and Resinol Soap, rinsing off with tepid water, and I could hardly believe that such a miracle of healing could occur during one night. The raw surface had filmed over and now looked only like a bad case of sunburn. I kept my face anointed with Resinol all that day and by night the improvement was so great that I was able to go out.

This experience is now only a memory for my face is softer, fairer and smoother than ever. A jar of Resinol is my best pal in the future and I will never be without it." (Signed) Mrs. C. P. Tapley, 1028 8th St., N. W.

No Passports for Russians

The commissariat of internal affairs at Moscow has forbidden the issuance of further passports to Russians desiring to go to the United States, the number of applicants being more than five times the American immigration quota of 2,248. The Baltic and other ports are crowded with Russians anxious to sail for America, but the majority of these will be forced to return home.

A QUARREL

SYNOPSIS.—Ellen and Joe Latimer, orphans, without means, make their home with their Aunt Elsie, at Port Washington, small New York town. Ellen is studying art, her expenses being paid by Mrs. Sewall Rose, girlhood friend of her mother. Mrs. Rose invites Ellen to a Thanksgiving house party and the girl is delighted. On the way from the station to Mrs. Rose's Ellen rides with a remarkably attractive young woman and a much older man. She takes them for father and daughter, but they are introduced as Mr. and Mrs. Josselyn. Ellen does not "fit in" with the younger members of the party, and is miserable. Leaving for her home next morning, Ellen meets Gibbs Josselyn, son of her fellow guest. He has disapproved of his father's wedding and is not on speaking terms with the couple. Declining to stay at Mrs. Rose's, Gibbs drives Ellen to the station. They miss the train and Gibbs undertakes to drive the girl to Port Washington. Their auto is wrecked. Ellen is hurt, but it is not thought to be serious, and she and Gibbs part. He has been attracted by the girl, and she by him. Ellen's injury proves to be severe, and for months she is an invalid. Recovered, she is taking part in the town's Memorial day festivities when Gibbs Josselyn, on a yachting trip with a friend, George Lathrop, meets her again. The feeling of mutual attraction has strengthened since they parted. They leave Port Washington man and wife. Nearly seven years later Gibbs and Ellen Josselyn, with their son Tommy, come back from France to New York. They are welcomed by Josselyn, Senior, and his beautiful wife, Lillian, the old ill-feeling forgotten. Gibbs and Ellen make their home with the elder Josselyns, at Wheatley Hills, just outside New York. Gibbs idles, ostensibly looking for a studio in which to resume his portrait painting.

Gibbs did not attempt to repeat this little conversation to his wife. To do so would be to give it an undeserved importance. He told himself that there was really nothing to repeat, and yet he thought of it a hundred times during the next few days.

That night at dinner he had twice looked across the dinner table straight into Lillian's eyes, each time experiencing that faint, pleasant shock in his heart. He began to think of her, to wonder what thoughts her silences covered, to notice her silk-clad ankle or her white, ringed hand. Cadences in her voice began to linger with him, she made life more interesting for him in an innocent, undefined sort of way. Living in the same house with her, and in a house that incidentally furnished so exquisite a setting for any friendship, began to seem like a scene in a play. She was always playing some part; it amused him to play an answering part of his own. He had never deceived Ellen. He was merely playing a vague little game that she would not have appreciated at its innocent worth, and that might stop at any moment, leaving no one the worse.

Ellen had her own reserves, too, a tiny secret from Gibbs that worried her to an extent that she knew herself was entirely disproportionate. George Lathrop had taken the liberty of an old friend, and had advised her not to make her father-in-law's house her permanent home.

He had done it kindly, in the most brotherly manner, and without making it particularly emphatic, yet his earnestness had made Ellen vaguely uneasy, and she had not been quite happy since.

George had spoken on a certain beautiful May evening, when Ellen and Tommy, who had spent the day with her family in Port Washington, had come down to Sands Point late in the afternoon to see Harriet. Reaching home a little earlier than usual, George came upon them at tea. Tommy was riding about the garden on a golf stick, Ellen and Harriet were on the porch.

"Go telephone Lillian that I'm going to drive Ellen and Tommy home," George said to his daughter, "and put on a coat, baby, and come, too!"

"Oh, now that's a lot of trouble!" Ellen protested. But the man, sipping his tea indifferently, merely smiled, and Harriet delightedly ran off to obey him.

"You're going to be with the Josselyns all summer?" he asked, after a silence.

"I suppose so," Ellen answered. "Gibbs' father idolizes Tommy. They're wonderfully kind about wanting us, and they won't let us mention any other arrangement."

"I think you make a mistake," George said flatly. Ellen, who had been living in an atmosphere of honeyed sweetness of late, looked at him in quick and sensitive surprise.

"Of course Gibbs is looking for a studio in town!" she said uncomfortably. "Is it—is it that you don't think it is right for Gibbs to let his father—well, support him?" she asked bravely.

"That sounds like Joe's sister," George said, smiling. "No, it's not that. Tom Josselyn has more money than he can spend, and he hasn't done much for Gibbs, so far. No, it's not that. But—but I don't believe it's the happiest arrangement for any of you. Lillian, now—she's not a normal woman. She has her quarrels—her fancies—"

"I know you don't like Lillian," Ellen answered, smiling in her turn. "But she and I get along beautifully. We're not a bit alike, you know—"

"I should say you are not!" George interrupted. "Well, you know best. But I shouldn't advise it." And Harriet appearing at that moment, he held Ellen's blue coat for her, and watched her button it over her plain pongee gown. An hour later, when they were coming home, he asked Harriet about her. "You've taken a fancy to young Mrs. Josselyn, baby, haven't you?"

"Ellen? I love her!" Harriet responded enthusiastically. "Don't you think she's pretty, daddy, in her dear little way? Don't you think she has lovely blue eyes? I think she's a thousand times prettier than Lillian—"

"Come now!" her father smiled.

"Oh, daddy, I do! At least I think she's a million times sweeter than Lillian—"

"Ah, well, that's a different thing, baby," he conceded with a sigh. But Harriet did not hear him.

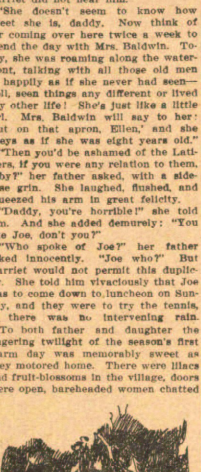
"She doesn't seem to know how sweet she is, daddy. Now think of her coming over here twice a week to spend the day with Mrs. Baldwin. Today, she was roaming along the waterfront, talking with all those old men as happily as if she never had seen—well, seen things any different or lived any other life! She's just like a little girl. Mrs. Baldwin will say to her: 'Put on that apron, Ellen,' and she obeys as if she was eight years old."

"Then you'd be ashamed of the Latimers, if you were any relation to them, baby?" her father asked, with a sidewise grin. She laughed, flushed, and squeezed his arm in great felicity.

"Daddy, you're horrible!" she told him. And she added demurely: "You like Joe, don't you?"

"Who spoke of Joe?" her father asked innocently. "Joe who?" But Harriet would not permit this duplicity. She told him vivaciously that Joe was to come down to luncheon on Sunday, and they were to try the tennis, if there was no intervening rain.

To both father and daughter the lingering twilight of the season's first warm day was memorably sweet as they motored home. There were lilacs and fruit-blossoms in the village, doors were open, bareheaded women chatted over garden gates. All the country sounds were set free again, voices and the barking of dogs, and the honk of motor horns. A hundred little boats rode the satiny waters of Manhasset bay; old Captain Latimer, sauntering home, lifted his disreputable old hat to Joe's friends from the Point.



"Of Course Gibbs Is Looking for a Studio in Town!" She Said Uncomfortably.

"I never was glad that I'm going to be rich before," Harriet said softly after awhile. "It didn't make me happier at school, and it never has seemed to count very much since. But Joe's so ambitious, that I'm glad now—for Joe. He can travel, and after awhile he can write books, as he longs to do."

Her father glanced at her. She was looking straight ahead, into the feathery green tunnel that was the road; her plain, intelligent little face was lighted with the great light of youth and love. He did not answer her. He thought of the nursery into which he had reverently stepped, nearly twenty years ago, to look at his daughter. And his heart was wrung with an exquisite emotion that was partly joy and partly pain.

* * * * * * * *

Days went by, and were weeks. It was June, and still the younger Josselyns were domiciled at "Villino dell' Orto," where all the roses were in flower now, and the lawns as green as jade. Still Gibbs was desultorily hunting for the right studio, interrupting this enterprise whenever golf kept him in Wheatley Hills for the day, or when his father planned a two or three days' trip for them all in the car.

Outwardly, the life they lived was ideal. The lovely house was at its prettiest now, and Lillian gave luncheon and dinner parties three or four times a week. She and Ellen motored to tea at the club, and brought the men home after their golf, or departed in great harmony for lunch or card parties, in the car. Ellen had some dainty new summer gowns, a rough crash with dark blue stripes, a handkerchief linen exquisitely frail and simple, a rose-cheeked French gingham in which even Lillian and her friends seemed interested.

But she was not happy. She did not want all these new luxuries and all these new friends; she wanted Gibbs, and she realized that they were daily growing further and further apart. He did not need her now; they had less and less to plan, to discuss, to decide. In their first days in America they had gone to their room to talk tirelessly, like children, to compare notes and exchange confidences. But they did this no longer. Gibbs was usually tired of talking on the brief occasions when he and his wife were alone. He talked at breakfast, talked while running into town in the car, met his old friends at noon and talked, came back to Wheatley Hills to be swept into the unending talk at the club, talked at dinner, and talked far into the night.

He would greet Ellen carelessly, and dress in silence. His life was full to the brim without her, all these lives were packed full without any particular reference to the claims of husbands and wives. Gibbs thought he was having a glorious time, he was excited, flattered, carried away by popularity. The men welcomed new blood, another rival on the links, another hand at cards, another eligible dinner guest, dancer, and raconteur. The women were all captivated by his unusual appearance, his easy French, his art, and his ambition. They found in his indifference a supreme charm. He did not play their game any more readily than his odd but nice little wife did, but while no man ever dreamed of taking the slightest liberty with domestic, serious, pretty little Mrs. Josselyn, half a dozen women at least would have been glad to be able to speak of Gibbs as a "suitor."

Lillian lazily called Ellen's attention to it: to the petticoats that always fluttered across Gibbs' path at the club, to the intimate conversations for which traps were eternally laid beneath his wife's very eyes, and Ellen was filled with a sort of sick anger and terror. Anger because she did not want to fight for what was by all rights her own, and terror because sometimes she was smitten with the thought that she had nothing with which to hold him, should he try to go.

She could not be her old self in this environment. She no longer felt like the busy little wife and mother who had so gaily climbed up and down the heights of Mont Saint Etienne, Tommy toddling beside her, Gibbs rushing to the landing to meet her, or to bid her farewell. Surely this was not the same Ellen who went into Yvonne's kitchen and mixed "cornbread Americaine" to the amusement and admiration of the sturdy Liliose? Had she, only a year or two ago, been able to call cheerfully to Gibbs through a Brittainy twilight that he must undress Tommy at once, the bath was waiting, and was it the same Gibbs who had obediently come across high grass under gnarled apple trees to present her with a warm, nude, dusty Tommy to bathe? Ah, and there were other times to remember: a night in a French hospital, and Gibbs' shining head against her arm on an immaculate counterpane, and the tiny cry that was so soon to be stilled echoing through the gas-lighted, hot room.

But at this memory the thick tears would blind Ellen's eyes. She had mourned her baby, her delicate, wistful little Rose, but she looked back at that sorrow now as something sacred, something precious, something that had bound Gibbs and herself together more strongly than joy.

She would go into the nursery at "Villino dell' Orto" and begin to busy herself about Tommy's little person. Was he going to bed? Let mother undress him. She would fall into a deep musing over the little buttons and straps.

"I can undress myself, moth'!" Tommy would protest, wriggling. She would catch the warm, hard little face to hers in a hunger of love. Perhaps the child would glance at her in surprise.

"Are you crying, mother? What for?"

"Indeed, I don't know, Tom!"

* * * * * * * *

Their first real estrangement came this summer. Not that Ellen and Gibbs, as normal young persons, had not quarreled before. There had been occasions, in the very early days, when a fancied coldness in his tone, or a letter that Ellen must write to Joe in the hour Gibbs wanted to read to her, had caused them acute wretchedness for hours, or minutes that seemed like hours. And then there had been the day he whipped Tommy, after, as Ellen put it, deliberately goading a baby of less than four years into such a state of excitement that he didn't know whether he was telling the truth or not.

But this was different. Gibbs had taken a dislike to Joe and he and Ellen could hardly mention Joe without feeling. Gibbs told Ellen impatiently that Joe was all right, he might be a decent enough fellow and all that, but that he, Gibbs, did not like to have Joe choked down his throat all the time. Josselyn, Senior, was inclined to be hospitable to Ellen's brother, to bring him home to Sunday lunch, or to keep him for dinner after the Saturday tennis. George Lathrop was often at "Villino dell' Orto," and Harriet and Joe naturally drifted together. But Lillian, Ellen divined at once, did not like Joe; Joe had absolutely nothing to contribute to Lillian's life, and Ellen suspected that Lillian, in her languid and indirect manner, had influenced Gibbs without his knowing it.

One hot evening late in June Ellen went upstairs tired and exasperated after a wasted day. She had motored to Huntington with Lillian for a luncheon and bridge party, and had been talking and eating and laughing all day. Now her skin felt dry and hot, her head ached, and she was experiencing the exhaustion of a suddenly lessened tension. She had stopped at the nursery to find Lizzie alone and sulky. Mr. Latimer had not yet brought Tommy back'm. Yes'm, it was quarter past six.

Ellen went on to her own room to find Gibbs flung across the bed in one of the heavy naps with which he sometimes recruited his forces for the evening's demands. He rolled over when she came in, and lay there blinking and staring between yawns at the ceiling.

"Time is it?" he asked presently, and when she told him he added: "D—n a seven o'clock dinner anyway! My head feels rotten!"

"You smoke too much!" Ellen suggested dispassionately.

He himself had often admitted it, and also admitted that he could not drink as steadily as the other men. But he scowled at this reminder. The truth was that late hours, rich food, hot weather, alcoholic stimulants, and the unnatural life they were leading were bad for them both, and any pretext would serve in these days for a quarrel.

"Where's Tom?" Gibbs now asked. Ellen knew that he knew, and that he had deliberately selected a question that would imply a criticism of her management.

"Joe's coming over to dinner, Gibbs, with the Lathrops. And he isn't to dress, you know, for they've been out in the boat all afternoon. So I said not to bother to get Tommy home before seven, he can have a simple dinner and pop into bed as soon as he gets here."

Gibbs was now sitting on the edge of the bed with his silver hair in a mop over his flushed face, and his head in his hands.

"I must say I don't approve of this constant upsetting of Tom's routine!" he observed.

Ellen, now at her dressing table, with the stiff lines of a silk robe falling about her, flushed in her turn.

"Last night you kept him up until quarter of eight," she answered lightly. She scored here, for Lillian had had friends for a later dinner the day before and had captured Tommy, and made him bring down his violin. The child had been reluctant to play the simple little airs he knew, and Gibbs' paternal authority had been needed, and the threat of a whipping. Ellen had been excruciatingly uncomfortable during this scene, and had presently escaped with Tommy upstairs, almost as near tears as the child was.

"You simply said that to be nasty," Gibbs remarked with some heat. "You know the child is out too late, you know that no sensible mother would allow a child of six to go off in a yacht, and yet you deliberately permit—"

"There was nothing deliberate about it, Gibbs! Tommy and I went over to see Aunt Elsie this morning, in the small car. And Joe was home, and asked to keep him. You know perfectly well—"

"I know perfectly well that any crazy thing that Joe proposes appeals to you! Anything to show me how absolutely indifferent you are to my wishes!"

"Gibbs, don't talk like that!" she said, in a changed tone, a tone more distressed than angry. Ordinarily, the faint indication of a desire to conciliate would have softened Gibbs, but he was still in the prickly discomfort of awakening after a daytime sleep, and he answered bitingly:

"Oh, don't let anything I say count! I'm not Joe, of course!" And as Ellen was silent, with hurt tears in her eyes, he added grumblingly: "If George Lathrop wants Joe for a son-in-law, just because his daughter has set her heart on him, and if you want to see your brother every day, and three times a day—well and good! All I say is: I'm done!"

"It's Lillian that has set you against Joe!" Ellen burst out angrily. "I know the way she talks about him, in that pleasant, amused voice of hers! She's made you think he was countryfied and stupid and slow just because he's never fallen in love woth her—"

"That's enough!" Gibbs said, in a stern voice. Ellen, even as she spoke, had had a feeling that it was more than enough. She stopped speaking, ashamed and sulky, and went on with her hairdressing. There was a silence in the room for perhaps two minutes, and then Gibbs added with cold disapproval: "After all Lillian has done for you—treating you absolutely like a sister—!"

Then again there was a pause, broken this time by the entry of Joe and Tommy from the nursery through the bathroom.

Tommy had had supper on the yacht, it appeared. He was theoretically anxious to be allowed to stay up, actually his tired, sunburned little lids were falling over his eyes. Ellen welcomed her little brother almost as warmly as she did her son. She put her arms about Joe's neck, and the silk sleeves slipped up to the shoulders. She knew Gibbs particularly resented Joe's manner of coming and going informally to and from their rooms, but she could not be unkind to Joe to please Gibbs.

"If you don't mind, Joe—Ellen and I are dressing," Gibbs punished her by saying icily. Joe, instantly apologetic, withdrew. The Josselyns did not speak to each other for the remainder of the period of dressing, nor, except when it was unavoidable, for several days.

The rift between the younger Josselyns has been opened and is widening. Will it come to an open break?

Had Odd Affliction

In "Ten Years' Experience in a Sanitorium," published by the Medical Research Council, Sir St. Clair Thompson describes a case believed unique. An accountant was taken to the hospital suffering from an affliction of the throat believed to be tuberculosis. He was very husky, and was gradually losing his voice. Then the doctors noticed small black bodies about the size of millet seeds. Under the microscope they showed a fungus called aspergillus fumigatus, and soon cured the patient. This disease is chiefly met with in birds. It has been found in ducks, geese, fowls, pigeons, pheasants, bustards, swans, flamingoes, jays, and golden plover. Sir St. Clair Thompson declares that he had never known a case recognized and described in the larynx before.

How the Motor Industry Set the Pace for Highway Building

The "horseless carriage" of yesterday is now being produced as the modern automobile at the rate of 4,000,000 a year. The total number of motor vehicles registered in the United States is over 16,000,000.

And automobiles built today are more than ever capable of economically serving both business and recreation needs.

But there is an obstacle standing in the way of their maximum service to owners.

For while the automobile industry made paved highways an economic necessity, the mileage of such roads is today years behind the requirements of modern traffic.

Happily motorists everywhere are boosting for more and wider paved highways.

And extensive experience has taught them that Concrete Highways are one of the best all-around investments they can make—an investment that pays big dividends.

As one of our 16,000,000 motorists you know better than anyone else the need for more and wider Concrete Roads. Start now to help your local officials provide them.

Coney Island

By Our New York Correspondent

Coney Island gets its name from the initials of "City of New York" I have always thought it would be a park with vast stretches of green lawns; beautiful foliage, etc. on a perfectly round island. But no! It is nothing of the kind. Probably a large part of its popularity lies in the fact that it affords the best swimming within reach of a 5 cent subway ride.

Feeling that it was not a place to go alone for a good time, I invited the neighborhood shoemaker son (aged 6). The little fellow has just recently come to this country and speaks no English, but we got along beautifully with the language of smiles and gestures.

Arrived at Coney Island, we found it to be much like any one street town. Serf Avenue, a narrow street parallels the beach a block distant, is lined for a mile with regular county fair concessions. The buildings are mostly dingy, two story affairs and the crowd on the sidewalks mills aimlessly about

There are two amusement parks, both fronting on Serf Avenue, and both with about the same attractions you would see anywhere, except that the high things are higher, the round things rounder, and the deep things deeper. In the broad light of day mystic charm I had expected—lights, laughter, light breezes, fluttering flags, myriads of reflected lights, and alway the smell of hot dogs.

Before dark we wanted to see the Boardwalk, and as I think it over now, that was the most interesting part of Coney. The walk itself is about 100 feet wide and extends along the water's edge for two miles. It was black with people of all kinds and classes—some came in limousines and some came on foot, but all were there to get a breath of pure salt air. As to ages, it was the most remarkable crowd I have ever seen—most groups being family affairs from grandparents down to wee babies.

Only a few were brave enough to swim, which was perhaps because of the sharp wind. But I should never care to swim there for anyone on the sands is right in the spotlight for everyone on the walk—just like a box seat to the ocean, so to speak.

At one end of the walk is an exclusive residential park where they have a watchman to keep out those who have no business there. In extreme contrast to this aristocracy, at the other end of the boardwalk is the municipal bathing pavilion, three stories high, where thousands can secure accomodations for fifteen cents. They tell me this was put up by the city to bring to time the private bathhouses who charge $1.00 to $1.50 for a room on Sundays and 75 cents during the week.

Up to last year when the boardwalk was opened, the only chance to see the water at Coney Island was from the Municipal Pier, where one had to "keep moving". But the concessionaires have had a great time turning their business about so that they could front the walk. And the new structures are fireproof and much more modern than the old main thoroughfare.

A new Childs restaurant is probably the finest piece of architecture, with immense plate glass windows that reflect the sky and sea. The exterior walls are of concrete the color of clean, cold mist; and there are decorative panels in colored tile depicting deep sea life. The interior is old English in decoration and furnishings, and it is the first really popular cafeteria I have seen in New York. Somehow they just cant seem to get the idea of lining up to get waited on.

We discove;ed a delightful open air restaurant on the boardwalk where we ate more hot dogs and watched the ships passing out of the harbor on their way to foreign ports. The same restaurant continues through a series of tea gardens and small rooms of different period to a large open air restaurant fronting on Serf Avenue, where right among the tables they have an immense Merry Go Round. I'll bet you would go a long way before you'd find another eating place like that.

One well patronized thing of fortune was a new-fangled ferris wheel. It stands about 100 feet high, with an inner and outer circumference about 12 feet apart. The cages for passengers are swung on a curved track between these two rims, and as the wheel turns upward, gravity sways the cage into the inner circles, and as they come down, they swing out again with much jerking, and screaming. They all sounded scared to death, and yet those who could get on stayed and stayed, much to the digust of those waiting in line for tickets.

Towards dusk we entered Luna Park (one of the two amusement places) where Young Italy had the time of his life. I tried hard to be very dignified, but what can you do with a tugging, pointing child dragging one onto every conceivable thing for a ride. The worst ups and downs of all were on the Mile Sky Chases—on the idea of a roller coaster, with variations to fit the requirements of the younger generation. One of the best patronized amusements was a slide from a height about equal to a third story window. There were terrifying bumps and bends in it, but it was popular with the children. Best of all was a place called The Pit, where there was every kind of electrical stunt, and where they imitate eyery motion of a sea sick ship. There were steps that fold up when you stand on them, steps that dont fold up when you think they will. a floor that looks innocent enough but is made of ball bearings which roll under your feet, mirrors that get you all mixed up as to who you are or where you want to go, a revolving floor that is much to much, and a dozen other things.

By the time we were all tired out it was after dark, and the fairy touch of night and lights had to be left for the home trip. We came back by bus, through the residential section of Brooklyn and across Williamsburg Bridge, where the traffic was dreadful. From two cables about a foot thick, there is suspended a heavy steel bridge, with two levels of subway and streetcar tracks between the cables and two roadways extending outside the cables, with three lines of traffic in each direction. I couldn't help feeling more comfortable when we got back onto land; and a little added touch was given to our outing when a traffic cop sent the bus up a side street, through the very heart of the congested "Lower East Side". The people just swarmed along the sidewalks, and instead of autos being parked in the streets, there were baby carriages parked along the sidewalk, iust about as thick as you line them up. In some places pedestrians had to go in a single file because of the perambulators. Through lighted upper windows we caught glimpses of whole families working on bright bits of cloth. And right then and there I promised myself that sometime soon I would go back to those crowded streets and find out more about that strange corner of the city.

In no time at all we were home, sleepy Little Italy was in bed across the street, and I am wondering how I can ever tell you about the sights, the lights, the smells the sounds and the real carnival spirit that is Coney Island.

Crow Held To Blame For Poor Seed Corn

Generally uncertain condition of Michigan's supply of seed corn for next spring's planting, and the possibility that there will be many "spotted" stands in 1925, forecasts a bad year for our old friend the crow, according to Prof. J. F. Cox head of the crops department at M. A. C.

In years when the germination of seed corn is poor, the crow comes in for much more than his share of blame for the missing hills. It is true that he does eat some seed corn and pull some seedlings, Professor Cox admits, but many farmers who fail to select their stocks of seed corn in the fall and as a result get poor stands use the convenient crow as their alibi, refusing to admit that the seed may have been at fault.

"The crows are moving south now", says Cox, "and when you hear the next one say 'cawrn, cawrn just remember that he is talking about seed corn and that he is trying to remind you that now is the time to select your seed corn in the field and hang it under cover to dry before winter sets in.

"If your field is not ripe enough buy the most mature and best yielding field in your neighborhood The corn crop is late in Michigan and throughout the corn belt, and good seed corn will undoubtedly be scarce next year. 'Save your own seed', is the best way of meeting this condition. Don't be one of those who 'blame the crows' for their own short-comings next spring."

A Request to Teachers of Public Schools

Six hundred Methodist ministers representing 150,000 Methodists in the Michigan and Detroit conferences, have united in a petition to the teachers and officials throughout the state asking that the latter use their influence to discourage high school dances among the students and to substitute something more reserved for a pastime. It seems that at a number of J-Hops which have been held certain developments have not been altogether pleasing Improprieties are reported. We note that in Hanover the school board prohibited any more dancing at class festivities. Some other boards have taken a similar stand. While the church does not presume to dictate to young people, it feels a responsibility if the participants go wrong which happens at times.

Beggars Vs. Sharks

Of late years it is noticeable that the Hillsdale Fair Grounds are visited each fall by two or three stereotyped beggars whose pitiful appearance is sure to coax many coins from the pockets of bystanders, and these men invariably get the good-will of a large number of patrons. As far as this custom is concerned we presume it is as old as the hills—in fact there were beggars in Bible times, and they usually received their reward.

These blind men and others who frequent the fair grounds are but prototypes of thousands who live on the credulency of the American public. Now we know nothing about these men mentioned because we have never taken pains to investigate and probably no one else in the county has, so for the present, they are safe enough.

Apropas of beggars we note a certain paper published in Michigan, which is famous for its truthfulness, came forth recently with a dissertation on begging which is worthy of republishing. Not long since a detective in a near-by city walked along a crowded street in the edge of the evening and noticed a man who was ill-clad against the raw wind of a chilly night, stretching forth eager hands and trying to sell a few highly colored pencils to pedestrians. It was really a sympathetic streak which made the officer stop for the beggar looked actually hungry For a few minutes the detective watched the proceedings and was surprised that coins of all denominations fairly poured into the tin cup and most of the donors refused to take a pencil at all though a few did. The officer edged up closer and in twenty minutes counted up nine dollars. This opened his eyes. Nine dollars in twenty minutes! This seemed like a big sum to the man so he arrested the mendicant.

What do you mean, you're going to arrest me? the beggar shouted when he felt the touch of the law on his shoulder.

"Come on you've picked up enough for one night," the detective told him.

The beggar told the story of his existence. His name he said, was Frederick Hammill. He was born in the South, lost his legs in infancy. and took up begging as a profession. Once he had amassed more than $20,000 which he begged through the South and middle west and this sum he invested in a North Dakota Ranch. A season or two of bad crops had wiped out his money and he had gone back to begging. At present he owned a farm in Massachusetts, and the sedan which cost him $3,000, was all he had besides deposits in five different banks!

He had traveled from town to town in his sedan, begging on first one street, then another, and if he was arrested he would offer to leave if the magistrate would let him go. And the magistrate would usually let him go for after all, he had offered his pencils for sale, and of course was not to blame if the public did not take them.

W. B. WILSON URGING ELECTION OF DAVIS

Former Labor Secretary Calls Democratic Candidate Friend of Farmers and Workers.

Washington, D. C.—William B. Wilson, first Secretary of Labor, who served from 1913 until 1921, is urging the workers of the country to support John W. Davis and Charles W. Bryan, Democratic presidential and vice-presidential candidates, because of their long record of friendliness and helpfulness to labor. The following formal statement of Mr. Wilson's reasons for the working people's preference for Mr. Davis was issued by the former Secretary in Washington several days ago:

Defunct Bank's Head Made Reserve Agent

J. R. Mitchell, Former President Trust Company Which Failed, Gets Important Federal Post.

Washington, D. C.—John R. Mitchell, of St. Paul, recently appointed by President Coolidge to be Federal Reserve Agent and chairman of the board of directors of the Ninth District Federal Reserve Bank, Minneapolis, is remembered by many hundreds of farmers in the Northwest as president of the Capital Trust and Savings Bank, which failed on May 4 last.

The failure of this bank caused heavy losses to its depositors and stockholders. At the time its doors were ordered closed it had deposits of $5,000,000. Its capital was $500,000. The collapse of the Capital Trust concern started "runs" on other banks in St. Paul and for a time threatened the stability of the Capital National Bank, of which also Mitchell was president.

The Capital Trust & Savings Bank had operated for many years with a large portion of its funds invested in first mortgages on agricultural lands. Because of the heavy decline in the value of these lands, following the ruinous decrease in the prices of agricultural products during the Harding-Coolidge administration, it was impossible for the bank to make collections of either principal or interest from many of its borrowers.

President Mitchell himself attributed the bank's failure to this extensive holding of "frozen" assets.

Opposed Present Reserve System

Mitchell's appointment by President Coolidge is by many regarded as a reward for his efforts to organize farmers for the Republican ticket. In 1913, when the bill to create the Federal Reserve System was pending, the Wilson administration fought for the plan to establish twelve regional banks instead of a central bank. Big financial interests in New York urged the central bank and relentlessly opposed the regional system. They were accused of attempting to get one bank in New York because they could more easily control one than twelve.

Mitchell was active in the fight for the central bank and against the regional bank, notwithstanding that the bankers of Minnesota had indorsed the regional plan. He was in Washington frequently during the autumn of 1913 when the opposition to the bill was strongest. A month after President Harding took office Mitchell was appointed a member of the Federal Reserve Board for a term of ten years. He resigned on May 12, 1923. Recently he was promoting the McNary-Haugen bill at a time when President Coolidge was reported as opposing it.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

The Bible In Our Schools

(Written by Cora Eggleston)

Here is a hard test that was made to see how children would cheat in examinations. The children are given double sheets of paper, the under sheet being secretly coated with wax that shows any change or correction. A set of questions and answers is written on the blackboard and a map hung over the answers. The teacher, in this test, leaves the room while the children are writing down their answers to the questions. After a certain length of time the map, apparantly by accident, falls from the blackboard and discloses the answers. The children, with no teacher in the room, have the opportunity to correct any errors they have made in their answers; they are given plenty of time to yield to this temptation. In some of these tests 100 percent of the children yielded.

These tests were made in an attempt to discover, scientifically whether or not goodness, honesty, trustworthiness, and a decent outlook on life and a love of God and man could be taught in school; whether they could be taught, definitely and decisively, like other subjects. And whether they could be learned like lessons. And this is what has been discovered: These subjects can be taught in school, and they can be so thoroughly learned that they produce definite results in children.

After the tests which I have described had been made and the scores carefully registered, the various groups of children were given special instructions.

One set was given ethical instruction by highly trained teachers who knew the psychology of youth and were skilled in pedagogy. There was no religion in this ethical instruction; it only showed children what they ought to do. Other sets were given religious instruction, with prayer, Bible reading, singing, and devotion.

The children who had been given ethical instruction improved over 60 percent. New tests—some harder than those I have described—were given to them. They had improved marvelously; their characters had strengthened like muscles hardened with exercise.

But there was a triumph in the test of the boys and girls who received religious instruction, under trained teachers. They improved 85 percent in the honesty tests. Their souls as well their brains had been put to work in their solving of life's problems. Their characters had become like rock.

In one city there was a group of children in which not one brought back the dime under the purchase tests. After they had been given scientific religious instruction, a some what similar test was imposed on them. Every boy but one brought back the dime; and this one brought it back the next day, after he had slept over the problem of whether he should pocket it or return it.

BOY SCOUTS STAND HIGHEST

The highest score was 82.3 percent. It was made by a group of Boy Scouts which had been organized two years. These high idealed little fellows came within 17.7 percent of being 100 percent trustworthy and honest. Some new fellows came into the troop during the later months that the tests were under way. Of course, none of the boys in the troop knew the purpose of the various experiments often, of course, they were not aware that they were being tested. The old-timers in the troop ranked up 100 percent! One young fellow said, "I don't know what these examinations are, but they must be trying to test our nerve." He scored 100.

The second highest score was 80.4 percent. It was made by a group of Boy Scouts which had been organized six months.

The third highest score was 78.2, made by a group of boys in a highly efficient private school who came from high class homes.

Far down in the list, number nine, came the group that interests you and me—that interests every father and mother in this land—a group of boys in a typical American public school. Most of us have our children in the public schools. We can not all have our sons in the Boy Scouts, or in private schools. These priviledges are luxuries to some of us. Tne score of this public school group was only 56.8.

Are our public schools in America being so conducted that honesty and the development of character in our children are luxuries outside of the range of public schools? Is a belief in God, such as the Boy Scouts have, and the Girl Scouts, and such as is taught in most private schools in America too rare a priviledge for American public school children?

I think I can safely say that we who received religious instruction in Sunday school never have forgotten those lessons. Neither would we wish to part with them I think figures today show us that children have an average of 12 hours during the year of Sunday school teaching. Would not a little from the public schools add something to this.

We need it in the training of America. Our most desperate criminals today are under 22 years of age. We do need the Bible in our public school, we need it badly.

Don't fail to register Saturday.

This Rabbit a Nuisance

The "snowshoe" rabbit is becoming unpopular among foreigners of northern Minnesota. This picturesquely named animal is very abundant this year, and is eating the tips and needles off young pine trees planted on denuded forest land. It also eats the foliage off young spruce, aspen and maples, and if the trees are more than three feet high, gnaws away their bark near the base. In one plantation 79 per cent of the trees were damaged, 43 per cent probably fatally.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

British Labor Government Defeated—Chang Likely to Win in China.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

RAMSAY MACDONALD and his Labor cabinet went down to defeat in the British house of commons Wednesday night and the prime minister decided to have parliament dissolved and appeal to the country immediately in a general election. The crisis, which had been expected, came not over the Russian treaties but over the government's recent decision to drop the prosecution of John R. Campbell, editor of a Communist paper, who was charged with inciting sedition. MacDonald and Colonial Minister Thomas defended the action of Attorney General Sir Patrick Hastings in that case when it was attacked in the house. The Conservatives moved a vote of censure and the Liberals, who had been supporting the Labor government, proposed an amendment calling for an inquiry. The prime minister declared the government could not accept the amendment, which he characterized as a "mean and crooked party maneuver." However, it was carried by the decisive vote of 364 to 198, the combined strength of the Conservatives and the Liberals.

The contention of the opposition is that in the Campbell case the government brought the administration of the law into contempt by allowing party politics to govern. The attorney general told the commons that the Campbell article in question had been brought to his attention by the director of public prosecutions. He decided that it was prima facie seditious and he directed prosecution. Some time later a member of the Labor party told him that he had got the wrong man, Campbell having an excellent army record, being seriously wounded and decorated for bravery. He investigated and decided that on the grounds of public policy the prosecution was unwise and he dropped it.

King George hastened from Balmoral castle, Scotland, to London because of the crisis and Mr. MacDonald saw him on Thursday. It was understood the king, the big business leaders and many political chiefs were opposed to an election now, but the king yielded to MacDonald's demand.

Parliament was prorogued Thursday night, and October 29 was decided upon as the day for the general election. The Labor party really hopes to obtain a majority in the new parliament and thinks this a good time for the fight.

Once more the British Labor party has refused to permit the Communist party to affiliate with it. This action was taken at the Labor national conference in London, the vote being overwhelmingly against the Communists. It was declared the two parties have nothing in common, Communism being a product of czarism and war betrayal, in the words of Mr. MacDonald.

DEVELOPMENTS of the week in the war in China, coupled with private advices from Peking, lead to the prediction that Chang Tso-lin, the Manchurian chieftain, will ultimately be victorious in his conflict with Gen. Wu Pei-fu and the government forces. Last Wednesday Chang's son led an army in a fierce attack on the Chihli troops that were intrenched on the north side of the great wall near Shanhaikwan and, after a bloody battle, he drove them through the main gate of the wall at Chiumen and followed them into the province of Chihli. Meanwhile land, air and sea forces were taking part in a big attack on Shanwaikan, but the Peking report said it was repulsed.

On the Shanghai front the Kiangsu and Fukien forces, which are operating for the Peking government, gained some important advantages over the Chekiang troops defending the city, the most notable being the capture of the town of Sunkiang, called the southern gateway to Shanghai.

General Chang is well supplied with troops, equipment and money. He has about five hundred airplanes and is constantly receiving munitions, which come by sea from Europe—from Italy, it is said. He has at least the moral support of Japan. Information from China says that Chang plans to restore the boy emperor to the throne and to re-establish the old mandarin regime.

MANEUVERS of the soviet Russians are complicating the situation in China. They have just signed an agreement with Chang whereby the management and control of the Chinese Eastern railroad has been turned over to them, putting Russia quite completely in command of the Far Eastern situation and, according to Karakhan, soviet ambassador to Peking, dealing America and the western powers a crushing blow. The former directors of the railroad have been arrested and probably will be executed. On announcement of the agreement with Chang the soviet embassy in Peking and soviet consulates general in Shanghai and elsewhere were opened and the red flag raised.

PREMIER ZAGHLOUL PASHA'S visit to London to induce Great Britain to abandon its control over Egypt and the Sudan and its protection of the Suez canal resulted in complete failure. The British government flatly rejected Zaghloul's demands. Its attitude is said to be due partly to the stand taken by Australia. Prime Minister Bruce of that dominion cabled to the government denying its right to decide on the evacuation of Egypt without the consent of the Pacific dominions. He said surrender of the control of Egypt to incompetent natives would set Australia back a hundred years and would compel her to reconsider the whole question of adherence to the empire.

ALL arrangements were made for placing the German reconstruction loan on the market this week. The American allotment will be underwritten by a syndicate headed by J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the First National bank and the National City bank of New York, and will be $110,000,000, or $10,000,000 more than had been expected. In fixing the final details the British financiers won a big victory over the Americans, for it was decided that everywhere except in America participation in the loan should be reckoned in pounds sterling instead of in dollars. This, it is considered, will have a great influence in maintaining England's financial prestige.

PACIFISTS from all parts of the world gathered in Berlin last week for the purpose of outlining a constitution for a super-league of nations. They held a big demonstration in Potsdam which so enraged the Nationalistic societies that thousands of their members assembled there the same day and attempted to put the pacifists to rout. Professor Basch of the French Sorbonne especially aroused the wrath of the Nationalists by his plea for Franco-German amity and the cavalry was called out to disperse the mobs that attacked him. Next day, however, several well-known German generals participated in the proceedings and warmly seconded General Verraux when he declared: "A general strike of everybody, generals included, must be declared if there is another war."

The French government has approved of Germany's admission to the League of Nations, conceding that she should be recognized as a great power and granted a permanent seat in the council. But it is insisted that Germany must assume all responsibilities shared by the other powers, which means she must sign the security and arbitration protocol without reservations and agree to the execution of all treaties.

Following up the presentation of a balanced budget, Premier Herriot's cabinet has announced that it will not be possible to include further expenses of the devastated regions in the budget. Hereafter the war-ravaged parts of France must depend on public loans for their reconstruction work.

THERE has just been filed in the Federal court in New Orleans a suit that will be watched with considerable interest. Its purpose is to oust from office Walter L. Cohen, the negro controller of customs of that port, on the ground that he is of African blood and descent and therefore not a citizen of the United States, and that he is inherently incapable of becoming such. The petition attacks the validity of the Fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, setting forth that it was not legally adopted, not having been proposed by two-thirds of each house of congress nor ratified by three-fourths of the states. It is alleged that at that time eleven states were unconstitutionally deprived of their equal suffrage in the senate, that six states were by coercion forced to ratify the amendment, and that congress "did without power or authority unlawfully declare said amendment to the Constitution adopted and a part of the Constitution."

Of course, if the action were successful, it would result in the disenfranchisement of every negro in the United States. But neither Cohen nor the United States attorney down there seems to take the matter seriously.

AS THE Presidential campaign draws toward the close the fight is growing decidedly warm. Of course the managers of each of the three major candidacies claim they can see a clear victory for their ticket. And this is true, even of the LaFollette managers, who assert that Davis no longer has a chance and that the race is between Coolidge and the Wisconsin senator. Both LaFollette and the Democrats scoff at the theory of the Republicans that the Democrats are helping the third party in various states for the purpose of throwing the election into congress, where, it is figured out, the result would be the seating of Charles Bryan in the Presidential chair. But the G. O. P. leaders stick to their story and are devoting their main efforts to confining LaFollette's victories to Wisconsin and perhaps Minnesota.

Senator Brookhart's action in bolting the Coolidge-Dawes ticket and the story that Judge Kenyon was about to resign from the bench and take the stump for LaFollette have had a result that the Republicans believe may win the state of Iowa for Coolidge, if there had been any doubt of it. Judge Kenyon, who has a very large following in Iowa, sent word to General Dawes that the story was entirely untrue and that he was supporting the Republican national ticket.

Senator Borah of Idaho, who has not always been in accord with the administration, in opening his campaign declared he was running for re-election as a regular Republican and would take the stump for Coolidge, who, he said, "is the only President who has had the courage to combat the growing tendency toward bureaucracy and extravagance and, therefore, is one of the greatest men in the political history of the United States."

Mr. Davis, campaigning last week in the East, delivered many shrewd thrusts at the administration. In Buffalo, replying to a recent speech by Secretary of State Hughes, he especially attacked President Coolidge's foreign policy, saying:

"The truth is that since March 4, 1921, the control of America's foreign policy has rested neither with Presidents Harding nor Coolidge, nor with the secretary of state, but with a minority in the senate, to whose slightest nod both President and secretary have bowed without protest or complaint. Indeed, Mr. Hughes himself confesses that it has been necessary to conduct the affairs of his department in extra-legal fashion, lest they might be 'tied up in controversy.'"

As the week closed Mr. Davis was in Indiana beginning a two weeks' tour of the Middle West.

WHILE the Zeppelin ZR-3 was being prepared in Germany for the trip across the Atlantic, our home-built dirigible, the Shenandoah, started on a great tour of the United States which, up to the time of writing, has been eminently satisfactory. From Lakehurst, N. J., she sailed southwest and west to Fort Worth, Tex., for her first stop, and thence went across the mountains to San Diego. Her course from there is up the Pacific coast to Camp Lewis at Lakeview, Wash. The ship is actually performing better than the schedule calls for, in both speed and fuel consumption.

Queensland Sending Sapphires to London

London. — Large quantities of Queensland sapphires from the mines of Queensland are being offered on the London market. The stones, which are extraordinarily large and clear, are the first to be mined in the new district under government operation, and are being sold by the government representatives in London, also an innovation.

The sapphire marketing by the government is the first attempt of the Australian provincial governments to carry out the scheme for wider government operation of resources and marketing of products.

Before the war the sapphire industry in Australia was largely in the hands of Germans, whose representatives bought on the fields and sent their purchases direct to factories in Germany.

As a result of post-war legislation which keeps foreigners, especially Germans, out of Australia, the Queensland government took control of the industry.

Legislation has been enacted which prevents independent miners from selling their products to any except official government buyers, who assess the parcels and pay the miners fixed prices according to the established methods of grading. The experiment has proved successful, for the miners have an immediate market and are given a far higher price than formerly. Sapphires were first discovered in Queensland in 1876.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Harbor Springs—Ray McDonald, 7 years old, was struck by an automobile driven by Fred Gasco and killed. Gasco is under arrest. It is charged that he did not stop his automobile after striking the child.

Grand Rpaids—The "Square Deal League," the avowed purpose of which is to fight the proposed income tax amendment, advocated by the Michigan State Grange and other farm organizations, has been organized here.

Detroit—A. N. Heyboer, secretary, and O. C. Call, office manager of the Belle Isle Creamery company, were held up by two men, who drove up beside the automobile in which they were leaving for a bank and robbed of $17,000.

Lansing—Mace Hanson, 15-year-old Lansing high school boy, died of injuries suffered when he was shot by a friend, Roland A. Foote, as the two boys were hunting, about four miles north of the city. Foote, in a statement to the police, said the gun went off as he was handing it to Hanson.

Detroit—An initial outlay of $600,000, with an additional $160,000 in the next decade, will have to be made by Ferndale, Clawson, Royal Oak, Berkley and Pleasant Ridge, if they want Detroit to serve them with water, it was explained at a conference held in the Detroit water board offices.

Grand Rapids—An annonymous donor who already has made three $10,000 gifts toward the erection of the boys' dormitory at Calven college, has presented another similar donation. The building is just being completed at a cost of $150,000. This donor already has presented several thousand dollars in addition toward dormitory expense.

Saginaw—Surveys to establish the route or the pipe line from the Deindorfer woods to the Clare district to bring Saginaw's new water supply to the city will be started soon, it has been announced. The distance from the woods to the test plant in Clare is 42 miles but it is probable that the collecting reservoir will be built much nearer Saginaw.

Lansing—To lighten the burden on the Southern Michigan Telephone Co., which is in the hands of a receiver, the state administrative board has granted it permission to pay about $72,000 in back taxes in installments. Lansing—The increase in interstate freight rates on beet sugar has been postponed until Nov. 8, the Interstate Commerce Commission has advised the Michigan Public Utilities Commission. An order to increase the Michigan rate was issued by the federal commission after an investigation. Protests on the part of Michigan manufactureres resulted in the postponement which will permit them to handle this year's crop at the lower rate.

Lansing—A hearing on the contention of Upper Peninsula copper interests that intra-state rates are excessive and unjust has been held befor the State Public Utilities Commission. According to the petition for an investigation and revision of tariffs on all the Michigan railroads carrying copper, the Upper Peninsula industry is severely handicapped in attempting to meet outside competition in the markets of its own state. It is claimed that copper can be shipped from Chile to Detroit cheaper than from points in the Upper Peninsula.

Before election day, senators governors and presidents-to-be make promises to the voters and after election these men forget their promises. One reason why LaFollette defeats his opponents time after time in Wisconsin is because he always does or attempts to do whatever he has promised the voters in his campaign speeches previous to election day.

Just after we had closed the news last week, some one informed us that Samuel D. Finch was manipulating a new auto, and sure enough on Saturday last we saw Sammy running around the country with a young lady who bore a striking resemblance to Neva B Rutan of the Aldrich precinct and undoubtedly the lady in queston was the said Miss Rutan for we never saw Sammy transporting anybody else except Vera Tuttle in days gone by but enough of this prattle because it is beginning to sound like the Washington double play "Peckinpaugh to Harris to Judge."

Some people's lives are just one big mistake after another and when it comes to writing news items it seems that we are gradually blooming into the unreliable position now occupied by the Los Angles Times for last week we explained that H. L. McGregor and family had moved in with Mrs. Laney Walworth and now this week, we find it necessary to apologize again. We think it was some lady around town who told us that Henry was living with his mother in law and if we are not mistaken this lady said that Mrs. Walworth was furnishing the tables and table cloths while Mrs. McGregor furnished the dishes and part of the eatables and this lady told us just how everything was being managed and now it isn't so at all. Which leads us to the conclusion that a fellow musn't swallow everything that the women folks say.

On Tuesday night the first accident of the kind occurred at the new Belle Isle bridge in Detroit when two men probably under the influence of liquor, attempted to drive a Ford coupe across the viaduct. One of the men had just bought the machine and chose the bridge as a place to learn to drive The coupe was suddenly seen to swerve while going at ten miles an hour, and the impact snapped the cast iron railing while the Coupe plunged into the river. Michigan The Home of the Potato

Michigan vegetable products are acknowledged throughout the country as of the best especially certain things which the farmers of the state specialize in, notably beans and potatoes. If you should happen to dine in Chicago they would serve you with Michigan potatoes. There is something in the Climate of the peninsula state which puts a superb flavor into her fruits and vegetables Up to date the largest spud we have ever seen was shown by Abe Smith who resides west of town. On a gravelly loam he raised a Petoskey Russet which weighs 4 pounds, is quite regular in shape, measures 23 inches in diameter one way and 15 inches in smallest diameter and 9½ inches in length. He was in town on Tuesday exhibiting this mammoth of the vegetable kingdom. Who can beat it?

Main feature of the evening was the installation of the Epworth League officers, which service was very beautifully exemplified by Rev. Hutton and each Leaguer carrying a lighted candle Officers were installed as follows: President, Lorita Wertz; secretary, Ivan Shults; 1st vice, Paul Wells; 2nd vice, Margaret Meeks 3rd vice, Ione Young; 4th vice, Ethel Brewer; treasurer, Gordon Walworth.

AN EXPLANATION

There has been some comment in regard to the Catholic advertisements pertaining to the Parochial Amendment which are now running in the columns of this paper, We wish to say we assume no responsibility whatever for the statements or misstatements in these ads, as they are taken and paid for according to our regular advertising rate, and we could not escape printing them if we wished, as the law says that any advertising medium that is for hire must publish all legitimate ads submitted. If the Parochial Amendment friends want to publish their advertising they have the priviledge but under no circumstance will we publish Klan propaganda or any other propaganda without receiving our advertising rate' Some kicks have been made that we discredited the Klan which is a lie right off the bat. We neither favor nor discredit the Klan. However as the kicking is mostly by people who are not good enough citizens to take our paper we don't mind. Personally we want to see the Parochial Amendment adopted for the protection of the public school. That's all' We thank you.

Michigan Happenings

A coroner's jury at Grand Rapids decided that careless and fast driving on the part of Ralph Dougherty, 17 years old, a Muskegon high school student, caused the accident, Oct. 6, which resulted in the death of Clarence Field, of Muskegon. The Field automobile was upset when the car driven by Dougherty and containing three members of prominent Muskegon families, tried to pass it while enroute to a football game. Prosecutor Fred T. Miles intimated Dougherty would be charged with involuntary manslaughter.

The state and federal governments have paid $69,122 to the cattle owners in indemnities and for salvage.

Stephen Madja, escaped double lifer from Marquette prison, was captured at Bay City. Instead of an expected battle, Madja calmly submitted to arrest. Authorities claim that Madja has confessed to the murder of Henry Nellett, Merritt township farmer last month.

The most lenient landlord in the state was revealed when the Lansing Board of Education received a bill for one dollar from the State Conservation Department for rental of an entire city block, now occupied by the Central High school and library. The property belongs to the state, but has been leased to the city for 999 years for $1 a year. The board decided to pay the rent.

Pontiac juvenile officers took into custody Raymond Bell, 11-year-old son of Walter Bell, of Pontiac, who is said to have admitted that he threw the stone that fractured the skull and caused the death of Andrew Garner, living just west of Pontiac. Young Bell said the older boy took his bicycle away from him and he picked up a stone and threw it at him.

Establishment of a covered city market, by joint effort of city and county, has been agreed upon by the board of supervisors, who accepted a proposal to buy 230,000 square feet of land on Mill street, two blocks from the business center of Pontiac, and erect market sheds upon it. NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

ZR-3, Our Big German-Built Zeppelin, Breaks Record on Trip Across Ocean.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

ZR-3, the giant Zeppelin built by Germany for the United States as war reparations, successfully made the flight from Friedrichshafen, Germany, to Lakehurst, N. J., last week in 81 hours, 17 minutes. The distance over land and sea covered by the huge glittering airship was 5,066 miles, and she broke all flight endurance and long distance non-stop speed records. The average speed for the entire trip was 62.35 miles an hour. She crossed the Atlantic at about twice the speed of the fastest ocean liner.

Dr. Hugo Eckener, president of the Zeppelin company, commanded the dirigible on the trip and the crew was German. Three American naval officers and one army officer were aboard as observers. As soon as the landing was made at Lakehurst, Doctor Eckener lowered the German colors, and the airship became the property of the United States.

Not a single mishap marked the epochal flight from Europe to America, but head winds and fogs caused the navigator to change his course when approaching our shores and instead of coming by the more southern route the Zeppelin headed toward the northwest and then came down the coast of Nova Scotia and New England. Reaching New York about 8 o'clock Wednesday morning, she maneuvered over the metropolis in a great crescent, to the admiration of millions of watchers. Congratulations from President Coolidge greeted the commander of the ship as he stepped from the gondola at Lakehurst.

Of the 126 dirigibles built by the Zeppelin company, the ZR-3 is the best, according to Doctor Eckener. Over in Germany, pride in the mechanical achievement is mixed with chagrin because America gets the ship, and because, according to the terms of the Versailles treaty, Germany can build no more big dirigibles that would be capable of being transformed into war craft. The French are urging that the Zeppelin factory be dismantled at once, and already many expert employees of the company have been sent to America, Spain and Sweden, where arrangements have been made to continue the manufacture of ships of this type.

Shenandoah, which is still the "pride of the navy," having arrived safely at San Diego, Cal., on her long continental trip, was held there for days by reports of stormy weather along the Pacific coast further north. Sixty-mile gales were blowing on the Oregon and Washington seaboard and Commander Lansdowne, being in no especial hurry to reach Camp Lewis, kept the dirigible anchored to her mooring mast.

SHANGHAI has been abandoned by the commanders of the Chekiang forces that were defending the city against Kiangsu armies, and at this writing the latter are within a few miles of the city with practically nothing to keep them from occupying it. The Chekiang generals, who are accused of being bought off, fled to Japan and their troops immediately became utterly demoralized, ceased fighting and sold their equipment. Several officers who did not run away tried to reorganize them, but the foreign authorities there attempted to stop this plan in order to prevent further warfare in the district. They felt they would have their hands full in protecting the 20,000 foreigners who live in the international settlement. They have mobilized the entire foreign defense force and the streets in their part of the city are defended by barbed wire barricades, sand bags and machine guns.

Little Hsu, a notorious Anfu leader, is chief of the crowd still resisting the Kiangsu forces, and he has been reinforced by two battalions of Hupeh troops which had been aiding the attackers but revolted and slipped into the city, seizing the arsenal. The conflict seems now to be a struggle for the privilege of pillaging the rich Shanghai area.

General Wu, the Peking military chieftain, is reported to be having some success in checking the advance of General Chang's armies. For some days he has been devoting his efforts largely to exhausting the enemy's ammunition. One of his schemes is to place thousands of peasants, in civilian dress and unarmed, in front of his troops. It is said thousands of these impressed wretches have been slaughtered. On one occasion a Mukden army expended a vast amount of ammunition firing at an area whence they heard big gun and rifle fire at night. Daylight revealed that the supposed gun fire was produced by the explosion of firecrackers in kerosene cans. Chang's men had by that time used all their ammunition, and the Chihli troops easily drove them back.

Japan has warned the warring factions that she will not tolerate damage to Japanese lives, rights and interests in Manchuria. France also is disturbed over the danger to her interests there, and Premier Herriot has protested to Peking against the agreement with General Chang concerning the Chinese Eastern railroad and other properties. The Japanese press keeps up its anti-American propaganda, asserting that the Peking troops are supplied with ammunition from America. This is denied by the foreign ammunition dealers, who say the supplies are of German origin.

Towards the close of the week reports came from Canton that Chinese "Reds" were stirring up much trouble there and had started serious fires in many parts of the city. Looting had begun, the principal streets were deserted and steamers were crowded with refugees. Foreign hospitals and missions asked the American consulate to use the gunboats in the harbor for their protection.

IT IS apparently up to the League of Nations council to prevent warfare between Great Britain and Turkey over the disputed boundary in the Mosul region. After getting all ready to fight, the Turks suggested the matter be submitted to the council, and the British government promptly demanded an immediate meeting of that body. The Turks claim they are observing the terms of the temporary boundary agreements, and assert the British have been helping the hostile Kurds. Both these claims are denied by England. Prime Minister MacDonald, in the midst of his campaign, warned Turkey that no British government would tolerate any "tomfoolery."

In Arabia Ibn Saoud and his Wahabis, having driven Hussein from the Hedjaz throne, have occupied Mecca, the holy city. The British say all this is the result of plotting by Italians and Egyptians who seek to destroy British and French prestige in the Arab countries of Asia and north Africa. Hussein's son Ali is now king of Hedjaz.

ALL over the world, except in Holland and France, the $200,000,000 Dawes plan German loan went big, being heavily oversubscribed in America and Great Britain. In France the public wanted none of it, but the banks, under pressure from the government, took up the French share. Because many American dealers had contracted to sell more of the bonds than could be allotted to them an unintentional short interest was created and the dealers will have to buy in the open market to fill their orders. The first sales were considerably above the offering price of 92½.

The reparations commission announces that the "second state" of operations in the Dawes plan is completed and that the plan now enters definitely into execution. The railroads have been transferred to M. Levere, the French expert, and all assigned revenues are under complete control of the bodies named for that purpose.

ON HIS eastward way from his Canadian ranch the prince of Wales devoted a day to the sights and pleasures of Chicago, visiting the stockyards, the university and the Field museum and dancing most of the night. Next day he spent in Detroit, where Henry Ford showed him how flivvers are built and otherwise entertained him. The residents of both cities threw some spasms over the royal visit, rather embarrassing the modest young man with their attentions.

SPEAKING of Henry Ford, that gentleman let it be known last week that he had withdrawn his offer to the government for Muscle Shoals, having abandoned all interest in that development. He says: "A simple affair of business, which should have been decided by anyone within a week, has become a complicated political affair. We are not in politics and we are in business." His plan now is to develop a vast amount of power fuel and chemicals from his big coal fields in Kentucky. Senator Norris is to be thanked for preventing the acceptance of the Ford bid for Muscle Shoals by congress. The problem of what to do with Muscle Shoals remains to be solved.

INVESTIGATION of campaign funds by the Borah senate committee began last week in Chicago in response to LaFollette's charges of a Republican slush fund. The LaFollette-Wheeler campaign manager, John M. Nelson, was the first witness and he submitted accounts showing his organization had collected $190,535 and had expended $155,062. He said he expected to spend $50,000 more before election day.

Chairman Butler testified that the Republican national committee up to October 10 had collected $1,714,317. The Democratic western bureau said it had received $32,500 from John W. Gerard, national treasurer.

FINANCIAL difficulties and poor health caused Frank B. Brandegee, United States senator from Connecticut, to commit suicide last week in his Washington home. He formerly was a rich man but had made unfortunate investments in real estate. Mr. Brandegee, who was sixty years old, had been in the senate since 1905 and was one of the conspicuous Republican members. He was prominent among the "irreconcilables" who kept the senate from ratifying the peace treaty and the League of Nations covenant. His successor, according to Connecticut law, will be chosen in a special election. J. Henry Roraback, national committeeman, is the chief Republican aspirant, and among the Democrats who may be candidates are Homer S. Cummings, former Congressman Augustine Lonergan and Thomas J. Spellacy.

ANATOLE FRANCE, the "master" of French contemporary letters, passed away after an illness lasting for weeks, leaving a place in literature that there is none to fill. His real name was Jacques Anatole Thibaut and he was the son of a poor Paris bookseller. He was an officer of the Legion of Honor and a member of the French academy and in 1921 he received the Nobel prize for literature. Some years ago his writings were placed under the ban by the Roman Catholic church.

MINISTRIES of two European countries went out last week. That of Sweden was replaced by a cabinet headed by Hjalmar Branting, the noted Socialist leader. In Jugo-Slavia the Davidovich cabinet resigned because the king insisted that Radich's federalist party be given a share in the government. Ljuba Iovanovich was entrusted with the formation of a new government.

ABOUT a month ago William B Ross, governor of Wyoming, died and last Tuesday the Democrats of that state enthusiastically nominated his widow, Nellie Taylor Ross, to succeed him. She did not seek the honor but was the unanimous choice of the convention. The Republicans put Eugene J. Sullivan, an oil man, up for the office.

JAMES R. SHEFFIELD, the new American ambassador to Mexico, presented his credentials to President Obregon Wednesday, and in a little speech gave the Mexicans assurance of the friendliness and fairness of the United States.

Daily average receipts of California oil at Atlantic and gulf coast ports for the week ended October 11 were 122,286 barrels, compared with 118,143 for the previous week.

There were no changes reported in crude oil prices for the major districts—midcontinent being quoted at 75 cents to $1.25 a barrel, according to the gravity of the oil; Pennsylvania crude, Bradford district, $2.85 a barrel, all other grades $2.75 a barrel.

NERVOUS & HALF-SICK WOMEN

Relieved by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

These Three Letters Prove It

Lowell, Mass.—"I am sending you a few lines to let you know what good your medicine has done for me. I want you to let every one know that it has helped me in nervous troubles. I have four children and you know there is a lot to do where children are. They would come in from school and they would start telling me about their little troubles but I could not stand it. I had to send them away. I could not even walk on the street alone I was so nervous. I found one of your books and read it and then I saw in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I got it and had taken one bottle when I saw a change in myself. I was surprised. The children can talk all they want to now and it does not bother me. I am still taking the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. JOSEPH LEMERE, 84 South Street, Lowell, Mass.

Felt Like A New Woman

Springfield, Missouri.—"For four or five months I was run-down, nervous, my back ached and I did not feel like doing a thing. Sometimes my legs ached and felt like they would break and I had a hurting in my sides. I had been reading in the newspapers the letters of other women who had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and the advertising of it appealed to me so I bought some and saw results in almost no time. I had hardly been able to do my own work and after taking the Vegetable Compound I felt like a new woman. I recommend it to my friends who have troubles like I did, and hope they will find the same results."—Mrs. M. CARPENTER, 607 W. Chase Street, Springfield, Missouri.

40 Years Old, Feels Like 20

Hagerstown, Md.—"I was very bad off with backache, a bearing-down feeling in my body and a pain in my left side. I could not be on my feet at times and once I was so bad I walked bent over to one side for three weeks. My sister read of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and got me a bottle. I got so much relief that I took more until I was well. I am 40 years old and feel like 20. I am sure this medicine will help all women."—Mrs. MARY E. SANDY, 436 W. Franklin Street, Hagerstown, Md.

Over 100,000 women have so far replied to our question, "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?"

98 per cent of these replies are "Yes."

That means that 98 out of every 100 women who take this medicine for the ailments for which it is recommended are benefited by it.

All druggists are having increased sales of this medicine.

How the Motor Industry Set the Pace for Highway Building

The "horseless carriage" of yesterday is now being produced as the modern automobile at the rate of 4,000,000 a year. The total number of motor vehicles registered in the United States is over 16,000,000.

And automobiles built today are more than ever capable of economically serving both business and recreation needs.

But there is an obstacle standing in the way of their maximum service to owners.

For while the automobile industry made paved highways an economic necessity, the mileage of such roads is today years behind the requirements of modern traffic.

Happily motorists everywhere are boosting for more and wider paved highways.

And extensive experience has taught them that Concrete Highways are one of the best all-around investments they can make—an investment that pays big dividends.

As one of our 16,000,000 motorists you know better than anyone else the need for more and wider Concrete Roads. Start now to help your local officials provide them.

Glory Be! Masons and Knights of Columbus Are Reconciled

The River Rouge paper owned by Frank J. Boyd gives an account of the recent love feast held by River Rouge Masons and Knights of Columbus. The star speakers of the affair were Father Glemet, politely referred to as pastor of the Lady of the Lourdes Catholic church in the village and Rev. Marshall Hoyt, pastor of the local Methodist church. These gentlemen both made extemporaneous speeches praising the spirit of fraternity which had suddenly got hold of these two organizations, One would think from reading the Menace that K of C were bitter enemies of the Masonic fraternity and constantly on the lookout for an opening to run amuck, but Lo! here we see the Lion and the Lamb lie down together in peace.

Not so long ago we observed the Anti Catholics circulating literature purporting to be the oath of the K of C's in which terribly blood thirsty language was used. Some of these circulators were Masonic gentlemen of high degree but we sincerely hoped and believed that both parties were inclined to exaggerate small matters and we think yet something is askew. But we note that River Rouge is a strong Catholic community, and since there is a Masonic Lodge in the place, where do the Masons come from?

What Not And The Follies

By Our New York Correspondent

Sometimes I wonder if I am the only person in New York who gets up early enough to walk to work. At each subway exit there is always a crowd who rush up the steps and scuttle into nearby building, and I just can't see how they live on so little exercise. I fear I should feel like pushing over a couple of tall buildings if I didn't get in my two miles every morning. Then too, there are lots of interesting things to see that one misses later in the day when traffic is more congested.

For instance—Did you ever hear of a sitter? I never did either, but in New York it is a recognized occupation suited to anyone who can "just sit." Since you never can guess, I will tell you that "a sitter sits in a sight seeing bus" until the seats begin to fill with bona fide customers. Perhaps sightseeing companies believe that nothing succeeds like success, for they maintain an appearance of brisk business and people tumble all over themselves to buy tickets. As fast as one car fills up, the sitters change to another, and they ply this trade for 50 cents a, hour.

Now about the Follies.

I hardly have the heart to tell you how disappointed I was. Undoubtedly I anticipated too much. Perhaps I expected to be mightily entertained and quite a little shocked. Perhaps my only impression was gathered from the newspaper accounts of lawbreaking girls who always claim to be former Follies beauties.

The best thing about the show was the fine scenery and the skillful use of colors in the costumes. Only a great artist would have had the courage to blend red and light green, or apricot and pink for the dresses. And the results were certainly pleasing.

It was just curtain time when I slipped into my $5.50 seat last night, anticipating a Real Treat. But the first fifteen minutes were a terrible disappointment. First came a tableau; then a song by four men who couldn't or didn't sing; and finally a chorus of girls came out. It was the poorest excuse for good dancing and good looks I ever saw.

But just at this moment of darkest disappointment, out pranced the foxiest chorus of good looking girls I ever saw in my life. They were so young, so proficient, so full of pep that they couldn't have stopped dancing if they wanted to And when they had finished, out came another bunch of girls who were almost a duplicate of these and they combined in some still more peppy dances. These are not the girls you imagine an actress to be, but well trained athletes, full of health and the joy of living.

There was no plot and from this point on, the show consisted of songs, novelties, and sketches more or less on the order of the Orpheum Circuit. Will Rogers was disappointing in a playlet about the investigators at Washington, but fully redeemed himself later on in one of his typical "Out West" sketches. He was ready with all kinds of remedies for the ills of the country, and his answer to the better business problem is that the country needs more men in overalls and fewer men in knickers. This brought a great laugh from the audience, who seemed to enjoy the joke, even though it was on them.

There was one of those pageants that are so much fun for the ones who get them up, but so everlasting long if you don't know just what they are trying to represent. Tnis one was about the beautiful women from the beginning of time down to the "Girl of Today" and all the costumes, though in different periods, were of the same material—silver cloth backed with cerise satin.

A number of Victor Herbert's old favorites were sung, there was a shadow picture with colored lights, which meant nothing to the naked eye but was a "howling success" when viewed through the red and green spectacles furnished with the program. The Follies ended with a pretty street scene and some spectacular dancing by the splendid chorus, in which their shoes and gloves were phosphorescent, and when the lights were turned out, you saw only the rythmical motion of hands and feet.

Well of course, I now know what the Follies are, but honestly I'd just as soon see a good vaudeville show any day. All things being equal, you'd only miss the costumes and the pretty girls.

In marked contrast to this show I will tell you a little about a comedy I saw last week. The name wasn't so very promising, but to my surprise I found it a rollicking travesty on women in politics. The characters were well selected the old people frankly old, the bold ones just naturally bold, and the young people were just about the same kind of people as the parts they played. It was new to me to see a play where so much was made of a person's natural disposition, and so little left to acting. There was an immense plot about a woman who ran for Mayor, and the details were taken up with side lights on politicians, near politicians and nowhere near politicians I do wish you could have been there to share my hearty laughter.

Next week we will take a look at Broadway, so get on your easy shoes, for this can best be done on foot.

Death of O. G. Cottrell

O. G. Cottrell of Evanston, Illinois, who held a series of protracted meetings in this village a few years ago under canvas, died about seven months ago at his home in Evanston. He expired very suddenly, having retired in perfect health, and was found lifeless in bed the next morning.

The Acme of Ignorance

It is indeed hard to believe that in this day of automobiles, flying machines and radio anywhere in the inhabited portion of this country could be found a community of a whole township (30 square miles or more) where there was no railroad. no telegraph, no good road no rural delivery, not an automobile and hardly enough of anything for the bare necessities of life. But such is true.

Way down in the mountainous east end of old Kentucky tucked away among the hills of Knott county you will find such a primitive commuuity. Here in the hazy Blue Ridge Mountains you will find literally millions of people living in Kentucky, Tennessee and North Carolina who constitute the most primitive ignoramus patch of the United States. Comuonly known as "Hill Billies" the denizens of this stony, rough country are shut off from the remainder of the world. They live in log huts and shacks, some with one or no window at all perched on the sterile hillsides. The principal commodities in trade are corn, razorback hogs and villianous "hooch" which by the way is a cross between a Baptist hell and delirium tremens Their occupation is mostly hunting, fishing and fighting, especially the latter—and as most of them are never found abroad without a gun, the results are quite often disasterous. When a killlng occurs members of the State Police spread a drag net, raid the district and usually round up their man, but not without some gun work; these people are a law unto themselves and they recognize absolutely no outside authority. Many a brave officer has paid the price of his life in trying to capture the bushwhackers. They do not know the meaning of a school, a church or public utility of any kind; verily they are the scum of the earth. Such of them as have come in contact with outsiders may have absorbed a few points on health. but for the most part ignorance makes it practically impossible for an epidemic to be checked if it breaks out. Diphtheria or small pox among them will carry away whole families.

What little agriculture they practice is primitive in the extreme, as the implements used are crude, and as soil in the valleys is exhausted, areas on the hillsides are broken up and planted. In some cases the hills are so steep that it is a wonder the planter can remain upright without "grabbing a root."

Our memory goes back 30 years to the writings of the genial M. Quad of the Detroit Free Press who visited the God forsaken abode of these aborigines and found conditions much the same as now. This writer pictured the hill dwellers in a very ludicrous light, yet underneath it all there ran a shadow of their terrible need of enlightenment.

As a rule every third man among them is afflicted with hook worm and very few of them are not under the curse of that other worm of copper which twists its sinuous arms abreast of the still and vomits liquid Inferno, and the nefariousness of "moonshining" is constantly with them. The most valued possession is usually an old-fashioned six-foot barrel rifle of deadly accuracy, backed by an ugly temper. The owner can crack a bull's eye at 100 yards. Sullen family feuds are kept smouldering for generations as was the Hatfield McCoy trouble. This no-man's land is left practically immune from officers of the law, with a result that lawlessness and bloodshed go hand in hand. The poor devils live and die like hogs, but in some localities northern teachers have got into touch with the grizzly bunch and alienated them from century-old customs.

Our former North Adams girl, Miss Mary Corbett, is we believe, engaged in this sort of work in a locality so rough that roads are a burlesque and the only travel is by horseback. At one point on the Southern Railway out of Cincinnati you can look for many miles across deep valleys of Kentucky and see lonely cabins of "hill billies" perched on the mountain side and their little farms more or less fenceless, remind one of a crazy quilt pattern, overrun with thistles.

Here's a chance for the young christians in training for missionary work to distinguish themselves without going to the dark continent-

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON NOT GETTING FLATTERED

"Somehow, Aunt Emmy, it scares me when I read of all the ways people lose their money in fake stock and bond transactions. How can you know who is honest and what stocks and bonds are safe to buy?" queried Jane.

"It is easy enough if people only wouldn't be so impatient," replied Aunt Emmy. "There is never any need for haste in investing. It's far better to take a little time to find out the character of the securities offered and of the person offering them. The buying of securities was greatly stimulated by the Liberty Loans. Before Uncle Sam offered Liberty bonds only about 300,000 people in the United States owned securities. Now millions of people are buying stocks and bonds.

"Of course the unscrupulous security vendors have taken advantage of the public's new education in investments. All sorts of bad and questionable securities are being offered for sale. Naturally the majority of the people are not rich, so when a man sets out to sell bonds or stocks through the country he must be prepared to sell in small quantities. 'Baby bonds,' $100 bonds, that is, are popular. If the baby bonds are sound they are as good an investment as any. But before you buy bonds of any kind get good advice.

"Be especially careful about doorstep salesmen. A bond house that floods the country with salesmen is put to great expense. They can't send salesmen all over the United States for nothing, so when a salesman comes to sell you bonds it is important to investigate the quality of the bond he is selling. Your bank will give information about investment houses and investments, and if you follow the bank's advice you will not lose your money.

"Another thing to be looked upon with suspicion," continued Aunt Emmy, "is the man who tries to sell you securities over the telephone. Such men will call up some woman living in the country and say they are calling at the suggestion of a friend.

They suggest that she buy such and such a bond that is selling at such and such a price. They ask the woman to hold the wire a moment, then say the price of the bond has gone up a point. Of course these men always call on the long distance 'phone from some large city. Poor little Mrs. Backwoods is so thrilled at this touch with the great world of finance that she buys the bond, only to find out her error later. It's a safe bet that she wouldn't buy sheets and pillow cases over the 'phone from a perfect stranger, but bonds, yes!"

"I see, Aunty," said Jane, "you should always know whom you're dealing with and not get excited and rush into anything just because it sounds flattering and thrilling."

"Exactly," said Aunt Emmy.—Anne B. Aymes.

ADVOCATE SEED CORN TEST

The Iowa Bankers Association sent out a bulletin to its members urging the bankers to have the farmer test his seed corn this year because of the heavy damage done to corn last year by dry rot. Enclosed was a letter from a farm crops man at Iowa State College explaining the situation. Germination tests on 32,00? ears of representative seed corn from all sections of the state showed that only about 80 per cent were fit for seed purposes, the rest being either weak or dead. "Dry rot is very prevalent in the seed corn this year and is responsible for the low vitality of a good deal of seed corn. In a great many cases ears may look bright and free from disease but kernels from these ears will show the presence of dry rot mold when germinating in the tester."

It is ideas that count. What a man is worth below his neck is comparatively little. What he is worth above his neck is practically unlimited. Progress of all kinds is made because of the development of ideas.

Bankers Help

The Georgia Bankers Association has appropriated $1,000 a year to be used as a loan fund for boys and girls who are unable to meet the expenses of a college education, but whose work in clubs has demonstrated their qualifications for leadership.

Bradley County, Arkansas, bankers are offering $500 in cash for the best showings in the production of corn in 1924. Four hundred dollars will go to farmers and $100 to boys' clubs.

"Finally, among the major Republican achievements in economy, there is the President's claim that the Government has 'liquidated' the country's foreign loans. Mr. Davis has pointed out that this does not mean all it says. Liquidation is not quite the right word when nothing has happened but the execution of a new set of loans.

"Three old friends are missing when Republican leaders talk of economy and point with pride. There is Chas. R. Forbes, who wasted $225,000,000 in the Veterans' Bureau. There is Albert B. Fall, who cost the Nation 200,000,000 barrels of its navy's oil supply. And there is the highest and most prohibitive tariff in the country's history adding to prices at every turn.

"A good deal of the economy in the record of the Harding-Coolidge Administration suggests a policy of penny wise, pound foolish."

The Bible in Our Schools

(Written by Cora Eggleston)

The churches raised the money to hire an expert in religious instruction, giving pupils a choice to take it or not. 86 percent accepted the teaching at first and after 5 years 95 percent.

It is a belief among great educators that a curriculum which will put a recognition and a reverent knowledge of the God of the Jew, the Catholic and the protestant into our public schools, would be accepted by millions of American parents.

There are four ways to give to the child religious instruction, 1st at home, but there are 100,000,000 unchurched homes, 2nd Parochial schools—such schools are undemocratic. 3rd church schools, but they are an admitted failure, 4th The public school, where all the children of America gather.

The Bible has been put into the public schools of Kentucky. The vote in the Senate in favor of this was 33 to 1, in the lower house, 77 to 11. The Jews in Kentucky were in favor of confirming the Bible reading to the old Testament The Catholics to the St James version, but the Protestants were in the majority, and they inposed the whole Bible on the schools. This goes to show there is a common meeting ground in America W. J. Fields Governor of Kentucky said "I was grateful for the priviledge of signing the bill making it compulsory to have the Bible read in the common schools of Kentucky America was founded upon the principles of the christian religion, that the full thread of human education is a four fold strand, intellectual, moral, physical and spiritual. The latter is the most essential element of man's development."

A most splendid example of religious instruction in the public school is in the schools of Van-Wert Ohio. It is said if you would try to remove the Bible from those schools you would start a revolution. It grew into the school system there, it was thrust in.

Special Farm School to Start at M. A. C.

A special "sixteen weeks" course in agriculture will open at the M. A. C. on October 27. as the first of eleven farm courses to be given during the winter months.

The Short Courses, as they are popularly known, are designed to give scientific and practical training for young men of the state who desire advanced training in agriculture, but who cannot for one reason or another spare the time for the regular four year course at M. A. C. Hundreds of graduates of this winter school are now engaged in successful farming operations in Michigan, while others are holding down professional positions in connection with some phase of the industry.

The sixteen weeks course, which opens October 27, runs for two years and gives a very complete and practical training in general agriculture. The short courses are open to all men and women over 16 years of age, without examination, but the equivalent of at least a good common school education is recommended for entering students.

The short course students have their own organizations and athletic teams, entering into the student life of the M. A. C. campus fully during their residence at the college. All deparments of the agricultural division contribute to the curriculum of the courses.

In addition to the course which opens on October 26, other Winter Courses listed in the special catalog (which may be had on application to: Director Winter Courses M. A. C., East Lansing) include Eight weeks course in general agriculture, Jan. 5 to March 6; Dairy production, Jan. 5 to March 20; Dairy manufactures, Jan. 5 to March; Poultry, Jan. 5 to 30; Post-Graduate Veterinary, Jan. 26 to 30; Bee-Keepers, Feb. 9 to 21; Farm engineering, Jan. 5 to March 6 and two four weeks Truck and Tractor courses, opening Feb. 9 and March 9.

See Chance To Make Clover Seed Harvest

That harvesting clover seed from Michigan fields will pay farmers well this year, good weather of recent weeks having developed sufficient seed to make this possible, is the information sent out by Prof. J. F. Cox head of the farm crops department at the M. A. C.

Exceedingly unfavorable weather during September discouraged many farmers who had intended to harvest a red clover seed crop it is said. Development during October changed the situation however, and many are now planning to take a crop of seed.

"Native grown seed will provide less than half a crop," says Cox, and clover is bringing record fall prices. Many farmers will undoubtedly be well repaid by making a special effort to get a seed crop, even though a late one. If heads of clover in the field show eight or ten seeds, at least one and one half bushels can be expected.

"Prices have arisen as high as thirty dollars per hundred on clover this fall, or eighteen dollars per bushel. It will pay well to handle even small yields."

Michigan Farm Census

During the winter of 1924-25 the authorities of the state will conduct a census to determine the farm population, the number of live stock, the amount of crops in acreage, and in fact everything about the farm that the public is entitled to know. It is expected the enumerators will begin work about December 1st. Verne H. Church, agricultural statistician, United States Bureau of Agricultural Economics, 730 State Office Building, Lansing, has been appointed supervisor of the Fifth Census district of Michigan comprising the counties of Clinton, Shiawassee, Eaton, Ingham, Livingston, Jackson, Washtenaw Hillsdale and Lenawee. The selection of enumerators within these counties will be made by Mr. Church as rapidly as possible, in order that the organization may be perfected and in readiness to go when the starting date is announced.

A sample blank is being delivered by rural mail carrier to each farmer in order that he may become familiar with the information to be collected and prepare as much of it as possible in advance of the enumerator's visit. This will save considerable time when the enumerator calls and increase the accuracy of the information collected, as it will give the farmer an opportunity to look up at his convenience any items that he may not have in mind.

After defeating Alma College and St. Victor and resting last week the Kalamazoo Normal football team goes to Bowling Green, Kentucky, to play the state teacher's college there Saturday. Last year and the year before Kalamazoo Normal had one of the strongest gridiron machines in the state. This season the lack of veteran material was expected to prove a big handicap but Coach Martineau has his team well on the way toward another sncessful year. After the Bowling Green trip Kazoo Normal will play Oshkosh, Wis., Normal Nov. 1, Chicago, "Y" College Nov. 14 and Albion College Nov. 27. The Oshkosh game will feature the annual home-coming day at the Normal.

Many farmers caught with a heavy supply of soft corn this year are making stack silage in instances where their silos are loaded to capacity. One man in Minnesota makes a stack twenty feet in diameter and twenty feet high, keeping the center lower than the outside, until the top is reached when the center should be filled to capacity. Butts should be laid to the outside and the stack will then settle evenly and firmly. Top should be covered with hay.

Don't fail to register Saturday.

A Veteran Who Don't Want a Pension

It is not often that a beneficiary of the U. S. Veteran's Bureau refuses money due as compensation for the disabilities incurred while in the military service but such a case was recently called to the attention of the Bureau's manager at Danville, Illinois. A man residing within that territory had been furnished with transportation and a meal, request in order that he might report for examination in connection with his compensation. These papers were returned to the Sub-district manager together with a letter, part of which is quoted below:

"I have taken under consideration the question of my present compensation from the government and feel that I am no longer entitled to compensation. I find no handicap to speak of in my present condition of health. I believe in fair dealing in every way and barring any relapse at any future time am on my feet in pretty good shape

"I can always say that the govergment has treated me fair and square in every way and I am taking this opportunity to be fair also for I may sometime need help again and will be free in asking it,

Upon receipt of the above letter which was referred to the district office in Chicago, Illinois, the man was requested to present himself for examination with a statement that the bureau thought it necessary to continue the compensation award at the present time because of the sact that there is a disability present and accordingly this ex-service man is as much entitled to the compensation he received as to any other legitimate source.

If your receipt says your time on the Advocate has expired, call in and renew.

THE KISS

SYNOPSIS.—Ellen and Joe Latimer, orphans, without means, make their home with their Aunt Elsie, at Port Washington, small New York town. Ellen is studying art, her expenses being paid by Mrs. Sewall Rose, girlhood friend of her mother. Mrs. Rose invites Ellen to a Thanksgiving house party and the girl is delighted. On the way from the station to Mrs. Rose's Ellen rides with a remarkably attractive young woman and a much older man. She takes them for father and daughter, but they are introduced as Mr. and Mrs. Josselyn. Ellen does not "fit in" with the younger members of the party, and is miserable. Leaving for her home next morning, Ellen meets Gibbs Josselyn, son of her fellow guest. He has disapproved of his father's wedding and is not on speaking terms with the couple. Declining to stay at Mrs. Rose's, Gibbs drives Ellen to the station. They miss the train and Gibbs undertakes to drive the girl to Port Washington. Their auto is wrecked. Ellen is hurt, but it is not thought to be serious, and she and Gibbs part. He has been attracted by the girl, and she by him. Ellen's injury proves to be severe, and for months she is an invalid. Recovered, she is taking part in the town's Memorial day festivities when Gibbs Josselyn, on a yachting trip with a friend, George Lathrop, meets her again. The feeling of mutual attraction has strengthened since they parted. They leave Port Washington man and wife. Nearly seven years later Gibbs and Ellen Josselyn, with their son Tommy, come back from France to New York. They are welcomed by Josselyn, Senior, and his beautiful wife, Lillian, the old ill-feeling forgotten. Gibbs and Ellen make their home with the elder Josselyns, at Wheatley Hills, just outside New York. Gibbs idles, ostensibly looking for a studio in which to assume his portrait painting. Ellen sees that her husband is attracted by his youthful stepmother's beauty. Joe Latimer, Ellen's brother, is tentatively engaged to marry Harriet, George Lathrop's daughter. Gibbs secures a studio. The rift between the younger Josselyns widens.

CHAPTER VII

Gibbs had set up his easel in his father's study, and was keeping his hand in, as he expressed it, by making a pastel sketch of Josselyn, Senior. The study was a small room so cunningly concealed by the mazes of the house that the occupant might be sure of privacy whenever he desired it there.

Ellen loved this room, and sometimes spent a happy evening here, if Gibbs were kept in town by any especial affair at the club, playing cribbage with her father-in-law. Lillian, drowsing beside the fire, would listen half-smiling to their war of words and points, open her book, and shut it idly again. She would be quite frankly bored on these occasions, but Ellen loved the quiet and peace, and suspected that the old man was never so happy as in this environment.

It was his whim never to allow strangers in this room. Ellen, with his permission, had taken Joe there, and marveled with him over its various contents. Tommy was a privileged visitor, and came and went with royal contempt for restriction. He deeply amused his grandfather by calling it "our room," indeed all the "Villino dell' Orto" was to Tommy now "my house."

* * * * * * *

There was no formal reconciliation between Gibbs and his wife, but after a few days they began to speak to each other again. The breach did not entirely heal, however, and Ellen felt a change in their relationship from that day. Gibbs went to the city three or four times a week. Sometimes Ellen went with him, and they hunted for a studio together. But the old spirit of comradeship seemed gone.

He came back from town one day and announced that he had found his atelier, describing a place that sounded near enough to his ideal. But Ellen's heart turned to lead as she heard him. It was not to be a home—just a workshop! His home life was still to be here. It was on Fifty-ninth street, flooded with north light, one enormous room, one tiny room, and a bath, and the rent was twelve hundred a year.

"And janitor service included," Lillian added unthinkingly. Ellen and Josselyn, Senior, looked at her in surprise, for her tone was not that of question. "I suppose?" she said, quickly glancing at Gibbs, and Ellen saw her color rise. Instantly she knew, with a shock of almost prostrating jealousy, that Lillian had seen the studio. The older woman had been in town all day, and had picked up Gibbs at the club to bring him home. They had done this before—there was no harm in that—

"Certainly!" Gibbs answered smoothly. His color swept up, too. Ellen felt an agony in her heart that was almost unbearable. He had taken Lillian to see it—he had poked about it first with her—opening doors, discussing advantages and disadvantages—

There were guests at the table, and she must keep her self-control. Dazedly she laughed and talked, and dazedly she somehow got through the evening. There were six of them, and they played a game of bridge, interspersed with music from the phonograph, with the passing of candy, and the idle discussion of the new magazines. It was midnight when the younger Josselyns went upstairs.

"Gibbs," said Ellen then, from a bursting heart. "Did you take Lillian to see the studio?"

She knew him so well; she could see the irresolution in his eyes. Denial?—no, he would not lie unnecessarily to her.

"Yes, I did," he said reluctantly. If she knew him well, he knew her, too. He had been watching Ellen uneasily all evening, he was ready for this. "Yes," he went on innocently. "Do you mind? She came for me at the club, at four, and we had to go right up into that neighborhood—I'm sorry if you mind?"

"If you thought I wouldn't mind, why didn't you say so straight out?" Ellen demanded. She thought she had him, but Gibbs, hanging his tie on the rack, merely looked thoughtful.

"If I tell you, will you please not mention it?" he surprised her by asking. "It's this: dad hates her to go anywhere with any other man, even with me. He's perfectly decent about it in public, and he gives her the deuce in private! He was to be with us today you know or she never would have come for me at all—she's awfully sweet about it, and as usual, she humors him!"

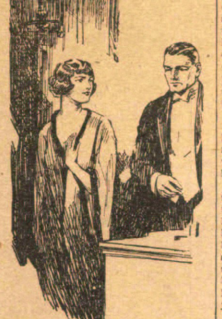
"She's—clever!" Ellen said briefly. If Gibbs did not like this enigmatic answer, he gave no indication of displeasure beyond a faint scowl. He was presently sound asleep, with no further reference to the matter.

But Ellen, twisting with wretched thoughts, lay awake for hours. At first she mused only upon the bitterness of the simple fact: Gibbs had selected a studio without any appeal to the judgment of his wife. Ah, how different that was from the choosing of the last studio, the blessed little apartment on "Madame la Montaigue": she had been on his arm then, exclaiming over rents, dimpling on the dark stairs they climbed and climbed and climbed after the concierges! How they had exulted over the boxes from home, over the placing of every chair and rug, and how they had sallied forth, hungry and tired, to be fed and soothed and amused by the city of romance and beauty!

These thoughts were sad enough, and tears began to creep down Ellen's cheeks, and her head to ache with her efforts at self-control. But presently a fresh thought came, and the tears dried, and Ellen's heart began to beat hard again with agony and fear.

Lillian had gone into town the night before, Tuesday night, to dine and spend the night with friends, and Gibbs and his father were to take the car in, on Wednesday morning, and meet her for lunch. Ellen had been originally included in this plan, but had excused herself because Tommy's nurse was not well, and his mother was enjoying a monopoly of his care for a few days. And on Wednesday morning Josselyn, Senior, had asked Gibbs to go to the city without him, he had really preferred the idle country day with Ellen and Tommy. He had telephoned Lillian at her friend's hotel that Gibbs had the car, if she wanted it she was to telephone Gibbs at the club. Now Ellen writhed with the sudden conviction that they had met in the morning, and lunched together, and hunted for studios all afternoon.

She dared not ask him: it was to ask him to confess to a lie. More than that, it was to kill her confidence in him with one blow. But Ellen never knew a moment's ease after that. She looked at Lillian's beautiful, sphinxlike face the next day, vainly trying to read it. Her heart began to beat suffocatingly when her father-in-law chanced to ask his wife, at luncheon, how she had spent the previous day. Was it mere accident that took Lillian's splendid eyes to Gibbs' before she answered? She had shopped with Mildred, and had sent her off at one o'clock, and had had a sort of luncheon-tea all by herself.



"Gibbs," Said Ellen Then, From a Bursting Heart, "Did You Take Lillian to See the Studio?"

"You should have come straight home; that was a tiring visit," the old man said. Lillian smiled at him affectionately for her only answer. Ellen felt that she never appreciated the safety and the power of silence.

"You had no trouble getting hold of the car?" Josselyn, Senior, pursued suddenly.

"No." Again she glanced at Gibbs, again was silent. Gibbs was the next speaker, with a cheerful and general inquiry:

"Who's doing what this afternoon?"

* * * * * * * *

The studio was formally opened in September, with a tea. The artist's pretty, blue-eyed little wife was present on this occasion, suitably, nay, charmingly, dressed, chatting with neglected guests, keeping a watchful eye upon tea-cups, playing her part well. His father was also there, a handsome and dignified figure, erect, white-haired, obviously full of pride in his son. And the little, dark-haired boy was there, for a few minutes, keeping close to the musicians, amusing the ladies with his pretty French.

But it was his beautiful young stepmother who shared with Gibbs Josselyn the interest of his guests, who was with him the romantic and fascinating center of attraction. Lillian was at her loveliest, radiant and smiling, the mysterious and astonishing perfection of her face enhanced by the Juliet-like little cap of pearls that held her glorious hair in place, and by the rich colors of her gown. She wore a marvelous garment of old brocade, in which fruity colors were mingled with gold and silver threads, and from her shoulders a filmy black overgarment floated loose, caught with a bracelet of pearls at either wrist, and weighted loosely at its hem by dull embroideries in pearls. Lillian said that she had had this robe for years without an opportunity to wear it; this was her opportunity, and she made the most of it. Anything more lovely than the picture she made in it, even heartsick Ellen had to admit she could not imagine.

Wherever Lillian moved, the crowd swayed with her, and in it was always the silver head, and the tall, trimly built figure of the hero of the hour. Her rich, amused voice, with its undercurrents of mystery, of suggestion, was the foundation of the conversation. And when she turned to Gibbs, as she was constantly turning, and asked him a simple question and received his answering monosyllable, it would have been an obtuse observer indeed who did not instantly perceive the thrilling current of awakening passion that ran between the two. His lightest word to her was fraught with it, his most fleeting glance betrayed it. At the end of the long three hours, when the guests had lingered out, one by one, and she stood by the fireplace, tired, drooping, superb, barely raising her eyes as she spoke to him, they might have been alone in the world. What did he say as he bent toward her, what did his smiling eyes say?

Ellen did not know, or care. The words were nothing, the look was nothing, it was the trembling intensity with which they charged them that ate into her soul like acid upon a plate. None of them was sane now, Ellen perhaps the least of the three. She was burning with an agony of jealousy and doubt and anger far more painful than any actual fire would have been. She was conscious of Gibbs and Lillian every instant of the day.

They were not often alone together, after all. A moment in the long drawing room, before dinner, a few sentences murmured in her ear as Gibbs crossed the tennis court at Lillian's side, perhaps a stolen tea-hour once a week in the city; this was the most. Even for this there must be endless contriving and tireless intrigue. Ellen could not tell what was suspicion, what fact, what was mere innocent chance, and what was deliberate arrangement.

Sometimes, watching, watching, watching, forlorn and lonely, she longed to tear aside the veil of kindness and happiness in which her life was wrapped, and fling herself sobbing upon her husband.

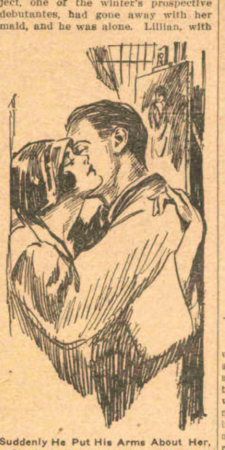
"Gibbs, Gibbs, my darling! How much of it is true—how much of it is my wretched imagination? Have you let yourself come to care for her—have you forgotten me? I am your life—I am your past and present—I alone! Let us leave all this behind us and go somewhere where we may be poor again, and you shall paint, and I will mend and cook, and all the old joy will come back to us again!"

She dared not say it. What woman ever did dare? She had lost so much, she dared not risk more. Ellen never had had much self-confidence, she lost it all now. She became afraid. Lillian could take Gibbs' love away from her, perhaps Lillian could make him leave her and Tommy completely. Perhaps Lillian wanted more than his passing admiration. Well, and if so, what could a tearful, disheartened, crushed little Ellen do?

Gibbs was entirely unconscious of her suffering, because he was almost unconscious of her existence. He had never forgotten his wife for his business or his art, as many men do, but in the intensity of his new passion Ellen was completely lost to him. So might a man feel if he were suddenly stretched upon the rack.

Gibbs knew that Ellen was there, just as Tommy and Lizzie and his father were there, in the house at Wheatley Hills, but his senses responded to nothing but Lillian. He talked to his father, to Lizzie, to Ellen, and he read books to Tommy and even played with the child, but all the time his veins ran fire, and all the time his mind was busy anticipating the next moment he might have alone with her, or remembering the last.

A moment came when he had her in his arms. Only a moment, but it left its scar on them both. They were in the studio, Lillian and her husband had called to bring him home, and Lillian had run up the stairs, and come in upon him in the dusk. His subject, one of the winter's prospective debutantes, had gone away with her maid, and he was alone. Lillian, with her bright hair trimly covered by her motor-hat, and her figure lost in the folds of a loose, soft, mustard-colored coat, had come close to him, had stood staring at the picture with her mysterious eyes.



Suddenly He Put His Arms About Her, Crushed Her to Him, and Kissed Her Hungrily.

"Gibbs—it's too wonderful!"

"Like it?" Gibbs asked, trying to seem indifferent to her praise.

"What you might have done—what you might have done in a different environment!" Lillian said, as if to herself. "To tie you down to domesticities—you!"

The soft, deep voice died away into silence. It was twilight in the studio, the end of a wonderful Indian summer day was dying in the park. A cooler breeze than the city had known for many hours drifted in through the open studio windows, faintly the strains of a hurdy-gurdy came gaily from the street: "Where the River Shannon's Flowing—"

Gibbs was perhaps a little tired. The day had been long and hot and dirty. He glanced at Lillian, all fragrance and freshness, ready to whirl him away into another world of greenness and silence and beauty. Her frail white blouse was open at the throat, a faint perfume disengaged itself from her, and, through his sleeve, he felt the delicious warmth of the hand she had laid, as if unconsciously, upon his arm.

Suddenly he put his arms about her, crushed her to him, and kissed her hungrily. She did not resist him, but brushed her lovely face aside, so that his second kiss fell on her white temple, where the golden-brown hair was swept back. He felt her breast rise in a quick breath against his heart, and the fingers on his arm suddenly tightened.

When, after a dizzy moment, they stood facing each other, breathing hard, and still with fingers locked, she seemed as confused as he. She did not smile, there was a half-frightened, half-questioning look in her magnificent eyes.

"I'm sorry!" Gibbs said, in a whisper. "I'm awfully sorry!"

Lillian did not speak. She released her hands, and went slowly toward the door. Gibbs remained standing where he was, motionless.

At the door she hesitated, her back toward him in its loose coat of mustard color. Suddenly she turned, and over her shoulder gave him a swift, half-sad, half-mischievous smile. Then she was gone.

A vista seemed to open before Gibbs with that smile. For days he saw nothing else, for days there rang in his head only a bewildered question.

After this episode Lillian quite pointedly avoided him. She was seriously trying to get her thoughts in order. She was bewildered, herself. Lillian had begun her flirtation with Gibbs just as she began a flirtation with every other eligible man. Her way with no two of them was the same, but she rarely failed. Upon such men as Joe and George she wasted no time. Honest, simple, blue-eyed Ellen might have them unchallenged, and might discuss with them the proper culture of holly-hocks, and the weather, and Tommy's latest precocity. But Gibbs had been marked for her steel from the moment when her eyes found his silver head next to Ellen's, on the steamer dock.

> Nothing but a kiss, of course, but that way trouble lies. What next?

Zebra Mongoose Has Almost Human Speech

One of the most wonderful attributes of zebra mongooses is their copia verborum. They dispose of so many different sounds, uttered in so great a variety of intonations, and with such convincing expressiveness, of joy, of sorrow, of expectation, of longing, of desire, of surprise, of anxiety and fear, that it amounts to a language.

Unlike any other mammals known to me, they converse at a distance, even when they are out of sight of one another, as, for instance, when they happen to be in two different rooms.

They often talk in their sleep, and Rikki-Tikki (the writer's male mongoose) from time to time, gave vent, while sound asleep, to an endless lament, a series of long drawn though not unharmonious wails in a rising and falling cadence, expressive of heartrending sorrow and distress, painful to listen to in the silence of the night.

Yet another curious peculiarity of theirs is, that they look, intently, and with evident interest, at stretches of country lying in front of them, when they find themselves at the top of a hill or of a mountain where they have not previously been. Their eyesight is marvelously sharp, and they detect birds of prey—the only thing in the world which they fear, apart from leopards and servals—at incredible altitudes in the sky.—Hans Coudenhove in the Atlantic Monthly.

Rain Good for New Suits

Cloth from which suits for men and women are made, is invariably kept in a moist condition when being made up at the mills in order to give strength to the wool and to prevent breakage when it is being woven. A dry atmosphere would mean many "faults" in the piece. For this reason cloth makers are warning the public that rain occasionally will not hurt a new outfit, but on the other hand will do some suits a lot of good. One tailor suggests ten minutes in a misting rain as the best "drink" for a suit, especially in the early days of its life.

Stone Bruises Have Value

Stone bruises on the feet are a sure cure for nervous disorders, in the opinion of a German specialist, who sets many of his patients to walking in their bare feet over stony fields. The more tender the patients' feet the quicker will be the cure, in the opinion of this expert on nervous disorders.

He holds that many nervous persons are unable to take their minds off troubles which they brood over constantly and has found over a long terms of years that it is not possible for many patients to worry about other troubles if they have bruised and swollen feet.

GREAT CROWDS HEAR REV. HAMILTON

The second week of the evangelistic meetings at the Baptist church are marked by a spiritual and numerical interest. Rev. Hamilton's messages on practical christianity have produced a profound impression on his hearers of the need of spirituality in religion.

The address Wednesday evening entitled "What kind of a place is Hell?" impressed the congregation with the reality of a future life. "Skeptical minds to-day refuse to believe in the biblical doctrine of Hell," said the speaker, "but the word 'hell' was found 12 times in the Gospels and 11 times out of 12 Christ used the word." The subject is a very unpopular one and many ministers who prefer the praise of men more than the praise of God refrain from mentioning it. In conclusion he said "Hell was a place of separation from God, and everything that is good. It is also a place of conscious suffering and a place of eternal duration."

The special feature of the closing week will be a special meeting for women Friday afternoon at 2:00 p. m. Topic will be "A Real Woman," and a special meeting for men Sunday afternoon at 2:00 p. m. Topic: "The Patriotism America Needs." All the men of the community ought to hear this address.

You Don't Want This to Happen

The proposed tax amendment to be voted on at the polls Nov. 4 will seriously cripple the Primary School Fund. At a meeting of the Michigan State Teacher's Association held at Lansing Oct. 23 and 24 resolutions against the Income Tax Amendment were adopted as follows:

WHEREAS: The proposed Income Tax Amendment omits from Sec. 3, Article X, of the constitution of Michigan that clause which is the basis for the taxation of such public utilities upon which 65 per cent of the revenues of the primary school fund depend, and

WHEREAS: The omission of the above mentioned clause was entirely unnecessary for the successful operation of the proposed income tax, and

WHEREAS: The adoption of the proposed income tax amendment will reduce the revenues of the primary school fund and restore the method of taxation of public utilities in vogue before the time of Gov. Pingree. Be it

RESOLVED: That this Association go on record as opposed to to the proposed Income Tax Amendment in its present form.

The reason for this stand is that the attorney general of the state has decided the Income Tax law would overthrow the measure adopted in 1900 taxing public utilities to pay the primary fund.

Death of Anse McMullen

Anson McMullen, a resident of Jackson for some time, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Bert Hall, in Hillsdale on Tuesday evening, aged about 81 years.

For a number of years he resided on a farm in Moscow township where his two children were reared and he was well and favorably known.

His wife passed away last December at Hillsdale, after and operation, since which time Mr. McMullen has resided with his son, George up to within a short time of his death. Surviving are a son and daughter, Mrs. Bert Hall of Hillsdale and George McMullen of Jackson and one grand-child.

Funeral services were conducted from the Hall home in Hillsdale to-day (Friday) at 2:00 p. m. and interment in the North Adams cemetery.

A Decision of Importance

In view of the fact that there are some candidates in the field for certain offices at the election who were not nominated at the Primaries in this county, we are publishing as submitted to us, the finding of the Attorney General on the legality of using the old-fashion stickers on ballots, a practice which was declared unlawful some time ago. We wish to call the attention of all voters to this matter, in-as-much as many of them will want to "patch" the ballot with a sticker. The Attorney General rules that a sticker bearing the name of any candidate who was found on the primary ballot, can be affixed over any name on any ballot at the election. And don't forget after you have put on the sticker to cross the square at the left, other wise your ballot won't count.

Recognizes Good and Bad Church Weather

A minister using weather forecasts to fit the attendance to the capacity of his church and the services to the mood of the congregation as affected by the weather, is the latest innovation in utilizing the government's prognostications that has come to the attention of weather bureau officials in Washington.

The pastor of a large church in one of the country's large cities, whose edifice is unable to hold all that come in "good church weather," but which is not filled in inclement weather or fine outdoor weather, telephones the forecaster at the local weather bureau office every week for Sunday's weather prospects.

If the forecast indicates weather good enough for church, but not for golf or motoring, publicity through the newspapers is curtailed and no attempt is made to increase the attendance, as the church will be crowded to capacity without such efforts. But if stormy or very fine weather is in prospect special announcements of sermon and attractive musical programs are made in the newspapers.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Campaign Fund Figures Are Uncovered—Dissolution of German Reichstag.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SENATOR BORAH'S campaign fund investigating committee, having shifted the scene of operations to Washington, spent a busy week mainly in inquiring into the truth or falsity of the charge made by Senator LaFollette and his attorney, Frank P. Walsh, that there is a conspiracy to raise between ten and twelve million dollars to secure the election of Coolidge and Dawes. Attorney Samuel Untermyer was associated with Walsh in the cross-examination of witnesses, the most important of whom were Pennsylvanians. It is from their state, according to the LaFollette charges, that much of the alleged slush fund is expected.

These Pennsylvanians, among whom were S. M. Vauclain, president of the Baldwin Locomotive works; E. T. Stotesbury, Philadelphia partner of J. P. Morgan & Co.; Joseph R. Grundy, president of the State Manufacturers' association and author of letters soliciting campaign contributions; and Chester W. Hill and Nathan T. Folwell of Philadelphia, testified with apparent frankness concerning their efforts to raise money for the Republican campaign and concerning their own contributions. They said they were not ashamed thus to aid their party. Mr. Grundy and Mr. Hill said they had raised $365,000 in the eastern part of the state and were still going ahead. Senator Caraway sought to develop that the contributors were "government beneficiaries," but Mr. Grundy said the list to whom letters had been sent had been bought from an addressograph company.

"Pretty good letters," commented Senator Caraway. "Worth $365,000. You say you are grateful for the laws passed under the Republican administration. You mean the tariff?"

"No. All the laws."

Mr. Vauclain said: "I am not ashamed of the Republican party. It never entered my head whether it would take ten or fifty millions to win the election."

"Money talks?" asked the sarcastic Mr. Untermyer.

"No, sir; righteousness talks. I have confidence enough in the working people of this country to feel that they will not be hoodwinked by anything. The American workingman votes straight."

"You feel that you speak for the workingman?" asked Attorney Walsh in amazement.

"Yes. I do not speak for Mr. Samuel Gompers. I haven't the slightest fear of LaFollette. I feel that it won't take more than one hay wagon to haul away his votes."

T. V. O'Connor, who led a party of labor men to Washington to tell Mr. Coolidge he had their support, was asked concerning the expenses of that trip. He said he advanced the money and was reimbursed by Joseph Ryan, vice president of the longshoremen's union, and that each man had paid his share. Mr. O'Connor was also questioned about his intimation, in a speech at Buffalo, that LaFollette was receiving Soviet money from Russia through Mexico. He admitted he had no information to support this but said it was "common rumor" and he believed it, having heard it from crews of boats returning from Russia.

William Knox, president of the American Bankers' association, wired the committee a flat denial of the charge made by Attorney Walsh that a political fund to defeat LaFollette had been raised at the meeting of the association in Chicago. He said no request has ever been made by the association for funds for political purposes. Mr. Stotesbury, whom Walsh named as the chairman of the committee to raise this fund, denied all knowledge of it.

BEFORE hearing all this testimony, the Borah committee called National Chairman Clem Shaver and National Treasurer James W. Gerard to tell about the Democratic campaign fund. Mr. Shaver said the national committee had received only $548,440 to date, was already $48,000 in the hole and expected to end the campaign with a deficit of about $150,000 unless it is pleasantly disappointed by more liberal contributions. Mr. Gerard identified some of the larger donors to the fund, including T. L. Chadbourne, Barney M. Baruch and Henry Morgenthau of New York, C. C. Watson of West Virginia and Mr. Gerard himself. He cheerfully told the committee that he and his associates would gladly spend a million and a half if it were given them.

LaFollette's campaign fund, it seems, is not at all large, but that his managers would gladly accept and spend more is made evident by a formal statement of Attorney General Ekern, treasurer of the third party. He appeals for contributions without placing any limit thereon, and says: "If our friends come forward liberally now we can put this thing over." Last week LaFollette and Wheeler turned their attention to the eastern states, especially New York, for, as Mr. Ekern said, "We are now assured of enough states in the West to prevent the election of Coolidge." The fight among the three parties for New York's 45 electoral votes is exceedingly hot. If they should be won by either Davis or LaFollette the election might be thrown into congress. As has been said repeatedly, the Republicans declare that this is what both the other parties are seeking to bring about. Mr. Davis predicts that LaFollette will carry six or eight states, all normally Republican.

GERMANY is to have a general election December 7, when a new reichstag will be chosen. The present reichstag was dissolved on Monday of last week by President Ebert because Chancellor Marx had failed so to reorganize the cabinet that he would have a working majority in the legislative assembly. It will be remembered that the Nationalists consented to vote for the Dawes plan laws on condition that they should have three seats in the cabinet, that there should be a tax on imported grains and that Germany should not join the League of Nations unless her claim that she did not start the war was accepted. The government promised all this, but found difficulty in carrying out its pledges, especially that concerning the war guilt. Also the various parties refused to co-operate with Marx in the formation of the new cabinet, and he finally gave up. The Nationalist party, largest of the seven, has issued a proclamation declaring in favor of the restoration of the monarchy and against the Versailles treaty and the Dawes plan. It says: "We mean to create a new Germany, free from Jewish control." If the Nationalists should win control—which is unlikely—civil war might result, for the republican elements are prepared to support the republic with arms.

The German industrial magnates are trying to form a coalition of the Nationalists and People's parties and offer a huge campaign fund for such a combine, provided it promises the restoration of the ten-hour day in the mines and factories and the alteration of the employment insurance made necessary by the Dawes plan.

Actual economic evacuation of the Ruhr by the French and Belgians began last week, the important fiscal services being transferred to the German officials, and this restoration was to be complete by midnight of October 27. Military evacuation also is under way and the inhabitants of Dortmund and other cities gave themselves to delirious rejoicing as the foreign troops departed.

IN THE final week of the British parliamentary campaign the situation was so confused that it was almost impossible to predict the result of the elections, but it seemed no party would obtain a clear majority of the seats. The united front of the Liberals and Conservatives against Labor appeared to have broken down, many of the Liberals giving actual support to the right wing of the Labor party. Great bitterness developed, there were many riots and various notables were heckled into silence at the meetings.

FENG YU-HSIANG, the "Christian general," has executed a coup that may possibly bring an end to the internecine warfare in China. One of his brigades entered Peking and quietly took complete control of the city, cutting communications and closing the gates. A proclamation was issued stating that General Feng did not wish to make war and had called a conference between the government and the Manchurians. It was said he also demanded that President Tsao Kun resign, and reports from Tokyo said Tsao had fled from Peking.

Earlier in the week General Chang fought two bloody battles with the Peking forces in the Shanhaikwan region and, according to the most reliable reports, defeated them with heavy losses. Part of the Manchurian army reached the sea near Chinwangtao and thus had about 15,000 Peking troops virtually surrounded. It was believed General Wu would flee on a warship.

Sun Yat-sen, having worsted the merchants' volunteer corps in Canton, is having as many of its survivors as he can catch strangled and their families are being tortured to obtain information. Gen. Chen Chiun-ming is advancing on Canton and Doctor Sun says if he is attacked by Chen he will burn what is left of the city.

IN THE United States, also, the Chinese are fighting for the tong war which broke out several weeks ago has not been stopped, although the police of New York, Chicago and other large cities have arrested hundreds of Chinese gunmen. Every day or two there is a new killing or bombing, and as the Chinese, like the Italians, never will tell on one another, the authorities have great difficulty in suppressing the outbreak.

ATTORNEY GENERAL STONE, in a brief filed in the Federal court at St. Paul, Minn., seeks for "effective dissolution" of the International Harvester company's alleged monopoly of the farm machinery business. The proceedings are supplemental to the consent decree in dissolution entered in that court in 1918. This, Mr. Stone holds, did not go far enough, and he asks that the court give proper protection "to the farmers and land owners who are dependent upon agricultural machinery and implements obtainable at reasonable prices." During a test period which ended 18 months after the declaration of peace, according to the brief, eight of the Harvester company's competitors went out of business, and in 1922, the last selling season under the test period, the defendant company's business actually increased. The government's plan for dissolution has been worked out by the federal trade commission.

SHENANDOAH has been having rather a rough time on the Pacific coast, what with hard winds and fogs. Last week she started on the return flight from Washington to the east coast. In crossing the Rockies her gas cooled so rapidly that it was necessary to drop much of the water and gasoline carried. ZR-3, now known as the Los Angeles, has been deflated and will soon be refilled with helium gas made in Texas. The big dirigible has been officially inspected as a preliminary to her formal surrender to the United States navy.

ORGANIZED labor won a victory when the Supreme court of the United States last week handed down an opinion to the effect that Federal courts must not refuse jury trials in contempt cases growing out of labor disputes. The decision is in two cases arising from the railway shopmen's strike and holds that the section of the Clayton act requiring a jury trial in certain specified kinds of contempt is constitutional; that railroad workers on strike are "employees" within the meaning of that law; that the contempt charged constituted a criminal offense, and that a trial by jury was mandatory when demanded.

AN EXPLOSION aboard the scout cruiser Trenton, as yet unexplained, killed four men outright and injured sixteen others, of whom ten have since died. The vessel was on target practice at the time of the disaster.

ONTARIO, the only remaining dry province in Canada, decided last Thursday to remain dry. The temperance act was retained by a majority of about 25,000. The cities and towns voted wet, but the rural districts carried the day for the prohibition side.

Asks Aid of Churches to Redeem Convicts

Albany, N. Y.—Appealing to the churches of the United States to exercise a greater and more constant influence upon the moral and religious work of penal institutions, Frank Moore of Rahway, N. J., president of the American Prison association, quoted statistics to show that crime in this country is increasing to an alarming degree. He pointed out that the census shows that from 1904 to 1922 this increase was at the rate of 50 per cent and that every year approximately one out of every 666 citizens of the country greets the new year in prison.

"If the men in prisons are going to be free from sin and from the fetters that bind them," Mr. Moore said, "the churches must take an interest in the prison problems of the country. It is not a question of punishment but of reformation that must be worked out in the prisons.

"There are many men in charge of the prisons of the country who are anxious to do moral work with their charges, but are not able because they do not have men and women who would be willing to work with them in reaching the individual offender. The head of a penal institution with hundreds, and it may be thousands, under him has so many duties that personal work with each individual is a physical impossibility. It is easy to see how the church could be of valuable help to him if it would only offer its assistance."

Michigan Happenings

A coroner's jury at Grand Rapids decided that careless and fast driving on the part of Ralph Dougherty, 17 years old, a Muskegon high school student, caused the accident, Oct. 6, which resulted in the death of Clarence Field, of Muskegon. The Field automobile was upset when the car driven by Dougherty and containing three members of prominent Muskegon families, tried to pass it while enroute to a football game. Prosecutor Fred T. Miles intimated Dougherty would be charged with involuntary manslaughter.

The second complete test of all cattle in Shiawassee county for tuberculosis, has been completed and shows that only nine-tenths of one per cent of all the cattle were found to have been infected. In the two tests, the total paid in indemnities and salvage for slaughtered animals, as well as operating costs, has been $87,936. The state and federal governments have paid $69,122 to the cattle owners in indemnities and for salvage.

Stephen Madja, escaped double lifer from Marquette prison, was captured at Bay City. Instead of an expected battle, Madja calmly submitted to arrest. Madja was under sentence to life terms for the murder of Franklin E. Parner, a lumberman, and for the holdup of a gasoline filling station. Authorities claim that Madja has confessed to the murder of Henry Nellett, Merritt township farmer last month.

The new $3,500,000 federal hospital at Camp Custer, the neuropsychiatric institution to be known as hospital 100 in the chain of United States Veterans' bureau hospitals, and the largest one of its kind in the country, has been opened. Patients are to come from the eighth district, comprising Michigan, Wisconsin and Illinois, and it is expected that by January 1 the quota of 527 will have been reached.

W. C. Boman, club agent of Calhoun county, has received word from the boys' and girls' department at East Lansing that Edna Ossenheimer, of Tekonsha, has been chosen as all around state club girl from Michigan, and has been offered a trip to Chicago to the International Boys' and Girls' club congress, to be held from November 28 to December 7, with all expenses paid.

The most lenient landlord in the state was revealed when the Lansing Board of Education received a bill for one dollar from the State Conservation Department for rental of an entire city block, now occupied by the Central High school and library. The property belongs to the state, but has been leased to the city for 999 years for $1 a year. The board decided to pay the rent.

Pontiac juvenile officers took into custody Raymond Bell, 11-year-old son of Walter Bell, of Pontiac, who is said to have admitted that he threw the stone that fractured the skull and caused the death of Andrew Garner, living just west of Pontiac. Young Bell said the older boy took his bicycle away from him and he picked up a stone and threw it at him.

Establishment of a covered city market, by joint effort of city and county, has been agreed upon by the board of supervisors, who accepted a proposal to buy 230,000 square feet of land on Mill street, two blocks from the business center of Pontiac, and erect market sheds upon it. The cost is to be $75,000, of which the city will stand 40 per cent.

The will of the late Dudley W. Case has been filed in the probate court at Bay City. Case, who was a bachelor, left an estate of $80,000 and his will, which was drawn by himself, makes numerous legacies for charity. The Y. W. C. A., Woman's home and Mercy hospital were each given $3,000, while the local Salvation army is given $6,000.

The report of Secretary W. A. Crane, of the Calhoun Fair, shows total receipts and expenditures of $36,950.82. The improvements made on the grounds and buildings this year cost $7,214. There is an indebtednes of $3,000 at the banks. According to Crane's detailed figures, the fair cleared $5,800 this year.

The last concrete on M-15 between Holland and Grand Rapids has been poured. A large sink hole is now the only obstruction to a complete highway between the two cities.

Jay Bullock, bad check artist, who as a trusty made his get-away from the state prison Sept. 30, 1922, has been apprehended in Gelmi, Texas. Of all the prisoners who have escaped from Marquette in the last two years and a half, Bullock was the only one still at large.

H. Hart Anderson, 32 years old, Flint business man, was killed instantly when the auto in which he was riding crashed into a ditch three miles south of Ovid.

One body from the steamer Clifton, which sank in the storm of Monday, Sept. 22, was picked up by the steamer Pollock. The body was found four miles south of Thunder Bay Island, in Lake Huron.

Jerome Council, 45 years old, stock and bond salesman, who accidentally fell from a fourth story of the Harrington hotel at Port Huron, died as he was being made ready for an operation to remove a blood clot from his brain.

Prodigal With Tips

The prodigality of the Indian chieftain, Elk Ferman, is the wonder of all Italy. The Indian chieftain, observes the Montreal Herald, is traveling right through that country and wherever he stops he distributes most generally 100-lire notes (equal to $20) to passers-by and children. Imagine, then Naples, the land where urchins abound, and the Indian chieftain flinging these unheard-of tips in return for a bow. Naples will retain in its memory his visit, and the moment he landed was a red-letter day. Children vied with each other to perform the best somersaults. Now he has arrived in Florence, where he gave a stupendous dinner to many friends, after which he spoke very warmly of Signor Mussolini, whom he called "the great Italian chieftain."

Mending an Umbrella

Broken joints between the braces and ribs of an umbrella can be repaired with friction tape, says Popular Science Monthly. Simply put the end of the brace where it belongs and wind tightly with the tape in such a way that the action of the joint will not be interfered with. The umbrella then can be opened and closed without difficulty and the repair will be found to last surprisingly well.

Telephone in Tibet

For centuries everything in the nature of an invention or an innovation has been barred from Lhassa, the Indian capital. In fact there are very few instances of outsiders who have penetrated into the city, but there are evidences of an awakening manifest in the expressed desire for some of the conveniences of the occidental world. The telephone forced its way only a short time ago and at the present time natives are engaged, under the supervision of new world engineers, in extending the system so that in a short time there will be communication with what is known as the "Roof of the World."

This is a name given to a strong, warm wind and dry south or west wind descending the eastern slopes of the Rocky mountains into Montana and Wyoming, evaporating or melting the snow and bringing great relief in cold weather. Introducing Foreign Trees

In order to determine the suitability of foreign trees for introduction into this country, arboretums, in which groups of such "immigrant" species can be tried out, are being established by the United States forest service. At Wind River, 60 miles from Portland, Ore., an arboretum of this sort has now some 75 different alien species growing in small groups or clumps. These trees are carefully watched by members of the Pacific Northwest forest experiment station. Local records of climate and soil conditions are also maintained.

THE DOUBLE ALARM

THE BANKER'S CREED

I believe no man can be a good banker who is not first a good citizen—in all the term implies.

I believe good citizenship rests on ability and willingness to pull one's own weight—with capacity not only for sturdy self-help—but also due regard for the rights of others.

I believe that the more points at which we touch human nature and human interests the more alive we become and the longer we stay so.

I believe we cannot prosper by applying yesterday's obsolete methods to today—that each man is in some measure master of his community's destiny—that good government is a matter of business—not politics—that to assist in all material, moral and spiritual upbuilding, is the fundamental of enlightened selfishness.

I believe we need more men of every class who will appreciate this—who will stand for something besides themselves.

I believe in efficiency—service and fraternity—in a close-knit community of interests and hopes—in a sane, broad-visioned stand that shall make for the banker-citizen, the banker-business man, the banker-farmer and the banker-everybody.—State Bank Division, American Bankers Association.

BANKERS FOR BETTER FARMING

The Arkansas Bankers Association was recently presented with an object lesson on the value of good livestock and the worthlessness of the scrub stock common on too many farms. The Arkansas College of Agriculture had three cows comfortably quartered in a corner of the lobby at the convention hotel in Little Rock. One cow displayed was a purebred Jersey which made a profit of $85 last year, a second was a high grade cow, the product of a purebred bull and a scrub cow. She made a profit of $58. The third cow was a common scrub cow, declared to be a detriment to Arkansas farming.

Agricultural Producers Lose Fifteen Billions of Capital Investments During Harding-Coolidge Regime, Official Report Shows.

Washington, D. C.—Proof of the disastrous effects of the deflation of agricultural prices and values begun by the Republican Congress in 1920 and continued under the first year of the Harding-Coolidge administration is furnished in a recent official report from the Department of Agriculture, over which presides Secretary Wallace, himself a Republican and member of President Coolidge's cabinet.

The following is an extract from this report:

"As a means of gauging how the agricultural depression affected farm standards of living in the four years since 1919-1920, the departments points out that in this period wholesale prices of all commodities declined only 25 to 30 per cent., retail prices of 22 food articles declined only 20 to 25 per cent. and living costs declined only 13 to 15 per cent., while the farmer's income declined as much as 60 to 72 per cent. The department also notes that, besides suffering this great decline in current income, the farmers experienced a deflation of property values by which the worth of capital investments owned by farm operators dropped from $48,500,000,000 to $33,422,000,000, a shrinkage which would indicate that the farmers' share in the country's total agricultural property receded from 61 per cent. to 56 per cent."

The same article presents the result of a survey made of 16,000 owner-operated farms for 1923, showing that, allowing $870 for the value of the labor of the farmer and his family, the farm showed an average net balance to the farmer for the year of $270, or 1.5 per cent. on the average value of the farm real estate and its improvements, a "return barely sufficient to pay interest charges," and leaving practically nothing as a return on the farmers' own capital.

"VICTORY VOTE FOR DAVIS"

Democratic Women Start Work To Get Feminine Voters To Polls.

Washington, D. C.—A drive to reach the hundreds of thousands of women voters who have made no political affiliation and have never cast a vote for president, has been started by the Democratic National headquarters in Washington, D. C., under the direction of Mrs. Halsey W. Wilson, of New York, who has for two years been director of education and is widely known as an organizer and director of Schools of Democracy.

Advertising

Advertising should be the keynote of all business ventures. If you are interested in any kind of mercantile business or public sales service you can't do much without using printer's ink. This is exemplified in auctions. No farmer would expect for one minute to start in preparing for his sale unless he had made arrangements to post some bills and display an ad in the local paper. It is rather singular that merchants in a village will buy goods expecting to sell them and depending upon chance to get the public coming their way. Many a good merchant has failed because he could not get the public into his store after he had bought the goods. If the buying public did not know what he had of course they left him and went to some store where the proprietor had placed an announcement of prices and an invitation to come and investigate. There are firms in this village who are losing patronage every day because they do not feel it necessary to placc their ad before the people of the surrounding community. J. T. Northrup of Jackson advertising expert with the Smith Winchester Company recently gave an address before the Display Advertising Association of Cleveland Ohio and among other things he said; "The dealer who does not tie up with national newspaper advertising is losing money and he fails to secure the prestige that folks associate with stores featuring advertised goods.

Mammoth Preparations For Twenty Fifth "International" Show

The management of the International Live Stock Exposition is making great preparations for the staging of the quarter centennial celebration of this world famous educational institution at the Chicago Union Stock Yards, November 29th to December 6th. From advance indications, this will be the largest gathering of the agricultural interests of America ever brought together and many special occasions will mark this history making event. Every one interested in anyway in the basic industry should make a special effort to attend this great round up of the agrarian resources of the continent and enjoy a week of pleasure and profit at the metropolis.

In commemoration of the importance of this event, Congress, by special act, has authorized the United States Department of Agriculture to award official medals to all winners of first prizes and championships in the livestock competitions at the coming show. The Department itself will fill an entire exhibit hall with a display of its various lines of activity. President Coolidge and other high government officials are expected to be present during the Exposition.

The International Live Stock Exposition will be "international" in character as well as in name. In addition to the Canadian exhibits and delegations, several foreign countries are expected to be represented. Three famous livestock judges are coming from Great Britain and one from the Argentine to act as arbitors in the various contests among breeders and feeders. Brilliant evening entertainments will be held each night in the arena, featuring a society horse show and a program of exciting and entertaining events. There will be something of interest and value during the International for every member of the family, both urban and rural dwellers. Reduced railroad rates will be in effect during the week of the show.

A new family had just taken up their residence among us, which included a bright little boy of six years. When the school season opened he was assigned to the first grade, and the teacher after finding out his name, age residence, etc., asked him if he knew his catechism and who made him. The boy pleaded ignorance on the subject and the kindly teacher told him that God made him and everything else in the world, and if he was a good child God would watch over and protect him. The little fellow then asked; "Did God make you, and my father and mother, and my grandpa?" The teacher nodded assent. "We got a little baby brother down at our house, his name is Harold, and he only came last Sunday. Did God make him?" asked the boy. The teacher replied "Yes, God made him too." By this time the little chap became confused, and inquired; "If God made my little brother then why is my father going around giving away cigars?"

A Communication

Recently we received the following communication from a person who signs E. W. Cornell of Adrian Michigan, and we neither know the writer and never have heard of the same, but we anticipate the aim is to discuss the School Amendment, also to warm up a little on the Protestant-Catholic program which most of us think we are more or less interested in:

"To the Editor:—

Referring to the public school amendment it should be remembered that because 'reading, riting and rithmatic' are helpful in religious effort, churches have been wont to establish week-day schools in connection with their frontier work but when those communities become able and disposed to furnish secular education at public expense, then why shouldn't all churches gladly acquiese? As a matter of fact, all but a very few do, and the spirituality of those who do seems to be at least on par with those who do not.

While among those who still insist on grinding out—so to speak—their own brand of sectarianism, are Seventh-day Advents, Mormons Jews, House of David and Mohammedans, yet German Lutherans and Roman Catholics are by far the most numerous, and if as claimed the person who as a child has been educated in a christian week-day school, makes the best citizen—then according to that theory those communities which have always had the influence of Parochial schools would have the lower type of citizenship.

However, the ancestors of many of those communities were foreign born and no doubt their descendants would also have been likewise in spirit but for some non-foreignizing influences which they came in contact with. In other words they became fused in the melting pot and lost all Old World identity. On the other hand it is safe to say that had their children grown up in a foreign language school or amid foreign traditions and ideals, no such an amalgamation would have taken place and to-day those communities would have been miniature duplicates of our large centers of population.

Segregated races and religions are sure to complicate our government problems, and especially where are strong foreign fellowship ties, alliances or allegiances, whether Protestant or Catholic and Parochial schools, like so many membership factories for converting raw material into religionists, offer the opportunity for numerical and financial support therefor. Even our pro-German scare at the outbreak of the World War came that way and was related to the 'Kaiser and God' nonsense."

Yours truly,
E. W. Cornell"

America Without Liberty Would Not be America at All

THERE is one thing more important than great cities and rich farms. It is the American Spirit. It is the spirit that threw off the shackles of tyranny and gave birth to the Republic.

The Spirit of America is the Spirit of Liberty. America without Liberty would not be America at all.

The founders of this Republic recognized the importance of Liberty when they laid the foundations of our present greatness.

The Constitution of the United States guarantees Freedom of Speech, Press, Religion and — EDUCATION.

This Freedom is now being challenged by an effort to abolish all private and church schools.

The School Amendment is contrary to the Spirit of America.

It will not be approved by any man or woman who loves America and its ideals.

State Wheat King Crowned For 1924

With a record of having produced more than 4,000 bushels of exceedingly high grade wheat, Ralph Arbogast, of Union City, in Branch County, is being hailed as Michigan's wheat king for 1924. Those familar with agricultural conditions over the state are convinced that Arbogast raised more good wheat than any other man in the state.

Eighty eight acres of Red Rock the well known variety developed by the late Professor F. A. Spragg of the M. A. C. crops staff, were included in Arbogast's wheat acreage, twelve acres more being planted in an experiment with a new bald red wheat which is under trial at the Agricultural College. Forty acres of the Red Rock yielded 47 bushels per acre, another 40 acres producing 37.7 bushels to the acre.

The wheat, according to H. C. Rather, secretary of the Michigan Crop Improvement Association and extension specialist at M. A. C. was all of good quality, weighing more than 60 pounds per bushel, being bright in color, and showing entire freedom from rye, cockle chess and mixtures or weeds of any kind.

This exceptional wheat growing performance is said to be the result not only of the favorable season but also of Mr. Arbogast's cropping system, in which alfalfa and clover play an important part. A liberal use of acid phosphate and the use of pure seed of the most productive varieties are other reasons given for the Branch County man's success.

Name Judges For State Apple Show

Prominent horticulturists from other states have been named to serve as judges at the Third annual Michigan Apple Show, which is to be held in Grand Rapids December 2 to 5. Professor J. H. Gourley, chief of the Department of Horticulture at the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, Wooster Ohio will be one of the judges. Prof. Gourley judged in 1923 and exhibitors express pleasure at his return for this year's show.

Prof. J. H. Waring, of the Department of Horticulture at the Pennsylvania State College, will be another out of the state judge for the show.

She Changed Her Mind

We read a newspaper story of a young woman who went into a barber shop to have her hair bobbed. There were several customers ahead of her and she had to wait. After a while she stepped to a mirror, took out the hairpins and began to brush her hair fondly. The tears gathered in her eyes, and before long she sank into a chair with a sob. The barber asked her what the matter was and she said that she had come to have her hair bobbed, but that she couldn't bear to lose it.

"Well, why don't you keep it, then?" asked the man with the scissors.

"Because my friends have had their hair bobbed and they say that I must have mine bobbed too, and that I am all out of style with long hair."

"Well, if I were in your place I would have my hair the way I wanted it. Let the other girls do the same, and when they talk to you don't listen to them. I don't make anything by giving you this advice, but all the same I would have a mind of my own about my hair if I were a girl."

"That's just what I will do," said the girl and she reached for her hairpins. Soon she went out of the shop with her hair on her head a happy expression on her face.

There is something funny about this story, and something not so funny. That girl showed weakness when she allowed her friends to talk her into something that was bound to make her unhappy; and she showed some strength of mind when she decided to follow her own wishes. We only hope that after the inevitable interview with "the girls," she did not come back to the barber with her mind changed again.

Every girl ought to do her own thinking. She ought to have a will of her own. Of course, it is possible for someone to say that stubborness is a very unpleasant trait; but we are not talking about that. Between extremes there is generally a lot of room and there is here. She is weak and childish who cannot think out her own problems and stand by the solution to which she has come, without being influenced by the light pleas or the ridicule of her companions. We often hear it said that it is a woman's privilege to change her mind. But the less said about this the better. We do not esteem highly those who change their minds. This is the cold fact. And now that women are educated and are coming into all sorts of business and professional life, they are disposed to ask no favors, but are willing to meet all the tests of life on equal terms with men. Indeed, they are more than willing to do this, for every handicap implies inferiority, and this the girls of today are not conceding.

PRIMARY SCHOOL MONEY IN DANGER

PROPOSED INCOME TAX WOULD ADD TO SCHOOL TAX BURDEN OF PEOPLE

WILL INJURE FIFTY COUNTIES

Father of Primary Fund Warns that Railroads will Escape Tax for School Purposes

(By Sybrant Wesselius)
(Father of Primary School Fund)

Lansing, Mich.—The primary school money, the fund which I created as railroad commissioner under former Gov. Pingree, is threatened today if the proposed income tax amendent carries at the polls November 4. It is my opinion, as well as the opinion of the attorney general and the superintendent of public instruction, that this fund will be virtually wiped out if the proposed income tax amendment is adopted. The primary school money fund is the salvation today of about 50 counties in Michigan which are staggering along under as heavy a school burden as they can carry. To add to that burden the positive increase of $14.30 per child which would be thrown onto the communities to replace the primary fund if the proposed amendment carries, would be fatal to the hopes of those who are seeking a lower tax burden.

Champion of School Fund

I have for 20 years consistently fought any attempt to interfere with the distribution of, or the solidarity of, the primary school money. I shall continue to do so. My stand always has been to lessen the tremendous tax burdens we carry and it always will be. But if the voters think that by voting an income tax into the constitution they will lessen the tax burden, let them read carefully the proposed amendment. To vote for this income tax amendment is to vote to destroy the primary school fund.

I stand squarely for an income tax of some nature, but not for the one proposed. The great question today is to reduce taxes, rather than devise new schemes and methods to extort additional taxes. The whole subject of taxation in Michigan needs revision, in my mind. To inject an income tax, as proposed, in state affairs now, would not only complicate matters but would render the whole taxation problem uncertain in Michigan for two years to come.

Proposed Tax Surplusage

A gas tax is demanded and will be on the statute books soon. An income tax, as proposed, would be nothing but surplusage and would be fatal to the primary school fund, which is now fixed by constitutional provision. Passage of the proposed income tax might render that sacred constitutional provision entirely nugatory by destroying the possibility of fixing an equitable rate on those corporations now paying their part of the school burden at the rate of $14.30 per child.

Sponsors of the proposed amendment declare such an income tax would raise enough money to wipe out the annual state property tax. By wiping out the state property tax you automatically wipe out the means by which the primary school money is raised for it would remove at once the necessity of a state property tax, which is the means by which the railroads, telegraph and telephone companies are taxed, this tax going to make up the primary school money.

Sure to Increase Taxes

Look at your last tax receipt, or any of them for that matter, and see into what channels your tax money goes. Your school tax is many times the amount of the state tax. Your primary school money, if not collected from its present sources, will have to be taken from you, Mr. Voter. Do you want the additional tax passed into your school tax needs? Or shall the railroads continue to pay their just burden of the tax.

The proposed income tax amendment is designed, so its sponsors say, to make the rich folks pay their share of the taxes. But remember that while there are a few folks in Michigan who are rich, there are many times that number who are poor and they will suffer tremendously if the primary school fund is voted out of existence. The proposed income tax amendment will not reduce your taxes, remember that.

Regardless of all other inartistic and incomplete provisions of this proposed amendment, this fact is certain: the primary school money will not be collected from its present source if this amendment passes.

A vote against the income tax amendment is a vote to leave the primary school fund intact. Vote NO on this measure on Nov. 4.

FARMERS PAY TARIFF

Duty On Steel Costs Them $100,000,000 On Agricultural Implements.

New York.—High protective duties on steel, and unlawful combinations of manufacturers and sellers of agricultural machinery and implements have operated to increase the cost of this equipment on farms. H. E. Miles, chairman of the Fair Tariff League, a protectionist organization, is authority for the statement that the Republican tariff makes the "cost of farm implements at least 10 per cent. above honest protection and likely 15 per cent." He says that this excessive "protection" on steel adds a total of $100,000,000 a year to the prices farmers have to pay for their machines and implements.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

Study The Amendments

At the regular election Nov. 4 three amendments to our state constitution will be submitted to a vote of the people. We are pleased to give some explanation of the important changes involved.

INCOME TAX

The purpose and effect of this amendment is pretty clearly indicated in the text itself. It should be noted that such taxes will go into the general fund of the state and that the general property tax will be reduced accordingly. Unlike the income tax proposition which was defeated two or three years ago, and which provided simply that the legislature should have power to levy an income tax, this measure contains in itself all the important details, making rates and exemptions permanent, and taking the matter almost wholly out of the hands of the legislature.

NEW APPORTIONMENT PLAN

Amendment to Article V of the constitution dividing the state into senatorial and representative districts.

This amendment proposes a radical change in the time and method of dividing the state into senatorial and representative districts. The principal changes are as follows:

A new apportionment is to be made every eight years instead of every ten years as at present.

The apportionment will be based on the number of registered and qualified voters instead of on the total population as shown by the federal census.

The arrangement of the districts is entrusted to a board of three men (Sec. 3), and as in the case of the income tax, practically nothing will be left to the discretion of the legislature.

The effect will be that all aliens minors and persons who neglect to register as voters will be eliminated from the basis of apportionment On the present population basis these classes are all included; and as most of the aliens with thousands of their children are concentrated in the large cities, such cities would come in for a material loss in the apportionment. This, we take it, is one of the purposes of the sponsors of this amendment.

PUBLIC SCHOOL AMENDMENT

Amendment to Article XI of the constitution, adding two sections thereto.

Section 16. From and after August 1st, 1925, all children residing in the state of Michigan between the ages of seven years and sixteen years shall attend a public school until they have graduated from the eighth grade.

Section 17. The legislature shall enact all necessary legislation to render said section 16 effective.

The effect of this amendment will be to do away with all church and private schools below the ninth grade as the pupils now attending such would be required to attend the public schools. Church and private schools would not be specifically prohibited, but the effect would be the same as if they were.

Farms Miss Bet On Beet Factory Lime

That Michigan farmers will miss a good bet if they fail to make use of the large deposits of sugar beet factory lime which are available in all beet growing sections of the state, is the opinion of Dr. M. M. McCool, head of the soils department at the M. A. C.

These "sugar beet" lime desposits, which may be seen around all sugar factories, are usually available at little or no cost, the factory managers in most cases being glad to have the by product hauled away. And yet soil experts assert that the lime is of very good quality for agricultural use, making a cheap yet satisfactory material for application on acid soils.

"The sugar beet factory lime runs about seventy per cent in composition," says Dr. McCool. "It is therefore advisable to apply about twenty five per cent more of it per acre than one would of ground limestone.

"Many sections of the state need lime badly. The first thing is to determine whether or not the soil is acid, and then make arrangements to secure lime from some nearby sugar factory, where this is possible."

All the sugar beet factory lime is used for agricultural purposes in France, Germany and Denmark, according to McCool, who returned recently from an agricultural inspection trip through Europe.

The fall is, of course, a good time to apply the lime. There are said to be thousands of tons of the "factory" lime in the state, and many farmers are making plans to utilize the source of cheap material

An Old Timer

One of the oldest schools in Michigan at present is Spring Arbor Academy in Jackson county which was opened in May 1873 as the present school, bnt dates back considerably further than that. It fact it antedates Hillsdale College by a number of years. The original school was opened when this part of Michigan was quite wild and woolly. President Fairfield was the first executive of the school way back in the 50's. Hillsdale was then a young and growing community and very ambitious for some kind of a public institution. Fairfield was induced to remove his school to the latter place and it is claimed he worked considerably under cover in stealing the charter away from Spring Arbor.

At all events the school went to Hillsdale and became the father of the present institution. Most of the students who attended Spring Arbor Seminary in the early 50's are gathered to their fathers altho' a very few remain to relate the circumstance.

The Catholic-Lutheran aggregation are as usual indulging in scare heads, and putting out literature warning voters if the Parochial Amendment should become a law this school as well as hundreds of others, will have to go out of commission, and a number of other unique vaudeville stunts calculated to scare timid woman voters into cataleptics. Most of their propaganda is pure bunk. The present School Amendment has no such object. It concerns the public schools of Michigan alone and all private schools will be left to their own discretion as before.

Western Normal News

Many Western Normal Alumni in this section of the state will be back in Kalamazoo this week end to celebrate the annual Homecoming Day of their Alma Mater Saturday. According to all announcements it will be the greatest day of the sort that Western State Normal has ever observed.

The big feature of the day will be a football game between Coach Martineau's Kalamazoo Normal team and the Oshkosh (Wis.)Normal, the champion among teachers' Colleges in Illinois, Minnesota and Wisconsin. Preceeding the football game at 1:30 will be the annual fall games between the Freshmen and the Sophs, and following the football game will be a huge banquet for students, alumni and other visitors. A dancing party will close the day. Various organizations will hold reunions. From early morn until late evening the campus will be alive with the greatest crowd it has ever seen including the alumni, the more than 2,000 students and their relatives and friends.

The former students will see two buildings not on the campus when they were in college—the new library, just completed, and the men's gymnasium, rapidly nearing completion.

Mr. O. B. Perrine,
Sec. Independent Voters Committee,
Hillsdale, Michigan.

Dear Sir:

Answering your request for an opinion as to the counting of sticker ballots.

It is the opinion of this office that if slips are pasted in more than one party column in the proper position opposite the designation of the office, which in your case would be the office of sheriff all votes should be counted for that candidate.

There is no legal reason why voters who desire to vote the democratic ticket or any other party ticket may not vote for the sticker candidate using the slips for that purpose, in as much as the name is not printed on the ballots anywhere, the voter has the privilege of placing it on his own party ticket.

Yours very truly,

It LaFollette Should Win

Even among the super-heated radicals, there are doubtless few who expect Senator LaFollette to be elected. But it is interesting to speculate on what would happen in the event of the success of the "Progressive" movement.

That movement is made up of the most diverse elements imaginable. A dozen schools of political and economic thought are represented in it. All would clamor for immediate recognition, and insist that their particular nostrums be forthwith administered to the country with a government spoon. Not since Babel has there been anything like it would be. As a circus it would have everything, but the price of admission would break the taxpayers.

There would be Socialists who want to divide up everything, and otherwise hasten the millennium; red flag followers who want the modern Russian system of government installed here; I. W. W.'s clamoring for one big union, opposed by the Gompers's crowd of organized labor; followers of Henry George who want all taxes assessed against land, and farmers who would not stand for that, the foes of the Constitution, and minorites who feel safer under the protection of that bill of rights. There would be more nuts, cranks, wheels, and bolts than could be used in any machine.

The one state issue that appears to have interested more citizens in the current campaign is that of taxes and how each individual property owner has been affected by the conduct of public business during the past three years, so far as Michigan is concerned. A few concrete instances, gathered at random, gives a complete answer, also tells how anyone that may desire can look into his own affairs and prove that the conclusions are not a myth.

In Vassar township, Tuscola county, resides Henry Horning, where he owns the W. 1-2 of n. e. 1-4 of sect. 33, 80 acres, same being on the tax rolls for an assessed valuation of $800. In 1922 he paid taxes for state purposes of $3.63, in 1923 the amount was $2.93, while in 1924 it was further reduced to $2.63, or a total saving of approximately 30 per cent since Gov. Groesbeck became chief executive of the state of Michigan.

Then over in Juniata township, Tuscola county, Chas. A. Humes owns the w. 1-2 of the s. e. 1-4 of Sect. 20, same being on the tax rolls for $5,600. Here the tax in 1922 was $25.42, in 1923 it was $20.50 and in 1924 it had been reduced to $18.70.

In each instance there had been no change in assessment valuation during the three years and the amounts mentioned are for state taxes only, aside from what may have been collected for local purposes, county or school.

Each individual property owner in Michigan can look back over his tax receipts for the past three years, or since the Groesbeck administration began to function, note the amount paid on any separate piece of property on which the local assessor has not raised the valuation, and prove for himself or herself, that the property tax in this state has been cut approximately 30 per cent since 1922.

THOUSANDS of users have wondered at the quickness of the action of Resinol Ointment and Soap. The answer is that it is not a surface treatment, but one that reaches the depths of the pores and attacks the source of the disorder, starting the healing right.

The first touch relieves the itching, burning and soreness and a few days' persistent use rarely fails to clear away the trouble.

When the skin is once restored to its normal condition, the daily use of Resinol Soap is generally sufficient to keep it healthy. Ideal for the complexion—unsurpassed for the bath and shampoo. Ask your druggist what he knows about the Resinol products.

Unprecedented Drought

All records for drought were broken in western Washington, the area between the Cascade mountains and the Pacific ocean, in the weather year ending September 1. This region generally is associated with heavy rainfall, but in the last year only 22.79 inches of rain were measured by the weather bureau. Records dating from 1884 make the average annual moisture 40.79. The banner year for rain was 1897, when the fall was 52.76.

Old-timers commonly assert that the rainfall is diminishing as the forests that once covered western Washington are being cut away.

JOE'S CONFESSION

SYNOPSIS.—Ellen and Joe Latimer, orphans, without means, make their home with their Aunt Elsie, at Port Washington, small New York town. Ellen is studying art, her expenses being paid by Mrs. Sewall Rose, girlhood friend of her mother. Mrs. Rose invites Ellen to a Thanksgiving house party and the girl is delighted. On the way from the station to Mrs. Rose's Ellen rides with a remarkably attractive young woman and a much older man. She takes them for father and daughter, but they are introduced as Mr. and Mrs. Josselyn. Ellen does not "fit in" with the younger members of the party, and is miserable. Leaving for her home next morning, Ellen meets Gibbs Josselyn, son of her fellow guest. He has disapproved of his father's wedding and is not on speaking terms with the couple. Declining to stay at Mrs. Rose's, Gibbs drives Ellen to the station. They miss the train and Gibbs undertakes to drive the girl to Port Washington. Their auto is wrecked. Ellen is hurt, but it is not thought to be serious, and she and Gibbs part. He has been attracted by the girl, and she by him. Ellen's injury proves to be severe, and for months she is an invalid. Recovered, she is taking part in the town's Memorial day festivities when Gibbs Josselyn, on a yachting trip with a friend, George Lathrop, meets her again. The feeling of mutual attraction has strengthened since they parted. They leave Port Washington man and wife. Nearly seven years later Gibbs and Ellen Josselyn, with their son Tommy, come back from France to New York. They are welcomed by Josselyn, Senior, and his beautiful wife, Lillian, the old ill-feeling forgotten. Gibbs and Ellen make their home with the elder Josselyns, at Wheatley Hills, just outside New York. Gibbs idles, ostensibly looking for a studio in which to assume his portrait painting. Ellen sees that her husband is attracted by his youthful stepmother's beauty. Joe Latimer, Ellen's brother, is tentatively engaged to marry Harriet, George Lathrop's daughter. Gibbs secures a studio. The rift between the younger Josselyns widens. On Lillian's part it is more a flirtation than anything serious. Joe confides to Ellen that he has wronged a girl at Port Washington and feels he should marry her, giving up Harriet Lathrop.

She had won him with the oldest and simplest method. Lillian might have said that there are many tools for the opening of a man's heart, but flattery is the handle that fits them all. She had flattered him so steadily yet so subtly that before many weeks Gibbs had come unconsciously to hunger for the sweetness of her glances and her words, had known that no least charm or gift of his was unappreciated. She had told him that there were beauties in his hand, in the crisp curve of the silver hair from his forehead, she had said that there was sometimes a look in his eyes that made a little boy of him again. She had a hundred names for him; he was "her firebrand," "her hawk," he "frightened" her, he was "cruel" to her. Sometimes she would thrill him from head to heels by raising piteous eyes to his face and half-murmuring, half-whispering:

"Don't—don't look at me so, today, Gibbs. I'm sad enough without that terrible look of yours. It makes me a naughty child again, Gibbs—I'm afraid of myself when your eyes say things like that!"

It was no longer play-acting for Gibbs, although there was no real tragedy in it for him yet, there was nothing but excitement and suspense, and thrilled anticipation. He did not definitely plan any future for their love; perhaps he did not even call it love. He was carried off his feet by the atmosphere of adulation in which he was floating, and Lillian's extraordinary physical charm had bound him tightly in her toils.

With Lillian, too, the game had progressed beyond its calmly defined limits. She was absolutely incapable of love, as she herself knew. She had never loved any human being but herself in all her life, although she had cultivated in herself many of the soft and endearing appearances of love. The sex sense, also, was strong in her, she had more than her share of unfailing instinct in this respect, and perhaps the only times when she was truly happy were when she knew herself to be drawing steadily toward her some new admirer.

She loved the preliminaries, the first full, innocent look into a man's eyes, the first significant phrase that brought to his consciousness the startling knowledge: "Why, I am I, and you are you!" She knew the pretexts by which he would manage to send her a first note; she knew just what to say and what to imply in her first answer, and that he would keep it, and read it a hundred times.

To have her handsome son-in-law at her feet was a delicious experience for Lillian. Like Gibbs himself, she was always conscious of the exquisite setting afforded by the "Villino dell' Orto," and of the dramatic elements of the situation. But of late there had been a new possibility in her thoughts.

She had been intensely surprised at the experience of Gibbs' studio tea. He had sent out perhaps a hundred and fifty invitations, and Lillian, working over the list of guests with Ellen and himself on a summer morning, had been astonished at his self-confidence. She had not known that he could claim so many of the city's distinguished men and women as his friends. Her own social experiences had been marked with extraordinary successes, the Josselyn name had been a powerful "Open, Sesame," but she knew in her own soul that there had been failures, too, snubs and coldnesses, there were persons who never had accepted the second Mrs. Josselyn, and who never would.

She said to herself that Gibbs' so-called friends would not come to his tea; but they did come, and their attitude of affectionate admiration toward him was not lost upon Lillian.

Hitherto her position as the wife of a prominent and rich man had satisfied her. She had never outlived her first sense of triumph in achieving it. Only a year or two before she had assured Lindsay Pepper that she was not inclined to change it for any charms that youth and love could offer. But now she perceived new heights. Gibbs Josselyn's wife would have the world at her feet.

Lillian concerned herself with no details. She left those to others. She simply dwelt upon the thought: Gibbs Josselyn's wife would have the world at her feet.

Ellen had another trouble in these days. This was a trouble real and vital enough, for it touched Joe. She had taken the sisterly liberty, on a wet October Sunday, to ask him if he and Harriet were still good friends.

"Harriet isn't well, Joe. And her father said something, last week, about taking her to England for the winter. You—you know how I feel about her? I would be so sorry to have things go wrong just because you hadn't the courage—" her voice faltered nervously. "It isn't the money, is it, Joe?" she added.

He did not answer. He was standing by the fireplace looking somberly down at the blazing logs. Tommy had been with them, his violin was on the piano, and Ellen still sat on the piano bench, her hands idle in her lap, her anxious eyes on her brother.

"So often it's just the little things that go wrong, Joe," she said. "And then years later people say, 'If only I'd realized that that was my opportunity—and that it wasn't coming back!'—"

"It's not that—" Joe began huskily, and was silent. Ellen waited expectantly, his gravity troubled her. Surely there was nothing seriously wrong? Perhaps Joe had discovered the secret that Harriet had kept from him: that as her mother's heiress she was far richer than her father was. But no, Joe cared too little for money, either way, to let so mythical a thing as a great fortune influence him.

She looked at his troubled face anxiously, waiting in some perplexity to hear him speak.

"Ellen," he said suddenly, and somewhat awkwardly, "I'll tell you about it. I'm—I'm engaged to another girl!"

"You what?" his sister asked, blankly.

"I'm trying to tell you that there's another girl—a girl—who—well, she has a right!"

He flushed like a girl himself as he spoke, and avoided her eyes. Scarlet leaped to Ellen's cheeks, and she felt her mouth turn dry.

"Joe! What are you saying! Joe—you can't mean—"

"Yes—yes—yes!" he answered, with a sort of feverish shame. "I do mean that! I'm ashamed to look at you, Ellen—but it's true."

His boyish, rough head went suddenly down on his arm which was resting on the mantel. Ellen stood looking at him, horror and incredulity in her eyes. For a few minutes there was utter silence in the music room. Then in a sorrowful whisper Ellen said, as if to herself:

"Joe! My little brother!"

Standing at the low mantel, Joe did not move, and again there was silence. Again Ellen broke it.

"I always thought it was Harriet," she said sadly, "and I think Harriet did, too!"

"It always was Harriet," Joe said violently. "This—this other thing never had anything to do with that! I've always loved Harriet, always will! There isn't an hour of the day that I'm not thinking of her, thinking what it would mean to have her for my wife! Her father's always been a father to me, Ellen, I couldn't love my own father more! He's counting on it, I know that. He talks to me about what he wants done with the place—about her and her mother—I'm not blind! I know what it means, and then I think of the other—my God, I haven't been able to sleep nights, thinking!"

"Who is she?" Ellen asked sharply, after a pause.

"She's just a—just a girl in the village," he answered, rousing himself from dark musing. "You never met her—they've only lived there two years. It was before I ever thought of marrying any one, Harriet was in college, you were in France—it isn't very easy to explain it to you! I knew it wasn't real love, all the time—and yet I couldn't end it all, somehow—!"

"Was it real—with her?" Ellen asked, as he hesitated. Joe flushed deeply.

"I guess so!" he answered, embarrassed.

"She—she wasn't that sort of a girl?" Ellen asked.

"Oh, my God, no! She hadn't ever had another man friend—she wasn't ever allowed to go to the village dances, even! She—she was a good little girl." Joe sank his head on his arms again.

"You didn't promise marriage, Joe?" Ellen, who was thinking hard, asked anxiously.

"What do you think I am!" he answered, impatiently. "Of course I asked her to marry me!"

Ellen flushed with shame. She had no previous knowledge by which to gauge this affair; she had no idea of the rules. Vague memories of situations in novels drifted through her mind; they all seemed hideous, remote, they seemed to have nothing to do with her good, honest, splendid little brother.

"And she wouldn't?" he asked, uncertainly.

"She—she didn't want to talk about it at all. We never talked about it. I suppose that sounds odd, but it's true. She said that she would never drag me down—or something like that! The—the thing was that when she learned that—when I told her that it was Harriet—then that was the end, for her. I don't think she ever wanted to see me again. She—she acted a little crazy!"

"Oh, poor child!" Ellen said, wincing at the thought. "She didn't know Harriet, then?"

"Well, yes, she did—all along, in a way. But she seemed to think that we—belonged to each other—in a way—"

Ellen had dropped into a chair, her eyes were somber.

"Joe—she will spoil your life!"

"Has," he amended simply.

"For this little village girl," Ellen summarized bitterly, in a whisper, "you may lose the woman you really love—your whole future! Joe—Joe—Joe! How could you?"

The man was miserably silent. After a moment Ellen spoke again:

"Who knows about it, Joe?"

"Her mother knows. Nobody else! The mother is a decent sort, the only decent one in the family. She hasn't been unkind to her. Poor girl, nobody could make her feel any worse!"

"Oh, dear—!" Ellen's tone was utterly discouraged and despairing.

"She says that she can never marry now," Joe pursued, gloomily, "says she could never look a daughter of her own in the face and tell her! My God, I don't know what to do about it! I've walked the floor, thinking of it, many and many a night!"

Ellen looked up with sudden hope.

"But how do you know that she was good, Joe? Mightn't she be just telling you so—" Her voice lost confidence at his look. "No?" she said, subsiding.

"She's not that kind!"

"Well," Ellen said, feebly, "if she doesn't want you to marry her; if you've offered, and she has refused—I don't see that you can do anything more about it! It isn't even as if you had met Harriet afterward—you always knew, and always loved, Harriet, and you—you owe something to Harriet!"

"I owed something to Harriet," Joe admitted, heavily.

"You mean—that you can't ask Harriet, now?" Ellen said, with quick concern and disappointment.

"Well, can I?"

"No, I suppose not!" she conceded, unwillingly. "She would have to know!" For a moment she pondered, with a thoughtful face, then suddenly she brightened. "Joe!" she said, "why don't you go and tell George the whole story? He's so broadminded—and he loves you both—loves us all! If he wanted to take Harriet abroad again, to have some time elapse, at least he'd understand why you couldn't ask her now."

"I—I thought of that!" Joe said, somewhat sharing her confidence.

"Perhaps he'd think it best never to tell Harriet at all," Ellen mused, half aloud. "There must be thousands of men who never tell their wives something like that."

"Wouldn't you mind that?" Joe asked, giving her a shrewd glance.

"I? Oh, I don't know. But, Joe," his sister protested quickly. "It's all wrong, anyway. Whatever we decide, someone's going to be unhappy!" And she fell to thinking, her mind still shocked and confused, her breath coming fast. She felt the utter tensity of the situation; it might mean Joe's misery or happiness for life.

"Joe, dear, I'm sorry!" she said suddenly, coming to his side to lay her arm about his shoulder. "I think I'm sorrier than I ever was before in my life. I wish it might never have been, Joe! I'm sorry for this other girl, too; but there's no way of escaping it, anyway. It's the one thing women can't do, and no matter how hard you try to patch it up, women have got to pay the full price. If she grew up in the village, she must have known what she was throwing away. Dearest boy, I hope I'm advising you rightly. But I think you must do what's best for Harriet, now. She loves you, and you and George must decide how much she shall know. I think he'll forgive you. Men—men feel differently from women about that!"

"Just telling you has made me feel happier than I have for weeks, Ellen!" he said with a long boyish breath of relief. She kissed him, in her grave, motherly fashion, on the forehead, and sighed deeply, with her arms still locked about his neck.

"Will you look at the lovers?" Lillian's good-humored voice said, from the doorway. She and Gibbs were standing there, Gibbs with impatient and disapproving eyes. But Ellen was too full of the thought of Joe's tragedy to notice him.

"I've been hearing Joe's confession!" she said, nervously smiling.

"And I feel as lighthearted as What's-her-name walking home beneath the murmuring pines and the hemlocks!" Joe said.

Ellen knew that his tone was happier than his mood. Yet confession had relieved him of the burden. She bore it now; it was a weight against her heart for many days.

CHAPTER VIII

The first heavy rainstorm of the season came early in November, upon a certain Wednesday afternoon. Indian summer was all over now, autumn was gone with its blaze of leaves. Branches about the "Villino dell' Orto" were bare, and the earth under them was packed with the sodden masses that had been a glory of red and gold a few weeks before. In the still, thin air, smoke from wood and leaf fires rose like incense over Wheatley Hills, the mornings were darker, and now for several days the air had been cold, and the sky hung low and dark. Wakening on this particular morning, Ellen, whose constant vigils were beginning to tell upon her health, said to herself wearily that it would be Thanksgiving in two weeks, and wondered where the day would find her. Aunt Elsie had suggested that she and Tommy come to Port Washington for the noonday dinner, going back to Wheatley Hills for the more formal event of the evening. Gibbs, when she mentioned it this morning, approved the idea, saying that he wanted her to do what pleased her best, and he knew that she would really prefer the home day to the long, five-hour strain of "Parsifal," to which he and his father and Lillian meant to go, at the Metropolitan. Ellen's face darkened visibly.

"But if you prefer the opera, why, come with us!" Gibbs hastened to say, politely.

His wife did not answer. She did not believe his father, who was not very well, would go to the opera. He had expressed a positive dislike for German opera. But Gibbs would buy a third seat, and on Thanksgiving morning there would be the usual hideous pretense of his and Lillian's regret, their offer to give the whole thing up, their departure together in the car——

But there was nothing to say. She was dressed now, and Tommy had come leaping into the room, spilling a box of tacks as he came, and shouting gaily that Lizzie said it—felt—like—snow!

"If you're going to that dinner tonight, Gibbs, do you want me to pack anything?"

"Oh, no, thanks! I've everything at the studio. I think I'll come back late, I'll go in the roadster. I hate to keep Torrens in town loafing about waiting for me, even if dad and Lillian don't want the big car!"

> Here we have the well-known and justly famous triangle. Where does Lillian's husband come in?

Introduced Politics

According to the Los Angeles Times, recent visitors to the Solomon Islands, in the south Pacific, have brought back a story about the introduction of party politics into a picturesque island called Madang. Under the inspiration of some forward-looking citizens who had acquired contact with American politics during their residence in Hawaii, the population has ranged itself into two parties, designated the republicans and the democrats. The republicans live in the hill country, are unsympathetic to white people, and cling fiercely to their own ancient lights. The democrats, who inhabit the coastal districts, have adopted many of the laws and customs of the white traders and missionaries.

May in Olden Times Really Merry Month

In bygone times each town and village in England chose its fairest daughter to be queen of the May. Games were played, archery contests were held, and boisterous "hobby-horse" races run. In course of time May day became consecrated to Robin Hood and Maid Marian, for it was on a May day that the famous outlaw of the greenwood met his death.

The Morris dance was another popular revel held on May day, the dancers all being dressed in fancy costumes, decorated with jingling bells. Among them was a fellow known as the lazy man, who was the only one who never uttered a word during the frolics. Perhaps he was supposed to be too lazy even to speak. Another dancer, garbed as a jester, went among the spectators with a bladder or an eel skin and a soup ladle, the latter for taking up the collection. The dancers never forgot this part of the ceremony.

Gradually May day lost its distinctive features as a time of great jollification, but for long the chimney-sweeps celebrated the day by a little ceremony of their own. They would go around in companies, with one man in each party arrayed in a framework of leaves and flowers. This quaint masquerader was known as Jack-in-the-Green.

Nowadays in England the celebration of May day is left chiefly to labor demonstrations, while a few beribboned horses strive heroically to keep alive the gay traditions of the merrie month.

Gas Lamps Going

The old lamplighter may soon be another memory of the past in San Francisco. City officials are yielding to the importunings of the ultra-modernists and gas lamps are being removed to make way for electricity.

Iowa like all other states in the union, has two men in the U. S. Senate and one of these senators is a fellow named Brookhart who has won the opposition of the corporations by his friendliness to the public. Brookhart is a Republican and the other day Republican Brookhart demanded that the Republican party should select a substitute for Dawes, Vice presidential nominee, and therefore it appears that influential Republicans who put principle above party, realize that Dawes, the wealthy banker, can never represent the general public and so of course, they lend their support to LaFollette and the 3rd party.

Keep an Experienced Man in Congress

If You Believe in Coolidge, Send Him a Supporter —Not an Opponent

Congressman A. B. Williams has ably represented this district in Congress for the past year. He has gathered experience and standing. If all other conditions were equal, it would be better, wouldn't it, to keep an experienced man on the job than to change to a man without experience?

Mr. Williams believes in and supports President Coolidge and the Republican platform. Friendship for Coolidge, and desire for a Coolidge administration can best be expressed at the polls November 4 by voting to continue at Washington a congressman who will work WITH Coolidge, rather than sending there a man who will work AGAINST him.

Isn't that good sense?

Mr. Williams has taken unusually high rank during his year of service in Congress. He has rendered valuable service to the district and nation. He has sought the advice and heard the wishes of the people of the district irrespective of class or politics. He is for economy and common sense in public affairs. His plan of farm relief has become the national doctrine of his party.

Good national policy, good public service, sound business sense, all point to this duty—

Vote for
Arthur B. Williams for Congress

We hear a great deal these days concerning tariff as a protection to the farmer but few of us really know that in the preparation of the list a nicety of judgment is necessary to determine just the right articles which most concern the consumer. Following is a list of articles which the farmer uses that are on the free list: Hemp, binder twine, building brick and stone. leather harness and saddlery, coffee, cultivators, and all agricultural implements, gunpowder. kerosine and by-products, sawed Lumber, phosphates raw hide, timber, sawed, hewed or round, threshing machines, tea, wagons, carts, tar, pitch, camphor, cement, coal, barbed wire cream separators. drills. oil meal guano. Following articles are protected by tariff: Apples, bacon barley, cherries, buckwheat, cattle, cheese, eggs, goats. hams, hay honey, horses, nuts, mustard, oats raisins, rice, poultry, all kinds of seeds, sheep, tobacco, vinegar, wheat, wool, molasses, milk in any form, oranges, lard. From a casual glance it will be seen that practically everything the farmer has to sell is protected, so there is no danger of foreign competition while the goods he buys are subject to competition.

Results of Election

The great Republican landslide touched Hillsdale county with a heavy hand on Tuesday and the results of balloting at the various precincts were really surprising The smallest majority for a Republican was for Prosecutor Riggs who only received 943 more than his Democratic opponent, John Fitzsimmons. Whether this is an indication of rising popularity on the part of Mr. Fitzsimmons we are not prepared to say, but for a lone Democratic pilgrim lost in the Republican desert we'd call it a good run. The other Democrats just peeped once and—died on first—so to speak.

Coolidge & Dawes majority in the county was 4468.

For Governor, the Democrats of the county stole a march on Groesbeck and gave Frensdorf a majority of 2674.

Following are the figures for Adams township:

For Sheriff—
Midgley (r) 241; Baker (d) 160
Kerr [independent) 74.
For Prosecutor—
Riggs (r) 241, Fitzsimmons (d) 259
For Drain Commissioner—
Bates [r) 239; Guy Stone (d) 159
For State Representative—
Clancy (r) 343; Nevin (d) 127
Cooiidge & Dawes 337; Davis & Bryan 104
For Governor—
Frensdorf, (d) 385; Groesbeck (r) 108. Much of Groesbeck's opposition in this precinct undoubtedly arose from his kicks on the gas tax last summer. Granges and farm organizations generally cudgeled the Governor severely.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

British Conservatives Win Big Victory—Laborites and Liberals Beaten.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

RAMSAY MACDONALD and his Labor government went down to defeat in the British parliamentary elections, and the Conservatives won a great victory. They have a decisive majority in the house of commons, and at this writing it is presumed that Stanley Baldwin, leader of the party, will return to the office of prime minister. Mr. MacDonald was re-elected, however, and it is said he and his cabinet may carry on until the Conservatives defeat them in the house.

The Liberals were badly beaten, losing a lot of seats, and it is believed they will go out of existence as a separate party. Former Prime Minister Lloyd George was easily victorious over his Labor opponent, but Mrs. Asquith, leader of the other wing of the Liberals, was beaten by Mitchell, Laborite, in Paisley, which constituency broke its Liberal record of 92 years. This was a severe blow to the party and likely will result in driving its left wing into the ranks of Laborites. Other prominent men who won seats were Winston Churchill, Austen Chamberlain, C. P. Trevalyan, Attorney General Hastings, Philip Snowden, Sir J. A. R. Marriott and Sir Hamar Greenwood. Of the fourteen woman candidates only four were elected—Lady Astor, Conservative; Miss Wilkinson, Labor, Mrs. Philipson and the duchess of Athol. The gains by the Conservatives were general throughout the country and even where they failed to elect their candidates they largely increased their vote.

On this side of the Atlantic, the Canadians were especially interested in the result of the British elections, and the victory of the Conservatives caused them to rejoice. This is because they expect a return of the McKenna duties by which Canada benefited greatly, and also because they think a policy of imperial preferences will be adopted, which will help the Dominion.

If the Laborites' defeat can be laid to any one thing, it is the fact that they had been showing too much favor to Soviet Russia.

SENATOR BORAH and his committee went right along probing into campaign contributions and expenditures, despite the fact that the campaign was closing. It is difficult to write about that investigation without voicing disgust at the trivialities on which time is wasted and at the pettifogging tactics of many of those taking part in the "exposures." Part of the committee returned to Chicago and there heard, among others, W. V. Hodges of Denver, treasurer of the Republican national committee. Being questioned about his connection with a sugar company and his advocacy of the present sugar tariff, he reiterated his belief that the tariff is all right, and produced letters to prove that this view was shared by Senators Ladd and Frazier of North Dakota and Senator Wheeler of Montana, third party men. Mr. Hodges said that to date the national committee had received $2,750,000 and had collected $750,000 additional which had been returned to the states.

Before the Washington part of the committee Attorney Frank Walsh brought out various charges of bribery, coercion and the hiring of labor men to speak for Coolidge and Dawes, but showed nothing of especial importance except that L. K. Liggett, self-styled fiscal agent of the Republican party in Massachusetts, had written a letter to several chairmen stating there should be no limit to the size of contributions as "large contributions will be so divided as to meet the full observance of the statutes." The witness admitted the wording of the letter was unfortunate and that if he had known it would cause such a commotion he would not have sent it as written. He stated the plan was to accept large contributions, keep only $1,000, as limited by law, for the state campaign and turn the rest over to the national committee.

About the only result expected from the investigation is a report from the committee recommending that congress pass legislation putting a limit to national campaign funds, the maximum sum probably being fixed at $1,000,000 for any one party.

WITH General Feng Yu-hsiang in control of Peking, General Chang, his present ally, advancing toward that city from the north, and General Wu Pei-fu moving a considerable army against them along the road to Tientsin, the prospects for a great battle in the neighborhood of the capital were excellent. President Tsao Kun, seemingly, has neither resigned nor fled, but probably is helpless. The Manchurians scored by capturing the town of Lanchow and reported they had trapped the Chihli troops that Wu had left at Shanhaikwan. The British in Peking, however, received word that Wu's army at the great wall was intact. In one recent engagement it used poison gas for the first time, but the Manchurians had gas masks ready. One correspondent sends a story that General Feng—he is the so-called "Christian general"—has been promised soviet support against Tsao Kun and has received $3,000,000 from Russian sources. Gen. W. D. Connor, U. S. A., became senior commander of foreign forces in Tientsin when General Yoshioka of Japan developed a convenient illness. Therefore it was up to the American to see that there was no violation of the treaty obligation that there be no Chinese soldiers in that city.

NEITHER Great Britain nor Turkey was pleased with the decision of the League of Nations council in the Mosul dispute. The council ordered that the status quo be maintained pending a final settlement of the question next spring, when the rich oil territory will be permanently allocated.

OUR government is indignant because only one of the murderers of Maj. Robert Imbrie, American vice consul in Teheran, has been executed, and has sent to the Persian government a protest that is tantamount to an ultimatum, threatening that other measures will be taken unless the known assassins are executed.

PUBLICATION of income tax lists in various newspapers, which has aroused a storm of protests, will be carried to court by the Department of Justice, according to an announcement by Attorney General Stone. He has avoided giving a definite opinion as to the legality of such publication, but says it seems to be the duty of the department to obtain a judicial determination of the question. Whether a single paper will be singled out for the test, and where the case will be brought is not known at this writing.

Officials of the internal revenue bureau doubt the legality of the publication in newspapers of the lists. The new law provides for public inspection of the lists and of the amounts paid, but congress also re-enacted the section of the old law making it a criminal offense to print or publish in any manner not provided by law any part of an income tax return.

FRANK O. LOWDEN of Illinois is being urged upon President Coolidge for the position of secretary of agriculture, made vacant by the death of Secretary Wallace. For the present Assistant Secretary Gore is acting secretary. He was the Republican nominee for governor of West Virginia but dropped all his campaign work to take care of his duties in Washington.

THE week's death list contained several notable names. Among them were James B. Forgan, dean of Chicago bankers and known throughout the world as an authority on finance; Percy D. Haughton, the famous football coach; Gen. W. B. Haldeman, commander in chief of the United Confederate Veterans; Edward Bell, American charge d'affaires in Peking, whose death was attributed to mental strain caused by the conditions in China; Frances Hodgson Burnett, noted author and playwright, Laura Jean Libbey, novelist; W. E. Lewis, publisher of the New York Telegraph; Albert H. Loeb, Chicago capitalist; Thomas C. Harbaugh, writer of the "Nick Carter" tales, and Lew Dockstader, one of the most famous of American minstrels.

FRANCE has at last granted full recognition to the government of Russia, and the United States is now the only great power holding out against the soviets. Jean Herbette becomes French ambassador to Moscow and M. Rakovsky accepts the post of Russian ambassador to Paris, being transferred from London. It is believed either Krassin, Kameneff or Litvinoff will be sent to England. Premier Herriot issued an order sequestrating all Russian government real property in Paris to be held awaiting a settlement. This includes the palatial Russian embassy with its store of art treasures which has been in the possession of Kerensky and his followers for seven years; and also stocks, bonds, consulates and other properties that have been held in the name of the former czar and of the Russian state.

RUSSIA is still furiously angry with Great Britain because of the publication of the alleged letter from Zinoviev telling English communists to prepare for a revolution. The letter is declared by Moscow to be a forgery and the soviet government has sent to London several notes demanding immediate apologies. The whole affair was closely connected with the politics of the British election, and it is likely it will put an end to the plans for an Anglo-Russian treaty. Another statement by Zinoviev, whose authenticity is not questioned, is a prediction that a proletarian revolution in Germany is approaching, "despite all the Dawses, Eberts and Noskes."

ECONOMIC evacuation of the Ruhr and Rhineland by France has been completed, every public building and public service has been turned over to the Germans and some 30,000 expelled German railway workers have returned to their jobs. The reparations commission declared that the last part of the Dawes program had been fulfilled. Financial experts of the allied countries began preparing for the conference to partition the reparations payments, and on America's request, her claims for the cost of the United States army of occupation were placed first on the agenda. Owen D. Young formally turned over to Seymour Parker Gilbert the office of agent general of reparations.

J. Pierpont Morgan and the French government signed an agreement for the floating of a French loan on the American market, the amount being understood to be $150,000,000. From this the Morgan banking house will be repaid the $100,000,000 credit extended by it for market operations to strengthen the French currency exchange value.

SECRETARY OF COMMERCE HOOVER has called a conference on street and highway safety to meet in Washington December 15. Representatives from all parts of the country will take part. In a statement explaining the purpose of the conference Mr. Hoover declared that the death of 22,600 persons, injury to 678,000 persons and property damage amounting to $600,000,000 from traffic accidents in 1923 represent a national loss of so appalling a character as to warrant thorough consideration of the entire problem.

THERE are signs of hard times ahead for three of the "big men" of foreign lands—President Kemal of Turkey, Dictator Mussolini of Italy and Dictator Primo de Rivera of Spain. A powerful revolt against Kemal's leadership has started and its chiefs are the most influential diplomats and army and navy officers of the country. Many Spaniards have enlisted in a movement to destroy the dictatorship of De Rivera, and scores of prominent men were arrested in Madrid when the police broke up a great meeting of protest against his regime. Mussolini's position is not so weakened as those of the others, but that his power is waning was indicated by the relatively small numbers of Fascisti who turned out on the anniversary of the society to take the oath of loyalty to the king.

Large and Small Sums for "Conscience" Fund

Washington.—"Conscience money," amounting to over $580,000 has been paid to the United States government and for several years an average of $40,000 has been maintained.

Buried in the musty files are thousands of letters from all over the United States, explaining the writers robbed the government in sums from a few cents to thousands.

The conscience fund was originated in 1811 during the administration of President Madison, when a man remitted $5, saying he'd robbed the government.

The incident was brought to the personal attention of President Madison, who decided that an accurate check should be maintained on "conscience money."

Thirty thousand dollars, in new $1,000 bills, by parcel post is the record contribution up to date. An accompanying letter declared: "This and $80,000 I've remitted at different times makes up four times the amount I stole from the government years ago."

One or two soldiers of the World war, their misuse of government property weighing heavily on the conscience, have mailed money to the government.

Contributions are becoming more and more frequent, according to the treasury. The money is placed in the general fund used for ordinary purposes.

BEFORE TWINS WERE BORN

Was Very Miserable. Felt Lots Better After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Wyocena, Wisconsin.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before my twins were born because my sister used it and recommended it to me. I was so I could scarcely go about my daily work I was in such misery. But after I began taking the second bottle I was feeling lots better. I took three bottles and a half before I was confined and finished the bottle while I was in bed. I got up feeling fine and have taken care of the twins alone ever since. I recommend the Vegetable Compound highly and will sing its praises in the future."—Mrs. IDA GERRITZ, Wyocena, Wis.

It is remarkable how many cases have been reported similar to this one. Many mothers are left in a weakened and run-down condition after child-birth, and for such mothers the care of the baby is well-nigh impossible. Not only is it hard for the mother, but the child itself will indirectly suffer.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent tonic for the mother both before and after child-birth. It is prepared from medicinal roots and herbs, and does not contain any harmful drugs. It can be taken in safety by nursing mothers.

THE EDUCATORS SAY:

"The passage of the proposed amendment would, in my judgment, be an infringement of religious liberty and an injustice to our citizens who belive that religious instruction should proceed hand-in-hand with secular education and according to the faith of the family whose child is being educated. State compulsion in this field, exerted contrary to the conscientious, religious beliefs of large numbers of loyal citizens, can accomplish only harm."—Allan Hoten, President, Kalamazoo College.

"I do not believe in the so-called Hamilton amendment nor do I consider the spirit of this attack on private schools to be American." —H. M. Crooks, President, Alma College.

"I regard the drastic legal coercion contemplated by the amendment as a far worse evil than anything it is intended to correct." —Charles H. Cooley, Professor, University of Michigan.

"I am thoroughly opposed in principle to the proposed amendment, and am of the opinion that it will prove to be unconstitutional."—R. M. Henley, Professor, University of Michigan.

"I am opposed to the amendment."—Paul F. Volker, President, Olivet College.

"I am convinced that some of the finest experimentation in school work that is possible is carried on in our non-public schools. It would be a misfortune to all if the fine work carried on by various types of schools other than the public schools, was curtailed."—C. O. Davis, Dean, School of Education, University of Michigan.

"I am entirely willing to go on record as opposed to the proposed amendment to the state constitution, relative to compulsory attendance in the public schools of all children from the ages of seven to sixteen years, until they have graduated from the eighth grade. I regard such a requirement as undemocratic and un-American. I belive that none of the upholders of education in private schools object to careful state supervision, and that is all that we can ask."—Louis A. Strauss, Department of English, University of Michigan.

"I cannot see how a law compelling every child, no matter what his individual characteristics may be, to go to a public school will in any way materially advance the public good. For that reason I repeat that I am vigorously opposed to the amendment as it stands."—John Barker White, Law Department, University of Michigan.

"SCHOOL AMENDMENT IS UNWISE"

By CHARLES McKENNY, President Michigan State Normal College, Ypsilanti, Michigan.

For several reasons I think the proposed amendment to the Michigan Constitution abolishing private schools is unwise.

1. It provides that all children between the ages of seven and sixteen years shall attend public schools, making no exceptions for children who are crippled, who are not physically strong, who are mentally subnormal or for any other reason are disqualified for attending the public schools between those ages

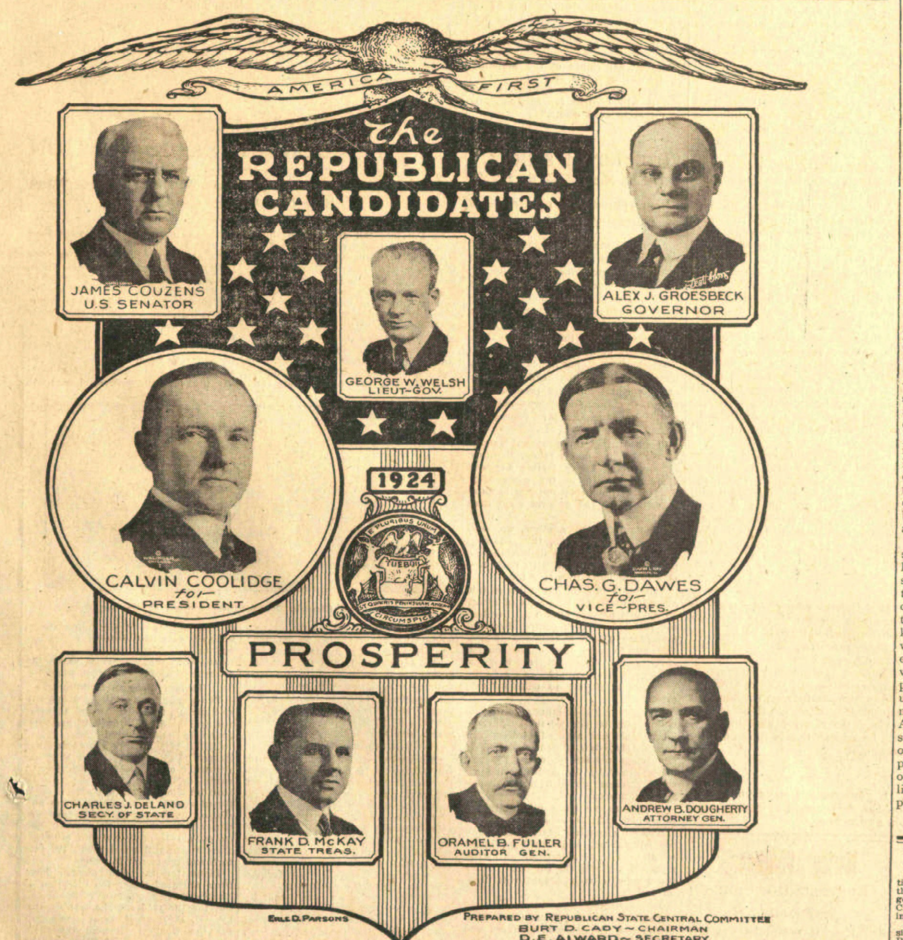
2. It would prohibit a parent, no matter how capable, from teaching his own child. if between the ages of seven and sixteen.

3. It would prohibit a group of parents from hiring a private teacher, however competent, to each their children. It would compel them to send their children to the public schools though they might be able and eager to provide better educational facilities than the local public school offered.

4. It would prohibit experimental schools established under private auspices. A considerable part of the progress made in education has been due to experiments carried on in private schools. There are several such schools in existence that are making a real contribution to public education.

It would make a large group of our citizens feel resentful toward the majority that enacted such legisation. They would feel that action was taken largely because of religious prejudice.

Practically all of my life has been spent in connection with state supported schools, consequently my leaning is toward them, but that does not blind me to the fact that there are private schools just as good as any public schools and I cannot believe that the advantages which the amendment referred to might bring would equal the loss of the good will, cooperation and toleration which the legislation proposed would produce.



The Hub of The Problem

Costs are placed in a new light by the whole project of farm electrification. Why is it, many farmers have asked, that it costs more to supply electric service to rural districts than to city homes?

Here is the answer, as summed up by Prof. E. A. Stewart, of the University of Minnesota, project director of the Red Wing experimental line:

1. In rural districts the customer thus far has used materially less electricity per month than has the city customer.
2. In the country the average is three customers to the mile, whereas in the city there are from 30 to 200 to the mile.
3. The cost of distributing electricity is everywhere greater than the cost of generating it, in city and country both.
4. If electricity could be generated for nothing the problem of economically supplying it to farms would remain unaltered.

LIKES LIGHTING PLANT

Farm Wife Calls It the Finest Thing on the Farm.

Economic problems concerning the extension of electric power lines to farms do not, as yet, disturb those who have installed independent light and power plants. Many thousands of these plants are at work on farms that are too far removed from transmission lines to hope for service of the latter sort within a period of years.

Of the 400,000 farms in the United States on which electricity is used in on way or another, fully half are supplied by self-contained farm light and power sets. That they are serving the purpose successfully in this period of the beginnings of farm electrification is indicated by the story of one farm family using such a set.

This family lives in Stark County, North Dakota, and uses its electrical plant chiefly for lighting. What it means to them is told by the woman of the farm:

"We have in our house hot-water heat, hard and soft water piped into the kitchen and into the basement, and an electric light plant, which we think is the finest thing on the farm. When we are out evenings, upon returning we need only to turn a button to give us light outdoors, by which the children and I can find our way into the house without any trouble. Then it is so easy to turn on the light in any room needed while husband takes the car to the shed, where he also has the light to see his way."

Death of Ora Pease

Ora Pease, formerly of this vicinity, died at his home between Bankers and Hillsdale some time Friday night as he lived alone and his dead body was not found until 11 o'clock Saturday, Oct. 25.

Death was probably instantaneous. He was about 66 years of age and is survived by one brother in Wisconsin, two children, Howard, who lives near home and Mrs. Carlton Andrews of Quincy. For something like thirty years he had been a resident of the farm where he died, previous to which time he lived west of North Adams, and was well known to our citizens.

Funeral services were conducted from the home Monday, Oct. 27, and interment was in King Lake cemetery.

The Political Imbroglio

The news of election coming as they do so quickly, are somewhat disconcerting to a number of the leading bosses in the game. From east-west, and all parts of the land reports indicate that Coolidge and Dawes are completely lifted above all opponents. Heavy landslides everywhere give these men the undisputed right of way, a sure indication that the country at large is satisfied with business condition and will expect to see safe and sane methods continued.

The Democratic chances were terribly crippled right in their convention at Madison Square Garden The whole affair from beginning to end was one great vaudeville. and how such a party could expect to win afterward is a conundrum.

For days they fought the K. K. K. element and at last announced they had it down—but at what a cost!

The administration of Calvin Coolidge has been marked by many victories. It was freely predicted the attitude of Mr. Coolidge on the bonus question for ex-service men would take away his strength. Again they predicted that when he vetoed the Bursum Bill for the relief of Civil War soldiers, his race was about run, and today there is little show that these measures figured in the campaign. Right from the start President Coolidge demonstrated his ability to put down a solid foot and keep it there. He has been frank and open in all matters pertaining to the public welfare which is vastly more than you could say of most of his predecessors in the White House. The tendency to side-step the temperance question the foreign question and the K. K. K. is not in Calvin Coolidge. Honest "Cal" grew up on the hard stubborn soil of New England, a branch of the Pilgrims of Plymouth Rock whose ways he emulates.

The Beggar in With Us

A few weeks ago we had something to say regarding the beggars who infest the streets of our cities and are usually found on our Fair Grounds each year. Again we want to say that there is a large chance taken each time you dole out anything to these pitiful appearing persons, since it has been found that many of them are opulant in this world's goods.

For instance we often see the blind musicians on the Fair grounds where they pose as unfortunates in need of alms—men destitute and suffering the handicaps of physical shortcomings. Unfortunate indeed, is a person without sight, but thousauds of such are supporting themselves by actual earning capacity.

The World War left an aftermath which sent thousands of ex-service men out on the high ways and by ways trying to gain a livlihood by begging, and about nine-tenths of these were flim-flams-men who had followed the profession (for it is a profession) of begging for a time and in the chaotic days following the armistice, anything that wore the uniform was hailed as a saint. One smart beggar who worked among the theatre crowds on Broadway, New York, admitted that he made at least sixty dollars an hour both before and after the theatre. He was dressod in the uniform of private, wore two medals supposed to have been won in service, and exhibited an arm stump off at the wrist. When arrested he gave his name as Thomas Campbell, said he had never been in the army, and lost his arm while acting as strike breaker in the Middle West.

In Chicago they started a crusade against beggars in uniform and in one day arrested a gang of five who had purchased second-hand uniforms, but rode from their lodging place to the down town section in taxicabs. Not one of the men had ever served in the army but made sixty to seventy dollars a day through the sympathy which the uniform aroused in the hearts of soft-hearted pedestrians.

Why would it not be good policy to investigate the beggars that we see? If they are found to be needy, all well and good; if not, run them out. Many a coin comes from people who can ill afford it.

One day at the Fair we asked a man if he thought the blind beggars had plenty of money, and could pay for the concession? His manner of answer was typical of a large following—he thought we were jesting, and insinuated that we were notoriously brutal, so we quit, but there is a lining of downright suspicion just inside a pitiful outside appeal.

One mendicant in Massachussets arrested for begging on the highway confessed he owned a $3,000 sedan and went from place to place in it—secreting it during the daytime while he passed up one street and down another in filthy rags entreating people to contribute of their earthly substance that he might once more enjoy a square meal. Another scalpeen actually was the head of a "begging trust" inasmuch as he hired men and women at $3.00 per day to go out and their receipts were often as high as thirty and fifty dollars per-day.

In view of all these doings we should not class a man as brutal when he bawls out this kind of citizenry if they ask for a dime. Wise people these days think twice before they hand money to a mendicant, and if they don't there is a real strong chance of being hoodwinked.

In this section of Michigan 40 years ago when laws were different it was quite common to meet the "tramp" or "hobo" genius, usually a big husky individual with a long story of hard luck some family troubles, later a separ ation, then possibly a big fire loss or something else which laid the poor boy on his uppers. You all remember him. Mother usually handed out a piece of pie, a cup of tea and six large slices of bread to lighten the burdens of the afflicted, while dad, a little more "hard boiled" sent him on his way with a stern rebuke.

To day you seldom ever see such tramps because they are outlawed—arrested for vagrancy—sent to Detroit House of Correction—liberated to start the game over again. But it is a fact that there are large numbers of human kind politely called men, who would spend their entire life in ethereal bliss of absolute hoboism without one solitary conscience prick if it were not for this law. So utterly worthless and depraved has mankind been since the days of Adam that they would do these stunts. When you go to the Fair, or when you meet a husky 180 pound male of the craft, send him on his way. A good swift kick delivered by a battering ram is a real panacea for such ills.

Editor is The Rural Pastor's Best Friend

"The rural editor is the rural minister's best friend," said the Rev. J. T. B. Smith of the publicity department of the Methodist Episcopal church in a recent address before the rural minister's conference in session at Garrett Biblical institute at Evanston Illinois.

"If you ministers tried to run a paper without having had newspaper training, you would run it in the ground.

"The newspaper editors are constantly between two fires of criticism. Protestants think the Catholics get too much publicity and I have known some Catholics who thought the Methodists got too much. The newspaper agencies do their best to keep an impartial balance, but they are oblidged to take account of real news and not simply the question of favor and it is the business of the church in its official capacity and of the ministers locally to furnish the kind of news the papers can print or stop their fault finding.

To Preserve Wild Life

Will H. Dilg, president and founder of the Isaak Walton League of America and editor of Outdoor America, made public today a letter from President Coolidge, expressing warm appreciation of the league's general purposes and particularly indorsing the Upper Mississippi Wild Life and Fish Refuge. This project involves the setting aside of three hundred miles of river bottom lands, representing the last stand of wild and fish life in the upper Mississippi Valley. It will be in charge of the Biological Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries, of the Department of Commerce. Sportsmen will be permitted to hunt and fish over the area under the reasonable scientific regulation of these bureaus.

The President's letter follows:

The White House, October 9, 1924
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. Dilg:

The chairman of your Executive Committee, Mr. George E. Scott, has informed me of the nation wide effort which your organization purposes to make this fall to increase its membership. It is my sincere wish that you may meet with a full measure of success.

The Isaak Walton League, appealing to every lover of the out-of doors. has proved itself an effective educational force for intelligent conservation in this country. It gave me genuine satisfaction to sign the Bill enacted by the last Congress in which your members were so deeply interested, providing for the establishment of this refuge is of peculiar interest to the contiguous states of Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota and Wisconsin, it is a national undertaking of value to the entire country. The estimates of funds which actually may be required to meet the administrative expenses and acquisition of lands incident to the establishment of this refuge will have my consideration in connection with the next budget.

I take pleasure in endorsing the efforts of your organization to stimulate a wider appreciation of, and participation in, the unexampled opportunities for outdoor recreation afforded by our country.

Very truly yours,
Calvin W. Coolidge.

Digest Poll Unfair, Own Editor Admits

Senator Harrison Points To New York World To Show 28 Republicans Got Ballots To 10 Received By Democrats.

(Special Correspondence.)

Washington, D. C., October.—"Straw votes" now in progress in various parts of the country are merely part of a campaign of the Coolidge-Dawes managers to mislead the public into believing that the President is sure to win, according to Senator Pat Harrison. The purpose of this propaganda is to bring to Coolidge such voters as are thought to be eager to be with a winner, irrespective of his merits or the policies he represents, Senator Harrison said. He added that the Republican managers are acting on the false assumption that a large number of voters are in this class.

"The public is obligated to the New York World for its exposure of the Literary Digest poll by showing that the ballots which are being counted in that publication's tabulation are being sent out in the ratio of nearly three Republicans to one Democrat," said Senator Harrison in an interview here.

"The World's analysis of the last tabulation published by the Digest shows that 'according to the Literary Digest's own figures, defining party members as they voted in the last election, The Digest has sent its ballots to 402,186 Republicans and 141,868 Democrats. The Digest thus has given 28 Republicans a chance to vote for every ten Democrats who have one of its post-card ballots.'

Even Fall Could Win

"If I were permitted to pick out those persons to whom ballots are sent, I could win a 'straw-ballot' election for Albert Fall or Harry Daugherty or anybody else I might choose to put over.

"Heavy betting odds and favorable 'straw votes' are old arts of the G. O. P. campaign conductors. Up to this present poll of the Literary Digest, the most amusing one ever conducted was that by the same publication a few months ago on the Mellon tax plan. Every week that publication carried increasingly tremendous 'straw-vote' majorities for the Mellon plan, and judging from that poll alone, one would have thought the country was almost solidly for Mr. Mellon's plan.

"But when the question of adopting the Mellon plan came up, it was rejected by the representatives of the people by almost inconceivable majorities in both branches of Congress, and this despite the tremendous paid propaganda behind that plan, and all the weighty influence of the Coolidge administration.

"The American people understand political jiu jitsu and know what propaganda is, and are less likely to be deceived by it than ever before. The Coolidge-Dawes management may resort to every sort of deceptive tactics it will, but the issues between the two major parties are clearly defined and the electorate is not going to be deceived.

"The present administration has proven itself not only impotent but corrupt. It is so reactionary that it crawls backward, and all the 'straw votes' and all the betting odds that can be mustered are not going to deceive the electorate into voting for continuing an administration that has proven so unworthy."

REPUBLICANS USE COERCIVE METHODS

New York, October.—Methods often used by Republican employers to coerce their employes into voting for Republican candidates are being employed in the present national campaign to defeat John W. Davis and elect President Coolidge. The Republican organizations in various States are resorting to intimidation, according to reports reaching here.

Letters purporting to give advice to investors are being broadcast from Wall Street in the interest of Coolidge. These letters are so worded that they tend to give the impression that unless he is elected there will be a depression of business. This is done in the face of the fact that the panic which has injured industry and ruined the farmers in the last three years was caused by the Republican policy of "deflation."

In Indianapolis the Republican organization of Marion county has served notice on negroes in the Federal service that unless they "get right" on the Republican ticket they will lose their jobs. The Johns-Manville Corporation of New York has circularized its employes with a letter which leaves the plain implication that if they don't vote for Coolidge their positions will be in jeapordy.

The various polls being conducted by Republican newspapers have for their purpose the creation of a belief that Coolidge is certain to be elected and are part of this campaign of propaganda. It is known that the Republican leaders are fearful of losing the entire Northwest—all Republican territory—to LaFollette. Davis is making rapid headway and seems in the second week of October to be quite sure of more electoral votes than either Coolidge or LaFollette.

Mothers to the Rescue

Trust a mother ably to meet any emergency that threatens her child Since automobiles have become so numerous and proven so menacing to child life, mothers have lived in constant dread of possible accidents to their "Johnnies" and "Marys". A certain group of Washington mothers some years ago took upon themselves the self imposed task of volunteer traffic policewomen during the hours when their children were passing between their homes and the schools. From October to June, these women gave their personal service on the streets and at the crossings where there is the greatest danger. So effective did their efforts prove, that it is said not one child was killed or even injured, although on many occasions a tragedy was averted only by quick action of one of the mothers. Drivers of automobiles were expected to pay the same respect to theuplifted hand of the mother at the corners as to that of the policeman.

What the mothers of one big city did is symbolical of what they are doing all over the nation, taking it upon themselves to make safe the highways their boys and girls must travel. Differ as women may in their interests and activities when it comes to measures like prohibition or child labor, the mother spirited women rise as a unit to demand that the boys and girls be protected.

Politicians who are trying to drive roughshod over the interests of the children, by attempting to nullify the Eighteenth Amendment and preventing the ratification of the Twentieth Amendment will have to reckon with the mothers of the land, and now that these mothers are armed with the ballot they are a formidable and invincible force.

Do We Want to Be Put to Sleep?

"The only effect that beer has on the average man is to put him to sleep," one of the police force of Montreal is reported to have said. Certainly this official has ample opportunity to study the effect of the brewery product in his city, and recalling the conditions that prevailed before national prohibition went into operation we know that this was truly one of the effects of beer drinking. There was ample evidence that it "put to sleep" many a man's love for home and family; that it "put to sleep" his good judgment and made him perpetuate foolish and disgusting deeds that he would never have dreamed of doing otherwise; that it "put to sleep," his sense of responsibility to his family, his employer and his country.

It is inconceivable that a beverage that "puts to sleep" all that is best in a human being would recommend itself to America.

Do we want the men who run our motor cars or our railroad trains "put to sleep"? Do we care to have the judges who must render important verdicts, or the surgeons who perform critical operations "put to sleep"? Do we want the men in our big industrial plants who handle delicate machinery "put to sleep"? And yet if beer were to be again legalized and thereby popularized; If it were to be sold where it were easily obtainable, would we not run the risk of having many in our nation "put to sleep"?

If America has reachad the point in its history where it desires to be "put to sleep", then let it make beer the national beverage and it will inevitably find itself gradually sinking into the deep, deep slumber of oblivion that ages ago enveloped Rome and Greece and made them decadent nations.

Seed Potato Growers In New Association

A new state farm cooperative association, to be known as the Michigan Certified Seed Potato Growers Association, will be launched at a meeting called for at Cadillac on November 25 according to farm crops extension specialists at the M. A. C. Articles of incorporation have already been taken out, it is said, and the membership is to be open to all raisers of certified potatoes in the state.

Objects of the new organization, as expressed in the articles of incorporation, will be; to encourage the production of certified potatoes, as recommended by the M. A. C.; to effect distribution and sale of the same to the greatest possible advantage; and to improve the market quality of the general table crop, by encouraging the use of certified seed and employing better cultural methods.

The Certified Seed Growers group will not in any way interfere with or replace the two older cooperative potato organizations, it is said. The Michigan Potato Growers Exchange, with offices at Cadillac, and the Michigan Potato Producers Association, a pioneer in raising certified seed potatoes, will continue to function as in the past, the new group providing a new and somewhat wider field for certified seed production among growers.

J. W. Weston, extension specialist in crops at the M. A. C. has been named temporary secretary of the Certified Growers, while H. C. Moore, also a crops extension man at M. A. C., will continue to serve as secretary of the Potato Producers Association.

Through a cooperative agreement, arrangements have been made whereby sale of the crop raised by the new association will be handled by the Potato Growers Exchange, of Cadillac. Individual members of the Association, however, will be able to market directly if they so desire.

Directors and officers of the new association are to be elected at the meeting November 25.

Soil Acidity Gives Lawn Type Control

He who would develop a lawn of velvety smoothness must first know the quality of the soil in his yard, in order to select the proper grass varieties for the soil according to Dr. M. M. McCool, head of the soils department at the M. A. C.

The fact that some grasses thrive on an acid or "sour" soil, while others require conditions which are exactly the reverse as far as acidity is concerned, is responsible for the importance of adapting grass varieties to the soil type. Ordinary blue grass, sometimes spoken of as June grass does not thrive on a soil which is very acid, requiring soils which have an apprecialable amount of lime. Bent grasses, fescues and red top, on the other hand, will do well on a soil which is too acid for blue grass and clovers,

Another problem the lawn owner must face is the fact that the soil which favors blue grass is also a favorable soil for many weeds, such as dandelions, plantins, and others which cause trouble. The acid soil upon which the other group of grasses will thrive is however. often too acid for many of the weeds.

Acid soils, of course, are corrected by applications of lime; while soils which are not acid enough for the particular purpose in mind may be made so either by the omission of lime or by adding substances such as ammonium sulphate or sulphur which will make the soil more acid.

Experiments conducted since 1856 on the famous Rothamstel Station near London, England, re. cently visited by Dr. McCool, show decidedly the effect of acid soils on the growth of grass varieties. Similar results have also been obtained at various stations in the United States.

Bert Salway who resides west of Jonesville on the "pike" lost his entire barn buildings by fire early Monday morning, last week, all burning except a team of horses which were gotten out. The loss is estimated from $15,000 to $18,000 and only partially insured. Mr. Salway prided himself on the best kept home in the vicinity and the loss will be a bitter one to him and the community.

RED CROSS LEADER HITS SCHOOL BILL

Gustavus D. Pope Calls Amendment A Blow at Democracy

Gustavus D. Pope, chairman of the Detroit Red Cross and the Detroit Community Fund, sportsman, manufacturer, confidante of the late Theodore Roosevelt and spokesman for liberal political thought, has issued a statement attacking the proposed school amendment as a "blow at the democracy of feeling which is essential to the welfare of the United States."

Mr. Pope puts the amendment down as threatening the constitutional right of free thought and religious opinion and a potential aid, if passed, to "the deterioration of the public school without the stimulus of competition."

His statement says, in part:

"Privately supported schools, with their freedom to develop new educational theories, pioneer the way in educational advance.

"The school is not a dead thing, but a living organization affecting the thought and life of its time, and subject, as are all living things, to the developing power that comes from competition.

"There could be no greater handicap for the future of our country than that all children should be passed through a completely uniform educational system and come out a sterotyped uniform product, for that dead level can only be achieved by suppressing individuality, which our scientists tell us today is the most precioius of racial assets.

"The public schools can make few experiments. Also they must handle education in the mass, leaving to the private school, in the main, the specialized attention to the individual which makes for individual development. Those experiments can only be carried on under laboratory conditions, with full sympathetic and adequate financial support.

"Such public schools as we have in Michigan offer excellent educational facilities, but the private school provides the child with a degree of personal attention which not only brings forward more rapidly the advanced student but helps the slow one to keep pace with his fellows.

"The amendment will abrogate the constitutional rights of the individual, it will be bad for the state supported educational system itself, and it will be bad for the children of the state as a whole."

VOTE "NO" ON SCHOOL BILL, McGREGOR SAYS

Detroit Philanthropist Calls Proposed Amendment Act of Tyranny

Asserting that the proposed school amendment is "an act of tyranny against a large minority," Tracy W. McGregor, founder of McGregor Institute, Detroit, director of the Detroit Community Fund, and tireless philanthropist, has issued a statement denouncing the amendment as a "breeder of hatred and strife."

Mr. McGregor, his hands set to innumerable tasks that call for tolerance, co-operation and progress, declares the amendment was not promoted by educators for educational ends.

"I am against the proposed amendment," his statement reads, "because it is stirring bitter feeling between opposing groups in the community. This at a time when nothing is more important for the general good than unity.

"If we fight one another, we will destroy, not build up, the common life. Harmony, mutual understanding, patience by one class with another—this is the ideal to strive for.

"To carry out the intention of this amendment would be an act of tyranny against a large minority. Because the latter hold it a sacred duty not merely to obtain a religious education but to keep the child, during early years, under active religious influences, it becomes an extreme violation of liberty to withhold this privilege.

"Whatever higher standards of education may be desired in the parochial schools are assured under our present state law, which controls and supervises private as well as public schools, and by the desire of the parochial school authorities to realize such standards.

"Yet here we have this campaign to abolish private schools. It is a campaign promoted not by educators for educational ends but prompted by the wave of religious antipathy now passing over the country. Every fair-minded citizen should vote 'NO' on it."

Ralph E. Routier, Detroit:—I am a member of the Episcopal church and I am unqualifiedly opposed to the amendment. I would be pleased to do anything I can in bringing about the defeat of this bill.

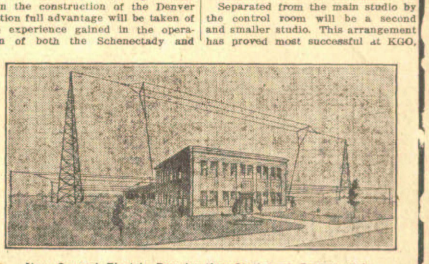
WORK STARTED ON NEW DENVER RADIO STATION

General Electric's Broadcasting Trio Will Be Complete When New Voice Goes on the Air.

In the late fall or early winter a new voice will be on the air—KOA, the Denver, Colorado, broadcasting station of the General Electric Company. This station will complete the General Electric's nation-girdling system of three stations, the first of which, WGY, opened at Schenectady, N. Y., early in 1922, and the second, KGO, at Oakland, Cal., early in 1924.

In the construction of the Denver station full advantage will be taken of the experience gained in the operation of both the Schenectady and Oakland broadcasting plants. Every technical advance proved by extended use will be included in the equipment.



New General Electric Broadcasting Station at Denver, Colo.

The entire plant, like the Oakland station, will be housed in its own building. Provision will be made in the equipment to go to higher power than is now permitted should the regulations of the Department of Commerce be changed.

Two Studios Provided

The station, a two story structure, will be located on a 300x250 foot plot, four miles from the heart of Denver and on the main eastern motor highway. The studio building will be 58x47 feet, and the first floor will be divided into reception room and offices for the executives, the correspondence and the program forces. On the second floor will be two studios, a waiting room and a control room for the station's amplifying equipment.

The first and main studio will be 45x22 feet in size, big enough to comfortably accommodate large musical organizations like bands and choruses. The deadening or reverberation period will be made variable through the use of movable hangings and floor coverings.

As a program varies from speaker to band, or soloist to orchestra, different degrees of deadening are required to secure perfect tone quality, and the Denver station will be so equipped that it may be readily changed to care for the different extremes of sound.

Separated from the main studio by the control room will be a second and smaller studio. This arrangement has proved most successful at KGO, in that one number may follow another with only the spacing of an announcement between them. This means that the listener is saved the annoyance of waits between numbers.

Towers Close to Buildings

The power house will be a one story building, 93 feet long and 42 wide, and will be directly back of and connected to the studio building.

Unlike WGY, where the towers are located on top of a five story building, a quarter of a mile from the control room, or KGO, where the towers, built on the ground, are also a quarter of a mile from control room and studio, the towers of the Denver station will be built on the ground, one on each side of the studio building. The towers will be of steel, 150 feet high and triangular in shape.

Plans for the new station have been prepared under the direction of Martin P. Rice, manager of broadcasting for the General Electric Company. H. D. Randall, Denver manager for the General Electric Company, will have direct supervision of the Denver broadcasting station.

Permanent roads are a good investment —not an expense

Why America Must Have More Paved Highways

Almost every section of the United States is confronted by a traffic problem.

Month by month this problem is becoming more and more serious.

Hundreds of cars pass a given point every hour on many of our state and county roads. Downtown city streets are jammed with traffic.

Think, too, how narrow many of our roads are, and how comparatively few paved highways there are in proportion to the steadily increasing number of cars.

If the motor vehicle is to continue giving the economic service of which it is capable, we must have more Concrete highways and widen those near large centers of population.

Every citizen should discuss highway needs of his community with his local authorities.

Your highway officials will do their part if given your support.

Why postpone meeting this pressing need?

An early start means early relief.

"Lillian's going to that dinner at the Plaza—Mrs. Wallace. Your father begged off, but she says she has to go," Ellen reminded him.

"Oh, so she is! And she stays overnight, doesn't she? Well, if dad doesn't need the car, I may keep Torrens in, then, and drive out after the dinner. I could just as well stay at the studio: I have to be in town tomorrow—but we'll see. Don't worry if I'm not here. Come on, Tom, we're all ready!"

Ellen followed them downstairs, her heart dark with suspicions well in keeping with the foreboding sky and the cold, dull air. When the plans for the day were discussed at the breakfast table, she listened, her tragic gaze moving from her husband's face to Lillian's serene face.

"I wish I could go into town when you do, Gibbs," Lillian said indifferently, giving Tommy the cherry from her grapefruit, "but I'm not going until late, and I'm furious at having to go at all. I hate the Wallaces, I'm worried about your father's cold, and altogether my dolly is stuffed with sawdust!"

"I suppose we couldn't be rude to them again?" the old man said, doubtfully.

"I suppose we couldn't!" she answered, smiling. "No, and I wouldn't have you go in with that cold, either! I'll go in about five and stay at the Plaza, and have a really nice time, so don't give it another thought! You have to go this morning, Gibbs?"

"Now!" he answered, rising. "I'm painting a lovely society lady, weight three hundred, and a mustache!"

Tommy laughed gaily, danced with his father to the door, and watched until the roadster disappeared down the drive.

The day wore on. At eleven o'clock Lillian, whose woman was shampooing her hair, wandered, with all its glory spread loose over her shoulders, to Ellen's door.

"Snow, Ellen!"

Ellen had been writing, but had stopped, and was staring blindly ahead of her through tear-filmed eyes. She was glad she did not have to face Lillian as she looked out of the window.

"So it is!" she managed to say huskily.

Lillian wandered on, stood in the bathroom door, where Lizzie was working mittens and warm woolen wraps upon the excited Tommy. When she turned back into Ellen's room the younger woman had entirely recovered her self-control.

While they lunched, snowflakes fluttered softly down from a leaden sky. A wind began to whistle about the corners of the house. Outside there was great emptiness, an appalling silence. Ellen forced herself to settle down with her father-in-law in the study after lunch; the old man seemed supremely happy as she opened "Jean Christophe." He was established in his great chair by the fire, with a plaid over his knees, and interrupted the reading now and then to congratulate himself upon having escaped the necessity of going out that night. But Lillian seemed as restless and nervous as Ellen did.

At four o'clock she came in to say goodby, exquisite in her furs, and Ellen suddenly decided to try to walk herself into a better frame of mind. She saw Torrens walking about the big car, as she went down the drive, and presently it passed her and she waved to Lillian in farewell.

It was bitterly cold, and a strong wind was blowing. The snow fell fitfully; the storm was coming, but it was not yet fairly under way. Ellen, usually normal and sensible enough, felt a sense of impending horror close upon her. She did not want to go back to that dreadful house, where selfishness, and deceit, and cruelty flourished.

But she did go back, and sent her wet shoes downstairs by Keno, and slowly got herself into something warm. She went to the study, where just before dinner Josselyn, Senior, joined her. Ellen was almost frantic now with undefined nervousness, her hands were icy cold, her face burned, and when one of the maids dropped a spoon at dinner she gave a sharp little cry. She and her father-in-law were alone at the stately meal.

"Here comes the storm!" he said pleasantly, as a wild assault of wind drove violently against the windows.

"Oh, I wish Gibbs were here!" Ellen exclaimed, with suddenly watering eyes. "Here—or that I were anywhere in the world, with him!" her heart added.

And tonight where was he, while she went silently and heavy-hearted about this house of shadows and menaces? The thought tormented her like a gnawing pain. Where was he? Who was enjoying the smile she loved so well, the accents of that wonderful voice? She was not beautiful, as Lillian was, she was thin and nervous, and alien to his atmosphere, but she was his wife, after all—she was the same Ellen who had talked with him there at the yacht club, in her pink dress, and given him the freshness and the glory of her youth.

"Oh, I could be pretty again!" she mused, beside the study fire. "I could be gay again! But not here—not here!"

Her book lay idle in her lap, and after awhile, glancing toward him, she saw that her father-in-law was dreaming, too.

"I'm a little worried about Lillian!" he said, as their eyes met. "I'm afraid they had a bad trip!" And the finely groomed old hand was stretched for the telephone. She heard him call the Plaza hotel, and ask for Mrs. Bainbridge Wallace. Ellen watched him with a sort of fascination.

"She not with the Wallaces," he said, in a puzzled tone; "that's odd. They say she telephoned at about six o'clock that she could not reach the city, and was staying with a friend."

Ellen's face was deathly white.

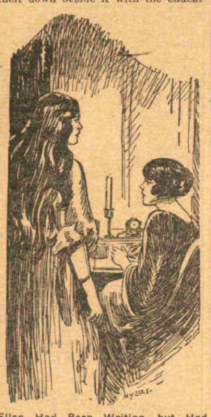
"They're together!" she whispered. And with a gesture as primitive as it was unconscious she wound her hands together, and pressed them to her face. "They're at the studio—together!" she muttered, blindly beginning to pace the room. "Oh, Gibbs—Gibbs—!"

The old man stared at her for a moment in utter bewilderment. Then the slow blood of age crept slowly into his colorful cheek, a hundred half-forgotten episodes rallied to support the new suspicion. His gallantry, courtesy, untiring animation and geniality were a deliberately adopted philosophy. He had not been Lillian's husband for eight years without perceiving the real woman beneath the soft and lovely surface. He felt for her at times the angry contempt of a genuine nature forced to treaty with what is false. But her arts had seemed to him so patent, so pitifully childish and apparent, that he had never dreamed—

No, he had never dreamed of Gibbs! And as the thing burst upon him, suddenly confirmed by much that he had seen and heard without understanding, in the last few weeks, he knew what a fool he had been not to foresee exactly this.

"You think they—" he began, clearing his throat. Ellen recalled to herself in the midst of her frenzy, looked with quick concern upon his suddenly aged face.

"Oh, I don't know!" she said, more quietly. "I don't know anything! But I—I've been thinking about it all day! They may be dining together, and then they will come home late. It seemed to me that they were planning it—" She stopped her restless walk, and came to the side of his chair and knelt down beside it with the endearing penitence of a passionate child. "I may be wrong!" she stammered eagerly. "Lillian may be somewhere else—Gibbs may be at the club dinner! But they do meet—they do write each other," Ellen went on with trembling lips, and a shaken voice, "and he has changed to me, I don't count with him any more—he's forgotten—he's forgotten—!"



Ellen Had Been Writing, but Had Stopped, and Was Staring Blindly Ahead of Her Through Tear-Filmed Eyes.

She burst into bitter crying, and the old man fumbled for his handkerchief, and pressed it against her cheek, as she hid her eyes on his shoulder.

After a few moments she freed herself, and went back to her own chair, where she dried her eyes, and managed a watery smile, but did not speak. She felt shaken and exhausted; yet the relief of speaking at last had seemed to lift a weight from her soul.

"I blame myself for this, Ellen," Josselyn, Senior, said presently, in some agitation. He got up, took his pipe from the mantel, filled it, and laid it irresolutely aside. "Well!" he said briskly, "I will think about this, my dear, and we will decide what to do. We will take it in time. We will—take—it—in—time." And now he lighted his pipe, his tone resolute. "It's nearly eleven o'clock, Ellen, and time for you to go to bed. Tomorrow—"

They lingered for a moment over their good-nights, and he laid his hand on her shoulder.

"One thing more, Ellen. Will you forgive him?"

Her quick tears came again. Her voice thickened.

"I—I love him. There's nothing to forgive!"

Her father-in-law stared down at her from his greater height as if he saw something admirable in the honest, earnest little face, and the wet blue eyes.

"You are a good woman, Ellen," he said. "Gibbs' mother was just such another! You shall have him back, my dear, and this will all be forgotten. It's the fault of the times, Ellen—but no harm has been done, yet. I'll think about it—I have been talking of going to England, and Lillian seems to want to go. She's like a child: she forgets. Only tell me again that you'll forgive him, Ellen, and be happy again!"

Ellen went up to bed comforted, and undressed while she dreamed of a new life for herself and Gibbs. They would take the little apartment that adjoined the studio, they would be alone again, the old happy atmosphere would be recreated. He loved her, under all this new madness—

Ellen saw herself in her mirror; her cheeks burning, her eyes starry, her loosened cloud of hair framing her thoughtful face. Hope came back, confidence came back, a dimple deepened in her cheek. It was all her foolish suspicion, after all. Gibbs had been at the dinner, and would come home on the midnight train, and turn the electric lights full in her eyes while he gave her a yawning account of the speeches, and tore off his white tie. And Lillian had been—she did not care where Lillian had been!

But when she had jumped into bed, and midnight struck, and one o'clock, and two o'clock, and he did not come, the anger and doubt returned in double force. The storm was still racketing about the house. Ellen felt cold under her thick blankets. She tossed and turned, locked her arms under her head and stared into the dark, turned and tossed again.

Her father-in-law had disposed of the matter simply and sanely. But suppose she was right, suppose Lillian and Gibbs had really thrown all honor to the winds, were really together tonight, then what? How could she—how could any wife, forgive that? To have his father take away the danger, as she might take matches away from Tommy, proved nothing for him, and solved nothing for her.

And if he and Lillian did not choose to be separated, if that passion had carried them far beyond any plans that she and his father might make—?

The clock struck three; struck fout. Ellen felt as if she would never sleep again.

The next morning she surprised Lizzie and Tommy at their early breakfast; she was going into the city. The world was mantled with snow, but the sun had just risen, and Louis, the lad who assisted Torrens, had the little service car at the door, and was confident that he could get Mrs. Josselyn as far as the station.

Just as Ellen was leaving, her father-in-law, also cloaked and gloved, came downstairs. Their heavy eyes met.

"I don't know why I'm going, or what I'm going to do," Ellen said. "I've got to go to the studio—and see if they—if he's there. I didn't sleep all night."

"I'll go with you," he said quickly. "I saw Louis come to the door, and I thought you must be going to town. I'll go too. Lillian's car may really have gotten into trouble—"

"Or he may have been foolish enough to try to come out in the roadster," Ellen added. They went down the scraped steps together; not another word was exchanged on the drive to the train. It was an early train: commuters were stamping on the snow-tracked platform. Ellen placed herself at a window and stared blindly out, making no attempt to entertain her companion, who rattled his newspaper with a great show of interest.

The world glittered under the risen sun. Smoke rose straight from a hundred chimneys into the clear cold air. Ellen saw a woman with a shawl tied over her head, feeding chickens; another woman kissed two bundle-like babies at a gate. The little woman in front of her, in the warm tram, was consulting an insignificant-looking, kindly little man about a Christmas list. "The children will go out of their senses when they see it!" Ellen heard her say.

Then they were in the big station; in a taxicab. The streets, where languid gangs of men were shoveling snow, went by. Forty-second: Fiftieth: Fifty-ninth. They were at the door.

"You have some explanation of this early trip for Gibbs?" her father-in-law asked suddenly in the lift. She turned to him tortured eyes.

"Oh, yes—toothache," she answered breathlessly, abstractedly.

A second later, outside the studio door, she caught his arm. They stood a moment transfixed. They could hear Gibbs' full, unmistakable voice A woman's laugh—Lillian's rare laugh, sounded in answer.

Instantly Ellen's companion flung open the door.

Gibbs and Lillian were alone in the studio. Gibbs, in his painting apron, was busy with the wooden screws and cogs that adjusted his big easel. Lillian, bareheaded and wearing a splendid robe of Chinese green, was beside the fire, coffee and rolls were on the little table before her; she was enjoying her breakfast.

CHAPTER IX

Ellen had passed through several phases of violent emotion in the past ten days, like everyone else in the house she had been undergoing tremendous mental adjustments. But more sensible or more adaptable than the others, she had disciplined herself to accept the new order of things. Ellen had the advantage of some preparation, whereas the events of the memorable Wednesday had fallen upon the others like a thunderbolt. She had suspected, doubted, and dreaded, for many heartsick days and weeks before the crisis came, and now, while they all suffered in their separate ways from the shock, Ellen even experienced a desperate satisfaction. It was over: Gibbs loved her no longer, and he knew that she knew it.

For a few days the repetition of this fact gave her an empty, vague feeling, and a sensation of fatigue. She was always tired, and her head felt always confused. Gibbs loved her no longer.

Well, what next then? She had faced terrible things before. The old leather harness, for instance, and the feverish days of pain in the old dining-room, by the air-tight stove. And later winter days, in Paris now, when she had roused in the night to listen to the baby's uneven breathing and had wakened to remember that the crib was gone, that Rose was gone—Rose was gone!

And now she must keep sane, and face these new, strange things. Gibbs, her own husband, loved another woman more than his wife, and Joe, the little brother whose simple, sturdy integrity had seemed to shine in so brilliant a contrast to this life of hypocrisies and affectations, Joe had caused misery and harm, and must take a tarnished record into his new life as a husband.

Brooding on these things day and night, yet Ellen forced herself to a certain desperate courage. She dressed in her usual scrupulous, quaint way, she made herself walk and read, and enter into Tommy's life. She met Gibbs' stern and moody unresponsiveness with tranquil gravity, with his father alone she was more like her old sunshiny self. Lillian and Ellen barely spoke to each other, except for the unavoidable civilities whose omission would have caused talk among the servants.

Josselyn, Senior, had somewhat withdrawn into himself since the trip to the studio, and had asked his wife to cancel all engagements for a week or two. Lillian amiably obeyed, and after that the silence and chill of hidden anger and suppressed fear fell upon the "Villino dell' Orto." Once George Lathrop came to dinner, and for a few hours the shadow lifted, and now and then Joe came in, perceiving that something was wrong, but assuming, as they were all assuming, that everything was normal and pleasant between the Josselyns. Otherwise they were alone.

Lillian was bewildered and made a little uneasy by the suddenness with which this change in atmosphere had come about, because, as she told herself a dozen times a day, nothing had happened, after all. When Tom and Ellen had so abruptly entered the studio, on that eventful Wednesday morning, she had been ready with her laughing explanation of her presence there, and she had seen that they accepted it. Lillian was not the woman to be caught unprepared in such a situation.

The smiling greeting with which she had risen to meet them: "Ah, now—you've spoiled it all!" was daunting in its bright sincerity. She had had a kiss for her husband, she had had an arm about Ellen as she elucidated: "Tom, darling, we've been scheming and scheming for a chance to get my picture painted for your birthday—what bad luck brought you in today?"

And Gibbs had promptly and concernedly followed her lead.

"And how'd you get in, Dad? The car broke down with Lillian yesterday on the Great Neck hill—Torrens got in as far as the service station—did he telephone you?"

"And I had to telephone the Wallaces," Lillian added, wide-eyed, "and Tom, I simply invited myself to stay with old Mrs. Pepper at Great Neck all night. I didn't telephone you because I had this date for an early sitting with Gibbs."

"Take a look at it!" Gibbs said, at the easel. "Awfully rough now, of course! It's just laid in." The old man, studying the canvas, nodded.

"Still, you've caught it!" he said. "Car broke down, eh?"

"No, it was skidding," Lillian, at her husband's side, also looking at the portrait, explained. "The road was simply lined with cars, Tom. It was snowing hard, you know, and I got terribly nervous. Finally Torrens gave it up, too. He's been talking about the brake, you know, and he was as nervous as I."

She was smiling, eager, garrulous for Lillian.

May Be Hard Task to Teach Parrot to Talk

Parrots can be more obstinate than mules, but if you are a determined instructor and not easily discouraged excellent results will follow.

Remember that the best talker is not the one with the gayest plumage but the gray parrot found principally on the west coast of Africa.

If the parrot is to become a talker he will, in the first three or four days, begin to make confused and indistinct efforts to copy your remark. Whenever he does this reward him with a taste of his favorite delicacy, as this will induce further efforts.

In a few weeks the parrot should be able to exclaim "good day" or repeat any remark you have taught him whenever he sees any one enter or leave.

Other appropriate phrases can be taught in the same manner, such as the useful remark, "Time to be going," by uttering the phrase as you look at your watch. It is always wise to teach each sentence separately, never starting a new one until the previous one has been mastered.

In three or four months your parrot should be a speaker of some pretensions. If, however, at the end of this time he has shown no sign of profiting by your lessons be assured he never will. The most to expect is that he may one day make a good whistler.

Politeness

Little Johnny was to be taken to the movies, and as they were on their way his mother told him to be sure to be polite in everything he said. After they were seated, Johnny found that the man's head in front of him obstructed his view. Remembering to be polite, Johnny said: "Please, sir, won't you pull in your neck about six inches?"

They Like Felix

"Felix," a slow-moving old rat, is a pensioner at the Derby railway station, London, and is jealously protected by the station's staff. He will nibble his food, undisturbed, in full view of the throngs that pass in and out. If anyone tries to molest him, the station employees are quite indignant. It is their boast that no dog or ferret dare touch Felix and that he is too wise to take poison.

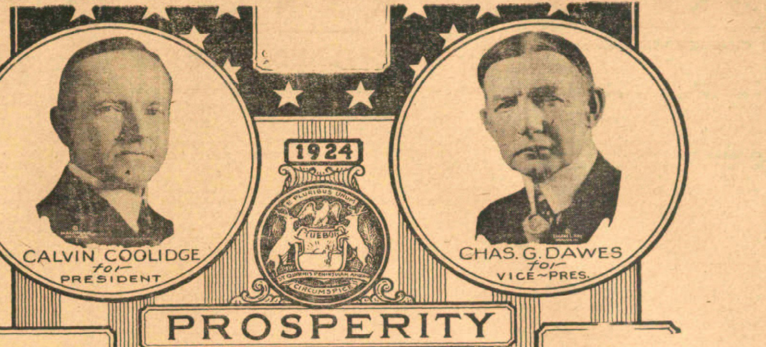
COOLIDGE & DAWES EASY WINNERS



Tuesday's Election gave the Democrats the worst set-back they have suffered in some years, and shows conclusively what the American people think of practical Democracy, Socialism and Popocratism. They have expunged it all from the decalogue, and safe and sane methods appeal in thundering tones to the masses, By the time all the precincts are heard from in this country, Coolidge & Dawes will have more thoroughly cleaned the political house of all opponents than has has been done in a decade. Notwithstanding Woodrow Wilson's League of Nations was one of the greatest pieces of diplomacy the Democrats ever accomplished, and notwithstanding the Harding–Coolidge regime has cost untold millions in scrapped battleships and wasted and rotting munitions, the electorate of the United States on Tuesday signed for another four years of the G. O. P. rule.

The Fellowship Forum is one of the leading Klan papers in the country and the Forum has a staff correspondent who went up to Wisconsin in order to get the goods on La-Follette because the corespondent knew that LaFollette had been the guiding spirit in Wisconsin's affairs for the past 40 years. The correspondent wrote a long article in which he said that Wisconsin was one of the highest taxed states in the union. In 1922 Wisconsin's tax was about 12 dollars per capita while Michigan's tax was over 24 dollars per capita. In other words Michigan's taxes are twice as high as LaFollette's state taxes and we also see that the Klan correspondent is amazingly untruthful.

International Anniversary To Be A Memorable Event

The quarter centennial celebration of the International Live Stock exposition at Chicago, November 29th to December 6th promises to be a history making occasion in many ways, according to B. H. Heide, Secretary-Manager of this well known show.

The social side will be especially emphased this year. Numerous reunions and banquets will give visitors an unusual opportunity to meet their friends from all parts of the country and renew old acquaintances. The business interests of Chicago have arranged unusual forms of entertainment for guests at the metropolis during International week.

The live stock contests between superior specimens of cattle, horses sheep and swine promise to be of a rare sporting character since many of the previous champions have been retired and the winners this year are expected to include numerous "dark horses."

The Grain and Hay Show will prove to be an exciting battle ground where the relative merits as crop producing regions of the various sections of the continent will be fought out among over five thousand out standing samples of grains, small seeds and hay. Some portions of North America have enjoyed favorable conditions this year and others have suffered from unseasonable weather, but competition will be equalized by dividing the territory into zones.

The Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations are planning to make interesting and valuable exhibits, showing the results of recent investigations in many lines of agriculture. The subjects treated will include many of timely importance such as the best use to make of the soft corn crop.

A Junior Live Stock Judging Contest will be held on the opening day between the various state championship teams for national honors. The three young boys or girls who make the highest individual scores will be awarded agricultural college scholarships by the Chicago Association of Commerce.

A feature of the night Horse Show this year will be the class for the old time four horse hitch which is coming back in social favor in the east and abroad. A busy week of education and entertainment is promised all visitors to the International Live Stock Exposition at Chicago the first week in December by the management.

A Successful Auction

The Congregational church held a Community Auction Sat. Nov. 8th and due to the very cold weather only a fair sized crowd attended. However there was a great deal of enthusiasm and fun and the church cleared a little better than $200, which will go toward the church debt.

The Congl. church people wish to take this means of expressing their heartiest thanks and appreciation to all in the community who helped in any way to make the auction a success.

Explanation By The Light Company

On Wednesday night considerable inconvenience was roported by not having lights in the village of North Adams. Mr. Avis wishes to explain that owing to an unavoidable accident this could not be helped but he had the break repaired at once. The road gang on M-14 were blasting stumps and some of the debris tangled in the wires, damaging them considerably. Mr. Avis hopes no more such accidents will happen and will do his best to prevent further trouble.

Hard Luck Anyhow

Marshall Calhoun County Fair according to reports, is having a hard time keeping on earth at all. The value of its grounds and personal property is estimated at $24,000, and no less than five law suits have been started against the society to collect due bills for funds advanced for supplies.

Over at Jackson nobody knows how much the show is in the hole but it is variously estimated at $7,000 to $10,000 with not very good prospects in front and horrid memories behind.

When the supervisors found how things stood they invited Manager Burris to step out, which he hated to do, but finally tendered his resignation. Too much one-man control and too many flipper flopper wheels of chance is blamed by the board, but it is dollars to doughnuts that after a meteoric career in which bad foundations and precepts finally brought a crisis, and needing a goat, Burris was handy—so they used him. It is likely Burris has carried the fair in his pocket, but he won't do so any more.

Fowler Stabbing Affray in Court

Tom Lorenzen who was arrested by Sheriff Bates for attempted murder on complaint of Elmer Fowler of Wheatland, was brought into court before Justice Glenn Miller last week and testimony taken from Fowler, the injured man. According to his account of the affair matters are considerably different than was at first reported hereabouts. It seems that Lorenzen who was employed by Fowler's father on the farm decided to go to Jackson the next day, which was objected to by young Fowler because work was pressing. Fowler asked Lorenzen why he had not made the request earlier, so matters could be arranged, to which the farm hand gave an unpleasant reply. Finally, Fowler admits, he called the other man "a liar" Of course there are many men of many minds, but not all of them will take such an accusation without fighting, and Lorenzen took a knife and proceeded to cut up his opponent hash house style. Fowler received three deep cuts in the back and one in the abdoman.

Though weak from loss of blood the injured man managed to drive his car to the home of his father and report. He was put to bed and Dr. McFarland summoned. In a few days he had recovered sufficiently to visit the doctor's office.

Dr. McFarland testified that though Fowler lost considerable blood from cuts 2 inches deep and the doctor at first feared a lung was punctured, he did not apprehend any serious results. Fowler went home and Lorenzen is rusticating a few days in jail until the prosecution can find out if it is safe to call a man a liar before his face and eyes.

We understand the case has been adjourned two weeks which will be mighty good practice considering the shape it is in.

Back Don't Bother Me Now

Lincoln, Nebraska. — "My back would bother me so and when I had to do any heavy lifting it made me sick to my stomach with the pains in my back. I have my housework to do and four babies to take care of so when I heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I took it and I feel better. My back don't bother me and I can eat more and work. DOLEZAL, 1201 Garber Ave., Lincoln, Nebraska.

Felt Better At Once

Volga City, Iowa.—"I will tell you what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me. I was all run down and could hardly be on my feet. I was so cold I could not keep warm. I had numb feelings and then heat flashes would pass over my body. I had severe pains in my sides and was very nervous. I saw your advertisement in the newspapers so I thought I would try your medicine. My husband got me a bottle of the Vegetable Compound and I began to feel better as soon as I started taking it. I have taken it off and on for three years now. I keep house and do all my work for my husband and two little boys and make my garden. I feel fine and I tell others what the medicine has done for me. I think it is the best medicine in the world for women."—Mrs. THOMAS GRINDLE, Volga City, Iowa.

Can Do Any Kind of Work

Fouke, Arkansas.—"I had the 'Flu' and after that I had a pain in my side and was not able to do my work I was so weak. I found an advertisement in a paper and it told what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound would do, and I took it. Now I can do any kind of work I want to. I think every family ought to keep it in the house all the time and I intend to do so."—Mrs. DORA PHILYAW, R.R. No. 2, Fouke, Arkansas.

Over 100,000 women have so far replied to our question, "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?"

98 per cent of these replies are "Yes."

This shows that 98 out of every 100 women who take this medicine for the ailments for which it is recommended are benefited by it.

This goes to prove that a medicine specialized for certain definite ailments—not a cure-all—can and does do good work. For sale by druggists everywhere.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Some Causes and Results of the Great Victory of the Republican Party.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

REASONS for the tremendous Republican victory in the national election are not far to seek. First among them come confidence in Calvin Coolidge and faith in his wise devotion to the public welfare, and the repugnance of a vast majority of the American people for extreme radicalism. Mr. Davis was not a radical, nor was his platform, but the "LaFollette menace" was an actuality, threatening a deadlock in the electoral college and throwing of the election into congress with the possibility of the choice of Charles Bryan as chief executive, and about 18,000,000 voters decided that this should not be. LaFollette, of course, never had a chance of being elected, but he did have a chance of carrying several of the northwestern states in addition to Wisconsin, which was conceded to him. His popular vote in some places, especially in Iowa and several of the larger cities, was heavy, but in the main the farmers, upon whose discontent he had counted, failed him. Furthermore, it was demonstrated again that the vote of organized labor cannot be delivered, for instead of going to LaFollette in a body, as Gompers recommended, it split along normal party lines. One thing LaFollette and his "menace" did was to bring out the largest vote ever cast in an American election, and this only helped pile up the Coolidge plurality of about 10,000,000.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE on March 4 next will take fresh hold on the helm of the ship of state with the pleasant knowledge that the new congress is safely Republican and that the little radical group has lost the balance of power, even in the senate. In the house there will be probably approximately 250 Republicans, only 12 of whom cannot be counted upon to support the President's policies. Without this dozen the administration seems assured of a margin of about twenty above a majority. The Democrats will number about 185. One Socialist and two Farmer-Labor members were elected.

The situation in the senate will be better for the Republicans than they had anticipated. At this writing the result in several states is still in doubt, but it is likely that the new upper house will contain 54 Republicans, only four of whom are definitely in the LaFollette group; 41 Democrats, and one Farmer-Laborite. Forty-nine constitutes a majority in the senate. There are six Republican senators who have occasionally voted with the LaFollette bloc, but they can be counted on to join with their party colleagues in the organization of the body. Especially gratifying to Republicans and to the more conservative citizens generally was the defeat of Senator Magnus Johnson of Minnesota, Farmer-Labor, by Thomas D. Schall, the Republican blind congressman. It was thought for several days that Senator Brookhart of Iowa also had been beaten by Daniel F. Steck, Democrat, but when the returns were rechecked the man who ran as a Republican and at the same time supported LaFollette for the Presidency was slightly ahead.

AMONG the interesting results of the election was the selection of two women governors—the first to be so honored. Mrs. Nellie T. Ross was elected by the Democrats of Wyoming to succeed to the office of her husband, the late Governor Ross, and under the law will take office as soon as she qualifies. In Texas Mrs. Miriam Ferguson, Democrat, set out to vindicate the honor of her husband, who had been impeached and removed from the governorship, and she succeeded in defeating her Republican opponent on the face of the returns, although he has demanded an official tabulation of the vote before he will concede her victory.

Al Smith, governor of New York, gave a new and most impressive demonstration of his popularity by overcoming the plurality of 860,000 by which Coolidge carried the state and defeating Theodore Roosevelt for the governorship by about 165,000 plurality. In Illinois the Coolidge plurality was tremendous and the entire state Republican ticket was elected, but Governor Small ran far behind, and Charles S. Deneen's plurality for United States senator was cut down a lot by Albert Sprague.

Mixed results attended the active participation of the Ku Klux klan in the election. In Indiana Ed Jackson, Republican candidate for governor, was supported by the klan and though he was elected, he ran a long way behind the national ticket. In Texas the klan suffered severely, for Mrs. Ferguson is its avowed foe and made her campaign largely on that issue. In Kansas the klan helped pile up a huge vote for Ben S. Paulen for governor. William Allen White, independent anti-klan candidate, ran third. Other Kansas candidates whom the klan opposed were successful. In Colorado, judging by incomplete returns, the klan elected both the governor—Clarence C. Morley, and a senator for Nicholson's unexpired term, Col. Rice Means. In Denver it made almost a clean sweep. Jack Walton, the impeached and removed governor of Oklahoma, sought election to the United States senate on the anti-klan issue and was beaten by W. B. Pine, Republican, which probably would have happened even if the klan had reversed its vote. Ohio yielded the Ku Klux what is accounted a victory. Governor Donahey, Democrat, seeking re-election and "favorable" to the klan, defeated his Republican rival, former Gov. Harry L. Davis, "unsatisfactory" to the klan. His plurality was more than 100,000, despite the Coolidge landslide. On the rest of the state ticket four officeholders seeking re-election, all "favorable" to the klan, were re-elected.

NO SMALL part of the credit for the Republican victory is to be given to General Dawes, President Coolidge's running mate, who devoted much of his vigorous campaigning to defending our Constitution and institutions against the attacks of the radicals. Over in France the result of the election was pleasing especially on Dawes' account, for they know him much better than they know Coolidge. Pertinax, political editor of L'Echo de Paris, predicts that now, with the English Conservatives in power, Great Britain more than ever will tend to co-ordinate her action with the United States, which, he believes, will involve collapse of the Geneva protocol on arbitration and security, the assembling of another disarmament conference, and a moderate but strict settlement of the allies' war debts. Le Journal says the same things in other words.

RAMSAY MAC DONALD and his cabinet did not wait for the assembling of parliament, but tendered their resignations to King George, who accepted them promptly and intrusted to Stanley Baldwin the task of forming a new government. The new prime minister soon submitted his selections for the cabinet and they were approved by the king. He is himself first lord of the treasury and Austen Chamberlain is foreign secretary, Lord Curzon being given the ornamental post of lord president of the council. Winston Churchill, free trader and anti-Bolshevist, is chancellor of the exchequer, which is regarded as a bid to the Lloyd George following to join with the Conservatives and also as notice that the loan to Russia is dead. Sir Robert Horne, former chancellor, was offered the minor position of minister of labor, which he refused, and he and his friends feel that he was insulted.

Before quitting office the Labor ministry made an apparently sincere effort to solve the mystery of the alleged Zinovieff letter advising British communists to revolt. Its committee found it impossible to come to a definite conclusion on the matter. The original letter was not produced and never has been seen by the members of the Labor government.

GEN. FENG YU-HSIANG apparently has taken complete control of the central China government at Peking and plans to turn the country over to bolshevism. He has seized the imperial palace, evicting the former emperor and his wife and servants; has occupied all of the Forbidden City and has even taken the horses and motor cars of the deposed president, Tsao Kun. A bolshevist rump cabinet set up by him has abolished forever the title of emperor and all other titles and has confiscated the palace in the name of the state. A further mandate agrees to pay the former emperor $500,000 annually as a private citizen and to appropriate $2,000,000 for the relief of the poor attendants of the household.

M. Karakhan, soviet envoy to China, is said to be most influential in the councils of Feng, and Dr. Sun Yat-sen, leader of the southern China group, has been invited to Peking. Meanwhile General Fu, who fled to a warship at Taku, is waiting for a chance to consolidate the non-bolshevist factions. It will be interesting to see what course General Chang, the Manchurian, will pursue, for it looks as if Feng were not proceeding according to Chang's plans and wishes. The advance guard of Chang's troops arrived at Tien-tsin.

THE movement to deprive President Kemal of Turkey of his power is growing stronger daily and since the grand national assembly has just opened at Angora the crisis may be expected soon. Raouf Bey, former premier and a great naval hero, is the leader of the opposition to Kemal and is supported by such powerful and popular men as Gen. Ali Fuad Pasha, Gen. Kiazim Kara Bekir Pasha, Refet Pasha and Djambolat Bey. The ostensible object of their attacks is Premier Ismet Pasha.

M. RAKOVSKY went to Paris and met Premier Herriot, cementing the Franco-Russian accord. It was announced that Leonid Krassin would be the first soviet ambassador to France, and that Jean Herbette would be sent as ambassador to Moscow.

PREMIER MUSSOLINI is confident that the crisis which threatened him and the Fascisti has passed and that his organization will be stronger than ever. The minister of the interior, Sig. Federzonis, who is regarded as one of the biggest members of the cabinet, and who has won the confidence of the country for his impartiality, intimated, that the Fascisti are cleaning their own house and are taking energetic means to stop the excesses which were complained of by the Italians.

HENRY CABOT LODGE, senior senator from Massachusetts, was stricken in a Cambridge hospital where he had undergone several operations, and at the time of writing the physicians have little hope for his recovery. South Dakota Mayor in Odd Proclamation

Summit, S. D.—An unusual "proclamation" was issued to residents of this village by Olaf Melby, mayor and pioneer merchant. This section of South Dakota has harvested one of the biggest crops in its history, and Mr. Melby, in a message directed to the farmers of his community, urged them to take advantage of bounteous crops and high grain prices to recover and insure their stability.

"Now that we are harvesting the greatest crop in 20 years, with prices above normal, I wish to speak to you as man to man," Mayor Melby wrote. "First, pay your obligations. For debts are like a log jam. Every dollar paid loosens this amount, as it pays the merchant, the jobber, the manufacturer, the banker.

"Do not go into debt. Interest will kill the best individual in the community. Do not work your life out for the other fellow. Do not expect to get rich quick. You cannot make any money unless you invest it in your own business. Do not give up the old cow, or the hogs and sheep. They require a little care that means work, but they never will fail.

"Your home people are interested in you and your welfare. Stick to your community, and you and your family will wear diamonds."

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Should Use Swamp-Root

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview of the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing, be sure and mention this paper.—Advertisement.

Raleigh in North America

Queen Elizabeth's infatuation for Raleigh kept him from going to Virginia with his first expedition for colonization. It is said that the queen promised to defray all expenses of the expedition if Raleigh would not go himself. The result was that Raleigh never saw the territory which is now the United States. But several years later, in 1549, Raleigh went to South America at the head of an expedition to conquer Guiana. On his way back to Europe he stopped in Newfoundland. This was the only time Raleigh ever set foot on the North American continent.—Pathfinder Magazine.

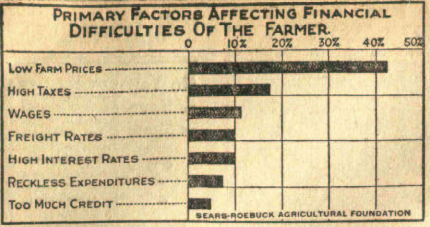
Absolutely Harmless—No Opiates. Physicians everywhere recommend it



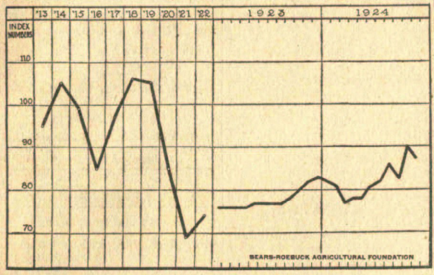
Forty-two per cent of the farmers in the United States blame their financial difficulties on the low prices of farm products, according to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, which has completed a study of the primary factors affecting the financial difficulties of the farmer based on a survey made by the United States Department of Agriculture. Seventeen per cent of the farmers feel that high taxes are the direct cause of the farm depression, eleven per cent blame the high costs for farm labor, ten per cent feel that high freight rates are responsible, ten per cent blame the high interest, six per cent credit the depression to reckless expenditures during boom period, and four per cent think it was too much credit.

An inquiry made by the Department of Agriculture through both bankers and farmers shows that on an average 5 per cent of the farm owners in 15 corn and wheat-producing states lost their farms through foreclosure or bankruptcy during the late depression. Four and a half per cent more had turned over their farms to creditors without legal process, making a total of about 9.5 per cent who had lost their farms with or without legal proceedings. An additional 15 per cent were really bankrupt, but were holding on through the leniency of their creditors. By groups of states the percentage of owner-farmers who lost their farms since 1920 were as follows: Five East North Central states, nearly 6 per cent; seven North Central states, over 9 per cent; and for the three Mountain states nearly 20 per cent. The percentage of tenants who lost their property ran materially higher.

Records of the Department of Justice indicate that in the pre-war years, 5 per cent of all the bankruptcy cases were farmers. During the deflation 14 per cent of all bankruptcy cases were farmers. In some of these states where in pre-war years the farmer bankruptcy cases represented about 7 per cent of all such cases, this percentage in 1922 had risen to nearly 30 per cent.

These losses have not been due to inefficiency on the part of the farmers, points out the Agricultural Foundation, as practically all of them were incurred by men who had been doing fairly well until they entered the period of drastic deflation.

Buying Power of the Farmer



The purchasing power of farm commodities continues to rise. Latest estimates show an average of 4.8 points higher for the first eleven months of this year than during the corresponding months of 1923, according to a report of the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, based on the new index numbers of farm prices prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Farm prices show a combined value of 134 on November 1, 1924, as compared with 100 in 1913. This combined index number includes 30 farm commodities which represent more than 90 per cent of the value of products sold by farms, the Foundation points out. Using August, 1909, to July, 1914, as 100, the purchasing power of these products stood at 87 on November 1 of this year. In 1918 the purchasing power was 106, decreasing to 69 in 1921. In 1922 it rose to 74 and by 1923 the average stood at 78. During the first eleven months of this year the purchasing power of farm commodities averaged 82.3 as compared with 77.5 in the same period a year ago.

Advances in grain, which averages about 22 per cent of the total value of farm products sold, and in price of meat animals, which averages 27 per cent, have been the largest factors in the increase of the farmer's purchasing power since 1921. The grain farmer received during the early part of this year prices about 10 per cent above the pre-war five-year average. This had risen to 30 per cent increase by July. At the same time the general price level of commodities the farmer has to buy ranges 30 to 80 per cent above the 1913 level.

The Defeated Candidates

Unable to overcome the terrific malorities piled up against them last Tuesday by their Reactionary opponents, Calvin Coolidge and Charles Dawes, these two Democratic leaders went down in defeat, and fulfilled a destiny which was mapped out at the close of the Madison Square Garden burlesque as surely as night follows day. Out of such a convention could come but one result—oblivion. The Democrat party is a bundle of contradictions and a crowd of disorganized politicians, who in the convehtion at New York City found their ideas of party planks so far apart that no team work was possible. Democracry of the olden days had disappeared, and in its place had come a younger generation of men whose political aspirations were of a vastly different stripe. The ideals of Hon. William J. Bryan were scarcely recognized. The Great Commoner no longer the political Diogenes of his party, old and broken in spirit, was observed sitting alone and forlorn in the heat of this vast hall. His glory has departed—no longer will the silver tongued orator of the Platte thunder forth the call to caucus; younger heads are at the Council table, younger hands at the helm. Results speak the doom.

URGES DAVIS' ELECTION TO PREVENT DEADLOCK

New York, October.—The New York Times, which is ordinarily friendly to the Republican party, is urging a heavy vote for John W. Davis to prevent the election from going to Congress, with attendant delay and confusion. The Times says this question is of much interest that it ought to induce voters to cast their ballots so that the result will be decisive.

"But it is possible to show mathematically and politically that this interest would be most surely preserved by a turning of detached voters in the doubtful States to Mr. Davis," says the Times. "Even if they went to Mr. Coolidge, they would not certainly give him a majority. But they demonstrably would give Mr. Davis a majority."

Radio Is King of the Air

We sometimes wonder what the next important movement will be in regard to science but cannot help marveling at the handiwork of man which makes it possible to communicate from New York to Chicago freely without wire or visible connection, receiving all the latest markets, the events and last but not least beautiful musical productions rendered by the best artists the world affords. Right out in the wilds of Northern Michigan if you will, twenty miles frcm any human habitation man can set up his little apparatus and talk with the folks at home just as distinctly as though he were in the same room. Explorers lost in the Polar regions receive daily through the long twilight, news from their own firesides.

The 26,000,000 American homes are being very rapidly equipped witn the service and entertainment supplied by Radio. The home circle made more attractive, family ties strengthened, and a higher grade of culture for the individual is being established for the American people. Take an ordinary Sunday evening program, and it is safe to say the average American family never listened to a finer general cultural entertainment. Broadcasting stations are more and more demanding high class performers and many of them render the finest forms of high class compositions.

Ordinarily on a Sunday evening there are renditions on the piano, vocal solos, quartets and orchestra numbers and first class band music Nearly every broadcasting station in our Country is now supplying at least one complete church service on Sunday and sometimes two or more. These religious services are on broad lines by preachers of all denominatious. Further improvements in radio programs are proposed by the Radio Corporation of America through superpower broadcasting stations working in conjunction with local stations.

Set Up New Record For Egg Production

Establishing a new record for tenbird pens east of the Rocky Mountains, White Leghorns owned by W. C. Eckard, of Paw Paw. VanBuren County, won first place in the second International Egg Laying Contest, which closed last week at the M. A. C., Mr. Eckard's ten birds produced 2,622 eggs during the 52 weeks of the test, an average of 262.2 eggs per bird.

The best previous mark for a ten bird pen, in the section east of the Rockies, was 2,531, made at Storrs, Connecticut, in a similar egg laying contest. Second place in the M. A. C. contest went to L. F. Heasely, of Dorr, Michigan whose ten Leghorns totalled 2,350. Eckard's second pen was only fourteen eggs behind the second place winner.

No records were broken by individuals in the contest this year, according to C. F. Ferguson, M. A. C. specialist in direct charge of the contest. Of the 1,000 birds entered in the 100 pens competing, high honors were divided at 285 eggs for the year by a Leghorn owned by Mr. Eckard and another entered by Mr. Heasely.

White Leghorns took the first five places in the entire contest, a pen of Rhode Island Reds, entered by the Milan Hatchery, of Milan placing sixth in the contest, or first among heavy breeds. Others whose pens finished in the first ten included: Chas. Hefferan, Newaygo, Mich. H. A. Keister, Bangor, Mich O. S. Thompson, Allen, Mich. Circle "W" Farm, Gates Mills, Ohio; Northland Farm, Grand Rapids, and Geo. B. Ferris, Grand Rapids.

The grand total of production for the 1000 birds was 163,065 eggs or an average of 163 eggs per bird for all breeds. This is an increase of 3.5 eggs per hen over the contest held a year ago at M. A. C.

Those who are in a "run down" condition will notice that Catarrh bothers them much more than when they are in good health. This fact proves that while Catarrh is a local disease, it is greatly influenced by constitutional conditions.

M. A. C. at Chicago

The M. A. C. has entered eight horses, eleven cattle, thirty one sheep and fifty six swine in the International Live Stock Exposition at Chicago, November 29th to December 6th. The consignment will include excellent specimens of the Percheron, Belgian, Aberdeen Angus, Hereford, Shropshire, Hampshire, Cotswold, Dorset, Oxford Southdown, Rambouillet, Berkshire, Poland China, Chester White Duroc Jersey, Tamworth, Yorkshire and Hampshire breeds. At the last International, the East Lansing institution captured the Yorkshire pen and barrow purples, exhibited the champion and reserve champion swine carcasses and showed the noted Belgian mare "Pervenche," through to the highest honor of her breed.

"International" To Be Greatest Gathering In History

With the official announcement from Washington that President Coolidge has accepted their invitation to attend the Twenty Fifth Anniversary of the International Live Stock Exposition, which will be celebrated at Chicago from Nov 29th to December 6th, the management of that famous show is preparing for the greatest gathering of agricultural people ever brought together in the history of the basic industry.

This will be the first time that the Chief Executive of the United States has attended the "International," the opening of Congress having always interferred, but the importance of this quarter centennial event is deemed by President Coolidge to be sufficient to justify his absence from the Capitol for a short period. Congress had previously recognized the unusualness of the occasion by authorizing, at its last session, the issuance of official medals to be awarded by the United States Department of Agriculture to the principal winners in the live stock competitions at the coming show.

Dairy Short Course To Furnish Testers

Relief from the shortage of trained dairy men to handle the work of Michigan's rapidly increasing list of Cow Testing Associations will be furnished by a special Dairy Production Short Course which is to open at M. A. C. on January 5. With more than 100 associations operating in the state at the present time, to development of testers are at a premium and special attention will be paid to development of testers during this year's dairy course, it is understood.

A dairy manufactures course, designed for those who wish to handle creamery operations, will also open at the college on January 5.

Michigan Bees Have Wide Nectar Choice

Michigan honey bees, aristocrats of their kind, have an unusually wide variety of nectar bearing plants at hand for their selection during the honey gathering season according to R. H. Kelty, apiary specialist at the M. A. C. The additional fact that large surrounding bodies of water insure an even temperature and eveness of rainfall in the summer months gives Michigan bees still another advantage over the less fortunaje honey producers from most other states.

Total failure of the honey crop in Michigan is practically unheard of, according to Kelty, because of the sufficiency of nectar bearing plants and the advantageous weather conditions of the state.

Special effort to call attention of the consuming public to the advantages of honey as a food, and to tell prospective honey producers of the field open in apiary management, is being made throughout the country from Nov. 16 to 22, desiginated this year as "National Honey Week".

STEPPING AHEAD OF THE BANK CROOK

Bankers Association Official Gives Rules to Foil Criminals and Avoid Loss.

By JAMES E. BAUM,
Manager Protective Department
American Bankers Association

The direct cost of all crimes in this country has now reached its highest peak. Statistics reveal startling increases in nearly every type of crime during the past ten years. The total financial loss through the operations of criminals is estimated at more than $3,500,000,000 for this year. A few of the items follow:

Embezzlement	$ 120,000,000
Credit frauds	400,000,000
Burglary, larceny, and petty thefts	250,000,000
Forgery, including worthless and bogus checks	100,000,000
Seaport robberies, piracies and customs frauds	100,000,000
Railroad thefts	25,000,000
Stock frauds	1,700,000,000
Insurance frauds	1,000,000,000
Arson	50,000,000
Miscellaneous	75,000,000

I am giving cold figures, not to startle any one unless it be toward more extreme care in handling and safeguarding funds and valuables. Right here let me quote rules to help foil criminals known as "check passers" or "scratchers"; they will help you to avoid serious loss:

1. Never write checks with a pencil. Use pen and ink or, if possible, a check protector.
2. Fill in all blank spaces.
3. Don't erase. Errors should be corrected by writing a new check and destroying those incorrectly written.
4. Never give a blank check to a stranger and never cash a stranger's check without an indorsement which you have positively verified.
5. Make checks payable to "cash" or "bearer" only when you personally present them at your bank. Otherwise use the name of the person you intend shall receive payment.
6. Never place your signature alone as an indorsement on checks you intend to deposit. Write above or below your signature the words "For deposit only."
7. Never sign blank checks. If you expect to be absent any length of time open a separate account subject to check of your employee or agent.
8. Guard your cancelled vouchers as you would a valid check, leaving none where they may be easily taken.
9. Keep your check books securely locked up and be careful how and where you sign or exhibit your signature.
10. Beware of the magic of the word "certified." Ordinary certification stamps can be duplicated almost as easily as any other rubber stamp.
11. Watch checks which apparently bear the makers' "O. K." or other form of approval. They are more easily forged than the full signature.
12. Safeguard your checks as you would your money, for they represent money.
13. Deposit slips provide space for your name, usually upon the upper lines. Those written incorrectly should be destroyed as otherwise your signature will be available for fraudulent use. You can prevent loss by first writing the detail of amounts deposited and then printing your account name.

The bankers' campaign for everybody to "pay by check" has borne fruit. It has been estimated that today more than 95 per cent. of the business of the U. S. is transacted by the use of checks or other credit instruments. That means about six and one-half billion checks will be written by bank depositors in this country during 1924 and they will total about $500,000,000,000 in amount, or one hundred times the money in circulation.

Banks War on Crooks

The average bank depositor when queried as to what his bank does to protect his deposits, will probably tell you they are kept in a great vault and that armed watchmen are employed, as well as an elaborate and efficient burglary and robbery alarm system. He may not know that the 23,000 banks comprising the American Bankers Association have constantly and conveniently available an army of highly trained specialists who wage a continuous and relentless warfare against the bank criminal. These operatives are within easy reach of any member bank. Criminals know that if they attack a member bank they are attacking one of the most powerful and effective protective organizations in existence.

Another medium by which bankers prevent many financial crimes or losses is the warnings continually broadcast from the American Bankers Association and forty-eight state bankers associations. These warnings keep the trap constantly set and carry out the Association's plan of crime prevention as contrasted with detection.

Danger Ahead

American farmers should not increase their wheat acreage for 1924. If they increase the acreage by three million acres, as is indicated by the Intentions to Seed Wheat Survey of the government, and normal conditions again prevail in other wheat producing countries, next year's wheat market will be glutted and once more wheat prices will be ruinously low. The present high price of wheat is due to poor crops in other countries and in certain sections of the United States.—W. M. Jardine, Advisory Council, Agricultural Commission, American Bankers Association.

Where Bankers Come From

The smaller localities are to a large extent the recruiting ground for the profession of banking. A recent survey discloses the fact that of 682 senior bank officers in the largest cities of the United States, 406, or 60 per cent, were born in the country or in small towns.

Of the 682 senior bankers of large cities, 427, or approximately 62 per cent, had a high school or college education. The conclusion is reasonable that the smaller environment, coupled with an education, makes for success in the banking field.—American Bankers Association Journal.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

"It is My Business To Obey The Law"

Among the letters received by the Independent in answer to the question, "Do You Break the Volstead Act?" is the following, from a clear thinking American citizen:

"In stating that I obey the law expressed in the Eighteenth Amendment, I believe that I speak for millions of people in this country from whom you will in due time hear to your abundant satisfaction. The signature below represents a family of five adult children, two of whom served in France, and none of whom ever saw liquor on their home table. I am sure I make the statement truthfully for all, though three distinct homes are now represented.

"I know the taste of liquor, have moderately used ale and beer in the years when it was fit to drink and am frank to say that at the time of its passage I believe the Volstead act too drastic. But I have changed my mind, and now believed that, in spite of its scandalous evasion, the operation of that law has meant more of public advantage to this country than any other upon our books. I have never voted the prohibition ticket in my life. Moreover, I know that my belief and practice are very generally shared by the best friends of a lifetime.

"My most valued friends believe as I do, in certain things outside the liquor question. We have grown up believing in democracy as a system of government which demanded our loyal co-operation in obedience. Recognizing that under such a system society called upon us for the imposition of certain regulations for the good of all we have directly or indirectly accepted such laws, and are bound by them. Self imposed, we are quite unable to follow the finespun theories about personal liberty of gentlemen whose erudition and prominence are not to be denied, yet whose philosophic circumvention seems only to have brought them to the precise position of Sancho Panza, whose long ago platform for the government of his earldom was:—I should be as much king of my own dominion as any other king; and being so, I would do what I pleased; and doing what I pleased, I should have my will and having my will, I should be contented; and, being content, there is no more to be desired; and when there is no more to desire, there's an end of it.'

"No; with my beliefs, I may not pick and choose the particular laws it pleases me to obey, defying others. And the attitude of gentlemen in prominent places, who presumably claim for themselves a status of desirability as loyal citizens, with some mysterious right of optional obedience, I simply do not understand. Happily it is not my business to understand them. It is my business to obey the laws.

Arthur Emerson"

Hillsdale County's Dairy Possibilities

Hillsdale county's dairy cow population according to figures announced by the Blue Valley Creamery Institute, of Chicago is increasing. This statement was sent to us from Chicago and concerns an area embracing approximately one-eighth of the state in this section, and it is believed to hold true for the county proper.

A 60 per cent gain in the number of dairy cows two years old and over, is noted in the district over the preceding year, while the increase for the state as a whole was 55 per cent as compared with 1923 The entire United States shows an increase amounting to 6 per cent, government figures show.

The number of heifers 1 to 2 years old, as compared to the total number of cows in this district seem to be below the average, indicating the intention to bring less young stock into milk in the near future.

In citing these figures the Institute calls attention to the fact that the United States needs 320,000 more cows every year if production is to keep step with the normal growth of demand for dairy products. There are 1,412,000 more mouths to be fed in the United States with every passing year and with the increased consumption of dairy products per capita, this added number to the nation's herd will barely suffice to meet the increased demand.

In Memoriam

From a volume of Michigan History we cull the following records of early pioneers of this part of Hillsdale county. Some of our readers will remember these pioneers and a few are related to them

David Beckhardt—Died suddenly at his home in Hillsdale April 9 1892 at the ripe age of 72 years. He was born in Hamburg, Germany Nov. 9, 1819, and resided there until 1840 when he made his way to Havre, France, boarding an old-time clipper ship and moving by sail alone was 53 days on the ocean with all the disagreeable features of that kind of craft. Arriving at the New York docks Mr. Beckhardt was a stranger in a strange land.

He went to Albany and labored for two years with a pork packing firm, laying the foundation of an experience which later served him well in the meat market business. From Albany he went to Buffalo and later to Lodi. New York, where he engaged in the grocery business About this time he was married, and came to Hillsdale in 1850, entering the produce business. He was the father of nine children.

Mrs. Jonathan Benson—Died at her home in Moscow township Nov 16, 1891 after a long illness, at an age slightly more than 76. She was the daughter of Salmon Sharp, the first township clerk of Adams and Moscow which was then consolidated into one township. Mrs. Benson was born in Lock, Cayuga county, New York and suffered all the hardships and terrors of the trip west into the wilderness of Michigan which was then known as a flea bitten land of swamps, Indians and wolves. In 1835 they arrived in Moscow when she was 20 years of age, when old Baw Beese and his tribe fished in the lake that bears his name and red deer roamed the site of North Adams. Later she met the sturdy young farmer, Jonathan Benson, to whom she was married Oct. 26, 1837.

Fifty-four years they grubbed and toiled to clear a beautiful farm home from the woods, rear their family and establish a citizenship. Ten children came to this home to brighten it, 3 sons and 7 daughters two daughters and one son only survive and they are well along in years. Mrs. Benson taught the first public school in the township in a log house one mile from home Her father in addition to his township duties, surveyed roads and contracted to build the first depot in Hillsdale for the Michigan and Toledo railroad. Mrs. Benson was a charter member of the North Adams Methodist church and one of six to organize the first class meeting. The good works of her earnest christian life are closely interwoven with the history of early Methodism in this county. On her dying bed she said: "He who has been with me through life will not forsake me now. I have a glorious hope, wherein Jesus has prepared a place for me in my Fathers' house of many mansions."

Col. Fred M. Holloway—Died at his residence in Hillsdale Sept. 9, 1891, of slow paralysis, at the age of 76 years. He was born in Bristol. New York, Jan. 8, 1815, and came to Michigan in '33 at the age or 18 years. He was married in 1837 and settled in Jonesville 3 years later. Was elected county register of deeds and went to Hillsdale in 1840. Later he was elected postmaster. In 1854 he was appointed Secretary of the Hillsdale County Agricultural Society and later became president, a position he held for many years. To his untiring interest and good judgment Hillsdale county fair owes much ef its success,

Oliver Mosher—Died at his home in Hillsdale April 29, 1892 at the age of 74 years, having been born in Saratoga county, N. Y., where he resided until 1839 when he came to Michigan and settled in Somerset where he followed the occupation of farming. He was a respected pioneer of the township.

Israel Post—Died Jan. 23, 1892 in Adams township. He was born in Castile, N. Y. resided in the home town until 26 years of age when he was married and came to the howling wilderness of Michigan settling on the home farm south of Cutler's Corners where he spent his remaining years, and which remains in possession of his descendants to-day. To this pioneer couple were born 3 children, Israel Jr., Millard and Mrs. A. Williams of North Adams. Mr. Post was the last surviving charter member of the Christian church in his town. He was an effectionate father and a kind neighbor and followed the precepts laid down in Scripture "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for such is the kingdom of Heaven" and he was a dear friend to them, taking especial interest in Children's Day when it was his wont to distribute candy among the children and talk to them in words of kindly counsel

Edith Payne, a little 7-year-old Miss in his neighborhood at his death sadly remarked: "Who will give us candy now Uncle Israel is dead."

In conclusion, we want to say in India it means an entire life career to be well born, in England and Germany it is considered lucky to be born of royal blood, but in America we note that humble birth is no bar to fame, Glory be to our great Republican government which puts us all on our merits! but the residents of this vicinity surely had the best ancestry possible, substantial upright yoemanry of New York and we should make the most of it.

Franklin's Aged Great granddaughter likes Her Poorhouse Home

With ninety one years of life behind her, and happy to spend the "next ten years" amid the surroundings provided by organized charity a great granddaughter of Benjamin Franklin is ending her days on the far western rim of the Republic her illustrious ancestor helped so largely to found and to maintain. She is Mrs. Caroline A. Barnes, who was born March 21st 1833, forty three years after the author of "Poor Richard's Almanack" had passed away. To her, the life and the deeds of the discoverer of the Gulf Stream and the father of modern applied electricity are almost as much of mere history as they are to the average schoolboy, though she still retains the memory of certain sayings attributed to Franklin, which she claims, never have been published.

Bright eyed and clear minded, Mrs. Barnes has refused offer after offer to leave her place in the Los Angeles, California, county farm at Downey, where she finds her pension of $30 a month from the National Government sufficient for all her needs. "If I went away," she says, "I should be lonely for the friends I have made here, and loneliness is the surest friend of death, the enemy of happy old age; unless they make me go, I shall never leave this place." Fortunately, there is no intention on the part of any one to "make" her leave her place in life at the county farm, though funds have been raised and are waiting to put her in a rose covered bungalow in Southern California, with an elderly woman as a companion, if ever she changes her mind.

"Contentment," Mrs. Barnes said to me, when I last saw her a few days ago, "is a mixture of industry and idleness. I work and I loaf; just enough, and not too much, of each. Here, they let me work when I want to work, if I went away from here they wouldn't let me work at all, and all rest and no work will rust the best engine. I expect to live at least ten years longer, for I want to see all the wonders and changes of a full century between my birth and my death.

"I am the youngest of fourteen children, and my father, Thomas Mervin, lived to be 102 years of age. My mother, Charlotte Bach, they called it Bash in those days died when I was 2 years old. My mother's father was Richard Bach, a composer and singer of Philadelphia, and founder of a chorus or company of singers, which in those days numbered 100 persons, a large musical organization for that period. My grandmother, Mrs. Bach, was Sarah Franklin, daughter of Benjamin Franklin, and thus I became one of the few remaining direct descendants of the man who contributed most largely to the drawing up of the Declaration of Independence."

Mrs. Barnes entered the county farm October 1, 1923. and has been there since. It seems probable, if she is allowed to follow her own inclinations, that she will remain there the remainder of her life, which she plans will equal, if not exceed, the number of years her father remained on earth. She has a badge of membership in the Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, the organization of veterans of the Civil War, and also claims to be a member of the Women's Relief Corps, another similar society. But her greatest treasure is a costume patterned after those worn by the women of Revolutionary Days. Occasionally she dons this, and entertains the other inmates of the farm with stories of the closing days of the eighteenth century, which were handed down to her by her grandmother and her father.

Many of the details of her early life are lost to her memory, but she recalls with ease incidents which have been told her of the life of Franklin. Inasmuch, however, as none of these incidents are different from those told in books written about Franklin, particularly Bigelow's interesting work, it is possible that she obtained them from reading these volumes. In the long years that have passed it is not improbable that she has so incorporated these incidents into her own thoughts that she believes they were told her by the direct descendants of America's first ambassador to Europe.

The most striking characteristic of Mrs, Barnes appears to be her unceasing industry, and her ability to move about with comparative ease and without assistance. She claims to have, in her former home in Vineland, a number of relics, letters and personal belongings of her illustrious ancestor, but her memory as to their exact whereabouts is hazy, and if she has any such relics in her possession at present, she seems not to know where they are or of what they consist.

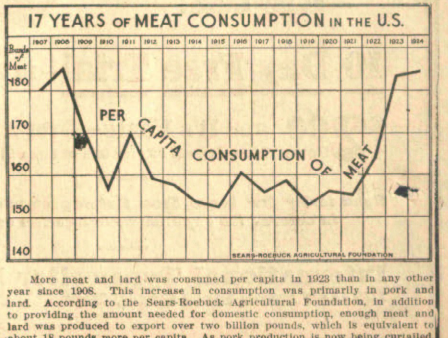
There is less price variation due to quality in hogs than in any other animal in the live stock kingdom. Yet, quality speaks, even on the hog market, with top prices going to the smooth, plump porkers. According to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, during the past year choice fat-backs in the lightweight class on the Chicago market, averaging from 150 to 200 pounds, brought from 37 cents to $1.50 per hundred over common hogs of the same class. At the beginning of the year choice lightweights were selling 37 cents a hundred over the commons. Through February highest prices for lights were 81 cents over the low price. During March, April, May and June the spread narrowed only to widen again through July and August. In October top prices in the lightweight class were hovering around $10.00 while low quotations were two dollars less per hundred.

Butcher and bacon hogs are graded as choice, good and medium in the heavyweights, and choice, good, medium and common in other weights. Formerly there existed a grade known as prime, which possessed the maximum of condition, form and quality. At present it is extremely difficult to get this grade in the desired market weights. Choice hogs have the conformation and quality that are desired in prime hogs, but are not quite so well finished. Good pure bred sires are relatively cheap now and their use would insure higher quality litters next spring.



More meat and lard was consumed per capita in 1923 than in any other year since 1908. This increase in consumption was primarily in pork and lard. According to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, in addition to providing the amount needed for domestic consumption, enough meat and lard was produced to export over two billion pounds, which is equivalent to about 18 pounds more per capita. As pork production is now being curtailed, the 1924 figure of meat consumption is not likely to be equaled in 1925.

"So I thought this was my chance to pay a little attention to Mrs. Pepper. We were going to have her over to the house, Tom, you know, and we never did! And Lindsay was there, I thought he had gone to Washington, but he was there, and he had to make an early start for town this morning, so it all fitted in!"

Thus Lillian, readily and innocently. Gibbs, apparently indifferent to the conversation, was squinting at his canvas, rubbing the wet paint with a tentative finger. The old man stood staring at the picture, too, with unseeing eyes. He was heartsick at finding himself, his years and his dignity, forced into a hideous role. He knew now that he was being deceived, if not in actual fact, in the underlying motive so much more important than the fact. He knew what simplicity and ingenuousness from Lillian meant. And standing there in the pleasant winter brightness of the studio, with the fire snapping gaily behind him, and his wife's soft hand on his arm, his heart burned with anger and shame.

Ellen had not spoken at all. She stood like a woman of wood beside the fire. Marie, the shriveled little janitor's wife, bobbling in, piped a query as to whether "Madame Geebs" would have some coffee, too. Ellen gave her a dumb shake of the head for negative. She was afraid she was going to faint. She felt broken, dazed, struck to the heart. It was all a bad dream, Lillian so pleasantly talkative, Gibbs scowling at his work, her father-in-law gallantly struggling to regain his composure after the sudden revulsion of feeling, and herself silent, sick, helpless. Fool that she had been to think that she could convict them! What was she to gain, even supposing the worst to be true, and herself successful in forcing them to confess it! Had the painter, with his clever, bronzed face and his mop of silver hair, ever been anything to her except a cruel and alien figure? Had she ever rested her black head against that loosely hanging linen smock, and felt the delicious strength of that big arm about her?

He was angry now, she said to herself, but it did not seem important. It was too late for anger of his to concern her.

Like a scene in a play, Torrens arrived. He came upstairs to say that he had just brought the car from Great Neck. He was full of the accident, concerned to know how Gibbs had managed the small car.

"Roads is filled with cars, Mr. Josselyn. You didn't attempt to get out to Wheatley Hills last night? I never seen the roads so bad—"

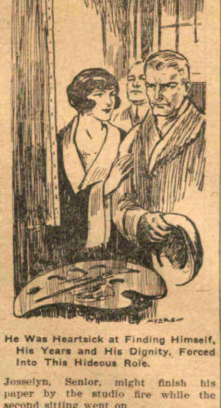
"Mr. Pepper managed to get through this morning," Lillian said. Her husband turned to the chauffeur with directions. Gibbs somewhat awkwardly sauntered over to stand beside his wife. In all her own distress she felt a pang of pity that Gibbs should be ashamed and embarrassed.

"It must have been a heavy snow, down there," he offered.

She raised heavy eyes. Her voice was lifeless.

"It was a stormy night. And—and I had a toothache."

Lillian, joining them, was all sympathy. It was arranged that Ellen should go at once to her dentist, and



He Was Heartsick at Finding Himself, His Years and His Dignity, Forced Into This Hideous Role.

Josselyn, Senior, might finish his paper by the studio fire while the second sitting went on.

"And you must be tremendously surprised when you get the picture, on your birthday!" Lillian said playfully.

Thus began the farce they were still playing. They had all come home together in the car, after a lunch at Sherry's where more than one envious outsider noticed the four handsome Josselyns laughing and chatting together. Gibbs had been full of concern for his wife, and had seen that she was comfortably tucked into bed when she got home. He had gotten her books, magazines, he had brought Tommy in for goodnights, and talked cheerfully to his wife, while he undressed the child by the fire. And Ellen, watching him, had been afraid that she would suddenly scream out, and go mad.

She loved him so—she loved him so—her big, clever masterful Gibbs! She had loved him since the hour they met, and she could not unlove him now. She longed, with unceasing hunger gnawing at her heart, to have him her own again, to have his laughter, his confidences, his moods all for her. Ellen was not proud. She had told him a thousand times, in their happy years, that her life and her being were bound up in him; she could not change because he had changed.

Tommy's prayers were said—Tommy's goodnight kiss given—and all the while she knew—she knew that Gibbs was longing, longing to get downstairs, to meet Lillian for one minute, for just the necessary second, that should reassure them both, that should equip them for fresh play-acting.

And she knew he was not happy, that he never could be happy again in the old way—nor in the new way, either! As surely as the day would come when Lillian would give herself to him; and Ellen said feverishly to herself that it might already have been—so surely would the day come when he would read that cold and cruel heart of her aright, and would shudder away from it in utter sickness of soul.

Josselyn, Senior, had aged ten years in this week. His pride was pierced in a vital spot. He had liked his position as elder in this houseful of brilliant young persons; he had admired Gibbs, Lillian, and Ellen, in their separate spheres, and had liked nothing so much as to make them happy, to be the power that could indulge and please them untiringly.

Now accepting their ready explanations in the same spirit that Ellen did, he was awakened from the fool's dream. He saw himself an old man, gulled and blinded, put off with empty caresses. He saw himself bringing untold suffering upon Ellen by his sentimental dream of having the younger family beneath his rooftree. He saw her life ruined, his boy's life ruined, his own old age dishonored. Of Lillian he thought little: for many years he had realized that whoever might pay for his second wife's delinquencies, it would not be his second wife. There was no punishing Lillian; her heart was like a mirror that could give back only a reflection of her own charms.

And yet, of them all, during this strange week, it was Lillian who was really enduring the severest mental discomfort. For Lillian, discomfort of any sort was new, and she tried a hundred times to writhe away from her apprehensive thoughts.

For although it had been perfectly true that Lillian on the night of the storm had gone to seek unexpected hospitality from old Mrs. Pepper at Great Neck, the fact she had successfully concealed from her husband was that Mrs. Pepper at this time had been making a long visit to her daughter in Montreal. Lindsay Pepper, keeping bachelor quarters with his Japanese boy, had welcomed her and Lillian, resting and warming herself by his fire after her adventures, had assured him gaily that he must find her a chaperon before dinner-time, or somehow, anyhow, she must get back to Tom, and the "Villino dell' Ooto."

While Ellen, restless and suffering, had been wandering about the house at Wheatley Hills, and while Gibbs, thinking perhaps of Lillian's coming in the morning, had been dressing for his dull dinner at the club, Lillian had been experiencing her own uneasiness, too. Lindsay's devotion to her she had never questioned; it was one of the elements in her life with which her fancy liked to play, but she realized now that she had never truly estimated its depth and its power.

The storm was gathering in fury, and the friends to whom Lindsay was duly telephoning, one after another, regarded his gay suggestion of "getting together for a party" as something less than mad. Finally, he had to face her ruefully with the simple summary: "Nothing doing!"

There was left them the alternative of struggling out into the storm, fighting their way for more than a bitter mile to the station, getting into the city by eight o'clock, when Lillian, wet and blown, might still join the party at the Plaza, leaving Lindsay to dine and amuse himself otherwise as his fancy dictated. And had Lillian foreseen the events of the following morning, she would certainly have adopted this course at any sacrifice.

But his house was delightfully warm, and Kioto's dinner was already dispensing a delicious odor. No one need ever know that his mother had not chaperoned this affair, the Japanese was discretion's self, and Lillian was no girl to be fluttered by a touch of the unexpected. More, she began to enjoy the almost forgotten emotion of terrified pleasure, the situation was full of theatrical beauty, and she herself was the leading woman. She borrowed a richly embroidered mandarin coat which Pepper sometimes wore about the house, and came downstairs a vision of marvelous beauty. It was not only pleasantly exciting; it was the easiest thing to do. And Lillian, above all things, loved ease.

And then had come the early trip into town, for Lindsay was leaving for Montreal, to bring his mother home, and Lillian had to keep her engagement with Gibbs. Lindsay was all devotion; this attitude, in fact, was the one element in the matter of which Lillian had taken no account. He alarmed her with the vehemence of his affection, and made her nervous and uncertain. She had supposed that he would leave her at the art studio, but instead he came upstairs, and the two men talked together a few minutes.

During this time Lillian experienced exquisite uneasiness. Gibbs showed a disconcerting familiarity with old Mrs. Pepper's movements. When had she gotten back? How did she find Montreal?

"I didn't know you knew old Mrs. Pepper so well?" Lillian said, when Lindsay was gone.

"Oh, I see her sometimes, watching the tennis," he answered carelessly. "Now take your wraps off, and I'll have Marie bring you in some coffee!" Her big fur coat in his arms, he caught up her bare hand. "No ring?" he smiled.

For he was painting her in a dull green robe, and the big jade ring she frequently wore was an excellent bit of color in the picture.

If she had had the quickness to say that she had left it at home! But Lillian was not quick at best, and just now she was tired and confused. She had left it on the washstand in the bathroom next to Mrs. Pepper's room; she remembered its exact position, and she said that she would write Mrs. Pepper at once, and ask her to return it.

"Well, run along, and get into your rig!" Gibbs said unsuspiciously. But when she had disappeared into the little model's room, and when Marie had brought in the coffee, and when he had loitered about waiting idly, and still she did not come, he picked up the telephone book. As well to settle the matter quickly: the delay of a few hours might mean that the ring was swept carelessly away and lost.

And so it was Gibbs' turn to have his castle of dreams fall about him in ashes. When Lillian came innocently back from the model-room, eager for the exquisite hour they had both been anticipating for days, he saw for the first time the woman she really was.

"Your ring's all right," he said presently. "I telephoned. The Jap—said he'd found it."

Her eyes flew to his face. She saw what he knew, and her color faded a little.

"Gibbs," she said quickly and breathlessly. "You know how it happened—I wanted to tell you all about it, anyway. But Lindsay asked me not to. You see, it was storming horribly—"

Beautiful, eager, in her green robe, she poured out the story as she had arranged and adapted it in the night. And slowly mixing the colors on his palette, not meeting her eyes, Gibbs listened. There was a certain shade of yellow-brown that would always speak to him of this hideous moment, with its blare of brassy truth, and its taste of ashes. When she ended, with a wide-eyed, innocent appeal, he smiled, and still with averted eyes, he nodded. "Blame you? No-o-o, I don't blame you, Lillian!" he said gently, after a silence.

"But smile at me, Gibbs," she said, with an uneasy laugh and a rather uncertain resumption of her old confident manner. "Or I'll have to come over there and make you smile!"

Before he could speak again the door was opened by her husband.

She knew that in the moment he had realized her deception about Lindsay Pepper she had come close to losing Gibbs. She felt a contempt for the weakness in herself that had permitted her to risk the love of the man she really desired for the old admirer who had lost, by contrast with the new, any power to stir her. But Lillian could not think that Gibbs would not return to her. He was hurt, he was sore and angry now, but she had still, as a weapon, their dangerous propinquity and she had still the disturbing and appealing beauty he had found irresistible.

So Lillian played her game safely, and bided her time. This storm would blow over, as other storms had. She would need only a little patience, she would need caution. Patience and watchfulness were among Lillian's virtues.

But Gibbs knew that it was all over. He had made a fool of himself, for her, he had told himself that it was only a pretty and exciting game. He had lived in the light of those dark and magnificent eyes, he had thrilled to the touch of her smooth, warm hand.

That he had never actually been false to Ellen was of small comfort to him now. The house of cards had fallen about him through no heroic measure of his own. He had placed himself in an undignified, in a ridiculous position, he had let her deceive him with the rest.

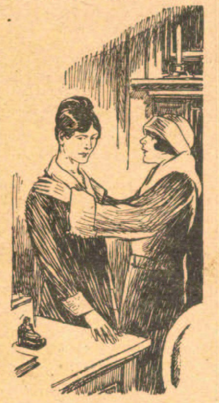
And with the revelation that she had, from sheer good-natured laziness, placed herself under Lindsay Pepper's roof for the night, and with the bitter thought that Lindsay's coarse devotion meant quite as much to her insatiable appetite for admiration as did his own exquisitely expressed friendship, Gibbs' wakening had come.

He could not bear to look at her now, to speak to her. He fell into a mood of angry silence; his father's attitude of watchfulness, Ellen's voiceless question and reproach, and Lillian's tireless efforts to re-establish the old order of things, alike infuriated him.

CHAPTER X

As Ellen came in with an armful of roses, the big clock in the hall began to chime in a leisurely manner, and, glancing at it, she saw that it was twelve o'clock. Long afterward Ellen Josselyn thought of that moment, and of the events that would stamp themselves on her heart and brain before the clock chimed for another noonday. But at the time she only reflected that luncheon was in half an hour, and she was muddy and disheveled; she would put the roses in the study, and fly upstairs to brush and change. Very often she carried flowers into the study; the maids were not allowed to enter the room, and the old man liked to find traces of his daughter-in-law's affection waiting there.

Only Lizzie was in the study. She was standing, pale and staring, by the table, facing the door. She gave a little cry, helpless and forlorn, as Ellen came in. Ellen's eyes flashed to her limp fingers, which lay about the beautiful shining body of a revolver on the table.



"Lizzie—My Child!" Ellen Said in a Sharp Whisper. "What Are You Doing? What Were You Going to Do?"

Before the little cry, half-protest and half-whine, had died away, Ellen had sprung at her, wrenched the terrible thing free, and flung it back into its place in the drawer, pushed her own body against the drawer to close it, and caught Lizzie by the shoulders, forcing the girl to face her. While they stood there, panting, the shadow of death lifted itself slowly from the room. The fire crackled, the sunlight, pouring through green bottle-ends, fell peacefully upon the soft tones of rugs and leather chairs.

"Lizzie—my child!" Ellen said, in a sharp whisper. "What were you doing? What were you going to do?"

No need to answer. Lizzie attempted none. She hung her head; her breath came on childish dry sobs.

Ellen's thoughts raced. There was only one explanation of this: Lizzie was "in trouble." Ellen had noticed tear-stains about the pretty eyes more than once. She remembered now that Lizzie's mother, a village woman, had come all the way to Wheatley Hills one day, in a plumber's delivery van, to hold a mysterious but violent conversation with the girl, who had cried bitterly. Afterward, she had explained to Ellen that ma wanted her to get married, and Ellen had wisely observed that she was right not to take that step until she felt ready for it.

So that was it. This gentle, conscientious little woman had been carrying that burden in her heart.

Ellen made the girl sit down on the great seat by the fire, and sat down herself beside her. She kept one kindly hand on Lizzie's shoulder, and fixed anxious eyes upon the tear-wet, sullen face. The older woman still felt herself to be frightened and shaken, but her tone was as quiet as she could make it.

"Lizzie—my dear! That was a wicked thing to do. Can't you tell me about it? You know Tommy loves you, and I love you. Tell me—"

The tone entirely melted poor Lizzie, whose breast began to heave painfully. Ellen thrust her handkerchief into the girl's hand, and Lizzie sobbed unrebuked, wrenching her whole body in her grief, and making stifled sounds like a person strangling.

Blackbirds Eat Trout; Cows Are Fed on Fish

Those who study Nature find that age-long traits and habits are being in some cases modified and in others entirely changed.

The writer knows of a case where a bird had its habits changed by altered conditions.

A trout fishery was established on an estate in Scotland. During certain seasons a large number of the fry or young trout are crowded together in shallow ponds, as their inclination is to keep together just where the water enters.

One day a blackbird, drinking at one of these ponds, got hold of a young trout, probably accidentally, but found it was excellent feeding. A blackbird does not by habit get its food from the water, but this particular one, having tapped a new source of food supply, returned to it again and again.

The following season this bird had by some means been able to impart its newly found knowledge to all the other blackbirds on the estate, and instead of one bird stealing the young fish, all the birds got into the way of doing so! The owner had either to shoot the blackbirds or give up trying to rear trout.

That an entire change of food is not detrimental may be proved by the fact that many of the cows kept in Norway are fed on fish, yet who will say that a cow's teeth were made for dealing with a diet of this sort?—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Homes for Aged

Accounts are not very definite concerning the establishment of the first home exclusively for the aged. In England in early days and in Germany at the end of the Seventeenth century there were hospitals to which the aged and infirm could go. Such a hospital was founded by St. Cross near Winchester, England, in 1136, and another, the Coningsby hospital at Hereford, was founded in 1614.

Sparta

Sparta was the capital of a small country in the south eastern corner of Greece called Laconia. At first it owned only a small plain on which the town was situated but, although its population and space was so small, it rose to be the most powerful state in Greece.

The population was divided into three classes, viz. the Spartans proper, or the descendants of the Heraclidae, the Perioeci or the descendants of the Dorians who aided the Heraclidae, and the Helots, or slaves. The first class had the privilege of voting but ~~most~~ were each compelled to contribute to the public meal and the youths and maidens were brought up in the strictest manner possible. The rest had no vote but all the commerce and trade was in their hands, as these occupations were disgraceful to a Spartan. ~~Good~~ Their children were not brought up in the rigid manner of the Spartans. The last class were brutally treated by their Spartan masters toward whom they cherished an inveterate hatred, indeed, the Spartans so much feared them that a

When the bystanders pulled the wreck off Younglove he was dead. He lives at Onsted and was returning from a funeral at Battle Creek. There is not much use of an inquest, since the remains of Younglove are certain evidence that he is dead and the battered anatomy of Churchill shows plainly that he too was driving somewhere he hadn't ought. What Do You know About This?

Latest reports from Washington which is the county-seat of America indicate that at least one man has the courage of his convictions and is a little ashamed he did not have them sooner. William B. Shearer of New York city, a heavy tax payer. evidently has become disgusted with the wanton waste which our government is indulging in, and has served an injunction on the Secretary of the Navy, seeking to restrain the demolishing of the giant battleship "Washington" which the secretary had planned to use for a target to shoot at and sink beneath the waves.

Many of our readers probably do not know the tremendous cost of these great fighting machines, and care little about the naval affairs at Washington but as a matter of fact one of the worst criminal acts of literally burning the tax payers money, is the result of such management, when these boats are riddled with shell fire and sent to Davy Jones locker.

They cost around $3,000,000 each but owing to dirty pig headedness or utter neglect in the red tape factory at Washington, numbers of these cruisers have been thus disposed of, instead of junking them and selling the scrap as any economically inclined individual would do if they cared a rap about the interests of the common people. Some of the objections of the recent campaign put out to scare voters were ridiculous in the extreme, and if the issue of battleship waste had been advanced it would have gained a hearing with the electorate. The only reason why these ships cannot be junked and yield many thousands to the exchequers of the nation, is that the graft which would be quite likely to follow in its wake, would eat up every dollar. The cussedness of rotten government is still with us and it makes small difference whether Republicans, Democrats, Popocrats or What-nots are at the helm

FOR DAIRY COWS
THE LARROWE MILLING CO. DETROIT, MICH. U.S.A.

Did you ever stop to think that what you get in the milk pail you must first put into the feed box?

When production falls off it's easy to blame the cow. But she isn't a magician. She can't make something out of nothing.

A good cow, rightly fed, will pay for herself over and over, year in and year out.

But no cow, wrongly fed, will produce milk profitably for any length of time.

That's why it pays to feed Larro. Larro will produce more profit, dollar for dollar, than any other feed, however little you pay for it.

We can prove this by the actual experience of other dairymen, or by a test with your own cows.

Permanent roads are a good investment —not an expense
Road Building Far Behind the Automobile
Millions now recognize the automobile as a necessity. It is no longer a luxury for the few. Sixty per cent of its use is for business.
Because of this the modern paved highway has become an economic necessity.
Yet although the mileage of Concrete Roads and Streets has been steadily increasing, our highway system today lags far behind the automobile. The great majority of our highways are as out of date as the single-track, narrow gauge railway of fifty years ago.
Such a condition not only seriously handicaps the progress of the automobile as a comfortable, profitable means of transportation, but also holds back commercial, industrial and agricultural advancement in practically every section of the country. It is costing taxpayers millions of dollars annually.
Highway building should be continued and enlarged upon.
Your highway authorities are ready to carry on their share of this great public work. But they must have your support. Tell them you are ready to invest in more and wider Concrete Highways now.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Caro—A new industry, The Coaster Wagon Company, has been organized here.

Lansing—The State Administrative board has decided to make the completion of trunk line highway M-23, across Lenawee and Washtenaw counties, one of its major prison labor projects for 1925. Two prison camps are to be established along the route, probably this fall.

Grand Rapids—The establishment of "historical rooms" in each of the city's high schools, where records of Grand Rapids service men and women may be displayed, together with such relics as may be conveniently handled, is proposed by George A. Davis, president of the board of education.

Monroe—Broken glass from a mustard bottle, eaten in a sandwich, caused the death of Lawrence Doudrie, 37 years old, of Monroe. He is said to have mixed the glass accidently with the mustard when he opened the bottle with a knife. Physicians said the glass had penetrated the heart.

Ionia—Fire of unknown origin started in the large woods at the extreme west end of this city. As a high wind was blowing, the fire spread rapidly and several homes were threatened. The woods are not far from the Michigan reformatory. Eeveral hundred men turned out to assist the fire department.

Marquette—The first fatality of the hunting season in the upper peninsula was the death, from exposure, of Harold Knudson, of Michigamme, whose body was found in the woods about 10 miles from Michigamme. Coroner Prin said the condition of the body showed that Knudson died from exposure.

Lansing—Increases in the attendance at the Central State Normal School at Mt. Pleasant have made necessary a revision of the plans for a new library, it was reported to the State Administrative Board. The original plans for a $100,000 structure are to be discarded and new plans prepared for a building estimated at $173,000.

Lansing — The Devil's Bowl, a scenic sink-hole on trunk line M-10, near Alpena, is to be surrounded by a state highway for the benefit of tourists who wish to view the geological curiosity, and several other sink-holes in the vicinity may be set aside as state property according to plans tentatively adopted by the state administrative board.

Lansing—Michigan's problem of financing its future highway development may find its solution in the form of an auto weight tax at the hands of the 1925 legislature. The secretary of state's office is at work compiling the weight of the state's automotive vehicles in order that accurate information may be placed before the house and senate when the question comes up.

Grand Haven—A new steel bridge has been opened to traffic here. This bridge, the largest in Michigan outside of Detroit, is one of the most important engineering feats of the state highway commission and is the connecting link for M-16 and M-11, two important trunk line roads. The structure cost $250,000, paid for jointly by the State and the city of Grand Haven.

Detroit—The Detroit and Windsor Ferry company has awarded a contract to the Great Lakes Engineering works of Detroit to convert the day excursion steamer Britannia into an automobile and passenger ferry. It will ply between Detroit and Windsor. When placed in commission, about January 3, 1925, the new ferry will be able to accommodate 375 automobiles an hour.

Battle Creek—Announcement has been made that Henry M. Stegman and his wife, Dr. Louise V. Stegman, head of the eye department of the sanitarium are about to start a trip around the world visiting China, India, and other lands. The main objective will be Shikarpur, India, where Dr. Stegman has been invited to do special clinical work in a Mohammedan charitable hospital. She is the third American ever accorded this honor.

Lansing—A system of subways for pedestrians, as an adjunct to the state highway system, was given tentative approval by the state admnistrative board. It was agreed generally by Governor Groesbeck and other state officials, that steps must be taken in the near future to protect life at points on the trunk line highways where both vehicular and pedestrian traffic are heavy. The most feasible plan, it was decided unanimously, is the construction of tunnels under the highways.

Lansing — After having fought through the World war without a scratch, Dr. Bruce Pozer, house physician at the Edward W. Sparrow hospital, suffered the loss of one eye in a freak accident here. Dr. Pozer was injured when an automobile he was driving struck a stray horse wandering on the road near Howell and the windshield was broken. A flying piece of glass struck Dr. Pozer in the eye, cutting the eyeball so badly that he immediately lost his sight. Physicians say they will save the sight of the other eye.

Bay City—All the property of the Detroit Bay City & Western Railroad, running from Bay City to Port Huron, via Caro and Sandusky, will be offered for sale here Dec. 17, under an order of the United States District Court. The road has been in the hands of a receiver for nearly two years. The court has set the minimum price at $200,000 or if sold in parcels the road must bring not less than $2,500 per mile for its trackage outside of Bay City and $7,500 for that within the city. Purchaser must contnue to operate the road.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Armistice Day Is Observed Impressively—W. M. Butler Given Lodge's Seat.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

MORE impressively and more generally than ever before, Armistice day was observed throughout the United States, in all parts of the British empire, in France, Italy, and in the smaller allied countries, and wherever a number of veterans of the Great war could gather together, America's chief ceremony was of course at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington cemetery. Upon the tomb President Coolidge placed a wreath at 11 o'clock, and Mrs. Coolidge next quietly laid upon the white marble slab a single white rose, symbolic of the tribute of the motherhood of the land. The British ambassador placed a wreath there, a scarred hero from France laid beside it a bronze leaf sent by the French Union of Face Wounded, and soon the beautiful sarcophagus was covered with floral offerings.

With King George and his sons leading at the great cenotaph in London, the people of the metropolis piled flowers six feet high about the shaft, and solemn services were held at the tomb of the Unknown British Hero in Westminster. For the first time the day was observed generally in Dublin, where the crowds sang "God Save the King."

Another ceremony of the day in Washington was held at the peace cross where Woodrow Wilson is buried. Huston Thompson, chairman of the federal trade commission, was the chief speaker, and he described the war President as another Savanarola who had seen a great vision and found the way of salvation for mankind but "had been compelled to ascend the Mount of Crucifixion" by men who could not understand him and would not be led by him.

At a church service of flags in a New York church, held in connection with the Armistice anniversary, Rear Admiral Bradley A. Fiske warned America that "our probable enemies are becoming stronger to attack and we weaker to resist."

Admiral Fiske argued that competition among nations, while often leading to war, was also the stimulus of progress, and that "from this last it would be illogical to expect human beings could escape." He said the United States was surrounded by virile, ambitious and intelligent but poor nations, and mentioned Germany, Russia and Japan. These countries, he said, "cannot justly be blamed" if they envy America's wealth.

PREDICTIONS that, having been elected to the Presidency, Mr Coolidge would soon get rid of some of the cabinet members selected by President Harding and would also discard some of the Harding policies seem to have been premature if not baseless. No startling change in either respect is to be expected. Secretary of the Interior Work, it is known, would be glad to retire, and Secretary of War Weeks would like to quit official life because of poor health, so they may step out on March 4. It is reported that there may be a new postmaster general, and that Secretary of Labor Davis may be succeeded by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers. Any such changes will be at the request of the present cabinet members concerned. Howard M. Gore, now acting secretary of agriculture, is likely to be left in that position until March 4, when he becomes governor of West Virginia.

From the White House the word emanated that the President contemplated no changes in policy because he was to be chief executive in his own right; that he proposes to keep the ship of state on an even keel and that if he can help it producers, employers and wage earners will not be troubled by uncertainties. He looks on the business boom that has followed his election as due to confidence in the stability of the administration, and intends to keep it stable.

Washington, and to a lesser degree the whole country, are interested in plans for the inauguration, but Mr. Coolidge seems rather bored by the matter. He seemingly doesn't especially want either an inaugural parade or an inaugural ball, but says if they are held he supposes he will participate.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE and Secretary of the Treasury Mellon held a conference on the tax situation and it was made known that the program of the administration would be to postpone any extensive revision of revenue laws until the regular session of congress convening in December, 1925. Because no satisfactory data showing to what extent the present law will cut revenues will be available before the end of the calendar year 1925, Secretary Mellon has been informed that it would be folly to tinker with the present law either during the coming winter or at a special session in the spring. The President is on record as favoring a further tax reduction as soon as feasible, but in view of the information given him by Mr. Mellon he will not seek such action at the coming short session.

WHILE the mortal remains of Henry Cabot Lodge were being laid away in Cambridge, Mass., after a simple ceremony attended by many distinguished men and women, the national capital was speculating as to his successors as senator, as floor leader of the senate and as chairman of the foreign relations committee. Governor Cox of Massachusetts settled the first point by appointing William M. Butler, G. O. P. national chairman, to fill the vacant senate chair. Senator Borah, it is conceded, will become chairman of the foreign relations committee, and the position of floor leader lies between Senators James W. Wadsworth, Jr., of New York, and Charles Curtis of Kansas, both of whom were associated with Mr. Lodge in that work.

IF YOU have any Liberty bonds or federal savings stamps it might be well to investigate their genuineness, for the government secret service in the Middle West has uncovered a ring that has been flooding the country with forged, counterfeited and altered securities of those kinds. Warrants were issued in Chicago for a large number of persons and some of them already are under arrest. Chief of these is Ben Newmark, assistant state fire marshal of Illinois.

TREASURY and customs agents announced in Washington that they had broken up another huge conspiracy, this time of jewelry smugglers who have brought much stuff into the country. At least two murders have been directly connected with the smuggling ring. Both were in Los Angeles. The first was that of Mrs. Theresa Mors, jeweler and antique dealer, for whose death "Kid" McCoy is being held; the other was that of Harry L. Katz, who was shot down a few days ago. The treasury was informed that a man named Medianski, now in flight to a foreign country, was the person who actually had brought the jewelry in.

JOHN PHILIP HILL of Baltimore, congressman and foe of the Volstead law, has had his test in court and came out with flying colors. Tried on charges of violating the dry act by manufacturing intoxicating wine and cider at his home, he was acquitted by a jury in the United States district court. In the course of the trial Judge Soper gave the opinion that the clause of the Volstead act defining beverages of more than one-half of 1 per cent alcoholic content as illegal did not apply to home-made wines and cider, provided the product was nonintoxicating "in fact." Judge Soper also indicated by his rulings and his charge to the jury that the burden rested upon the government to show that such home products were intoxicating in fact and a violation of the law.

Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel of the Anti-Saloon league, analyzing the results of the election, says 320 of the 432 candidates for the house of representatives indorsed by the drys were successful, and the wets elected 82 of the 174 candidates they indorsed. He adds: "Of the 33 senators elected 17 who were re-elected are listed as dry, one is outspokenly wet and two vote for most enforcement legislation, while all but two of the 13 newly elected senators are favorable to prohibition enforcement. Most of these were fought by the wets."

FOR several days it was feared that the strike of railway employees in Austria for higher wages would have serious international results. Two or three of the lines crossing Austria and which were tied up by the strike are of utmost importance to mid-European commerce and there were indications that Italy and Czechoslovakia might seek to intervene. Chancellor Seipel offered his resignation but carried on and finally the strike was settled by compromise. This is well for Austria, for the country cannot afford to lose the guidance of the able Mgr. Seipel.

MUSSOLINI, declaring recently that he would continue to rule Italy and if necessary would recommend the dissolution of parliament and the proclamation of a dictatorship, is making good so far, and seems to have his enemies cowed. The new session of parliament opened quietly but 785 members of the opposition remained away. They issued a manifesto declaring they would absent themselves "so long as the present oppression continues," assailing the recent election as gagged and attacking the good faith of the oath to the king which the Fascisti took.

OPPONENTS of Mustapha Kemal Pasha, president of Turkey, led by Former Premier Raouf Bey, resigned from Kemal's People's party and formally organized the first opposition party. As they include many men of great influence, some of whom were named in this review last week, they are expected to give Kemal a lot of trouble.

SUPPORTERS of the republic in Germany, of whom Foreign Minister Stresemann has declared himself the leader, were much encouraged by a test election for the diet in the district of Anhalt which showed losses for both the Nationalists and the communists. Stresemann has cut loose entirely from the Monarchists, saying it is impossible to work with them. It is predicted that in the elections of December 7 the communists will sustain their biggest defeat since the armistice, for the workmen are returning to the Socialist Democratic party.

MARSHAL CHANG TSO-LIN of Manchuria is now taking steps to set himself up as the real ruler of China, and will go to Peking as soon as military discipline has been established. Already he has made some important changes in officials and promises more, and it seems likely General Feng will have to take a back seat. Chang has expressed a willingness to confer with Tuan Chi-Jui, Anfu leader, whose intervention has caused to be restored to the former emperor the summer palace and all his personal effects. The leaders will meet in Tientsin. General Wu Pei Fu has not given up the fight and ten provinces are counted on to support him. Most of these are in the Yangtse region so the scene of the civil warfare may be shifted in that direction.

EMMA GOLDMAN, veteran anarchist, who was deported from the United States and went back to Russia, is in England telling the truth about bolshevism as she saw it. She says the bolshevik leaders have given the country tyranny instead of liberty and are the arch-counter-revolutionists of the world today. "Let me warn all people that bolshevism is an international disease," said Miss Goldman to a gathering of London intellectuals. "You may think that it will not come here because you have only a few communists. It doesn't take many to destroy, but it does take many to build. The whole world must be warned to protect itself against this foul thing."

Disregarding this expert testimony and lots more like it, Senator Borah advocates recognition of the soviet government of Russia by the United States "as a necessary step toward the economic rehabilitation of Europe."

New Species of "Mums" for Illinois Florists

Urbana, Ill.—Fourteen new varieties of chrysanthemums developed by the floriculture division of the college of agriculture at the state university here, will be sent out to florists of the state this fall. The announcement was made at the thirteenth annual "mum" show.

Already more than thirty new varieties have been distributed, it was said, including the Aviator, Bo-Peep, Bronze Queen, Illinois Loyalty, Kewpie, Maple Leaf, Snowbird, the Belle, the Chief, the Dean, Varsity and the Welcome.

H. B. Dorner, chief of the floriculture division, said the exhibition included nearly 5,000 blooming plants of 351 varieties. They occupied two greenhouses, each 28 by 100 feet. Two thousand of the plants were bench grown and the remainder pot grown, while the 351 varieties included 60 standard ones, 70 varieties of "mums" and 221 varieties that have been developed by the college floriculture division.

The show represents the progress that has been made in chrysanthemum growing.

Indicum, the variety from which all chrysanthemums have been developed, stood out in the display in a sharp contrast to the large, fluffy "mums," the most striking of the chrysanthemums. Included were the pompons, the singles and the Japanese "mums," with their drooping, stingy petals.

Ax and Appetite Sharp

The Diary of a Turkey

Turkey gobbler, pride of the barnyard, is strangely missing. He left behind him, however, his diary, which has been translated into English for the benefit of our readers. A page of the original diary, as it appeared when found, is shown.

Sunday—

Gobble, gobble, gobble, what a fine day it is! I've been walking around in the sun, spreading my beautiful tail, to give the ducks and geese and chickens a treat. But some people don't appreciate what you do for them. I overheard two silly old hens, off in a corner, laughing and cackling to themselves, "Ha, ha, ha," they were saying. "He's strutting round mighty proud now—but let him wait!" What a foolish thing to say—wait for what, I'd like to know?

Monday—

Met Mr. Red Rooster this morning. "Fine day, Mr. Rooster!" I said. "Don't you think I'm a pretty well-dressed bird?" and I turned round and round to show him the sun shining on my feathers. Mr. Rooster sniffed—he actually did. "You'll be well dressed all right—in a few days," he remarked, and walked off, without explaining what he meant. I do think the folks in this barnyard are getting sillier every day.

Tuesday—

Mrs. Pekin Duck is losing her mind. I am sure of it, because she said the strangest thing to me today! I had asked her to observe the fine blues and greens in my tail feathers. "Don't you think I'm handsomely done up?" I asked her. "You'll be done up brown, before long!" she said, tossing her head. I believe the creature's jealous. A mere duck! But I mustn't mind what she says. The poor thing hasn't any tail to speak of.

Wednesday—

Noticed the farmer out getting big yellow pumpkins from the field. "They're going to be made into pumpkin pies," said Mrs. Gray Goose, when I told her about it. "Splendid!" said I. "Maybe they'll give us what's left—I love pumpkin pies." "There won't be any left for you—or maybe I ought to say there won't be any of you left," replied Mrs. Goose. She certainly is a goose. So I don't care what she says.

Thursday—

Old Mrs. Speckled Hen has been telling me dreadful stories, trying to get me scared. "This time of year's unhealthy for turkeys," says she. "Always has been. Why, years ago the Indians used to go hunting your wild forefathers at this time, and when the Pilgrims came they started doing it, too. I wouldn't be a turkey for anything, this time of year." That's all nonsense. I've heard that story about turkeys being eaten by Indians and Pilgrims. But those days are over. Things like that aren't being done these days!

Friday—

"How sharp the air is this morning!" I said to a little gosling I met. "Yes, it's as sharp as steel," said he, grinning from one end of his beak to the other. I saw he was looking toward the woodpile, where the farmer was sharpening an ax. Then he winked one eye at me. Really, young goslings have no manners at all nowadays. Fancy winking at me! And I don't think that remark about the ax had any sense to it, either—

At this point the diary ceases abruptly. Fear has been expressed among Mr. Gobbler's many friends that he met with an accident shortly after the last entry. Anyone getting a clue to his whereabouts during the coming week, dead or alive, is asked to communicate with his wife (widow?), Mrs. Turkey Gobbler, Barnyard Square.—Jane Corby, in the Atlanta Constitution.

DOZENS OF EGGS IMPORTED FROM CHINA

1914	19 000 000	1919	24 700 000
1915	17 500 000	1920	71 600 000
1916	22 600 000	1921	62 000 000
1917	42 400 000	1922	25 827 000
1918	52 400 000	1923	23 710 000

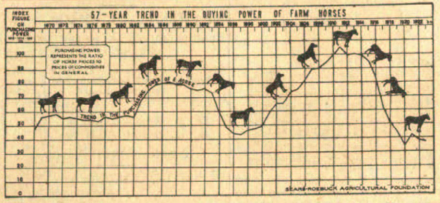
Chinese hens are laying millions of dozens of eggs to be beaten into American cakes and candies, in spite of the increased height of the tariff wall. Enough Chinese eggs are coming into the United States annually to furnish approximately one dozen for every family. But the Chinese hen does not compete with the American hen in supplying the eggs for the breakfast table. Of the 23,710,000 dozen coming in last year practically all were in the dried or frozen form, according to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation.

The American hen cannot be accused of loafing on the job. In addition to furnishing all the eggs needed for American use, she produces a huge surplus for export. Last year this surplus amounted to 30,000,000 dozen—6,290,000 dozen more than were imported. The American exports were largely eggs in the shell, which sell at higher prices than the frozen and dried eggs from China.

In 1914, just a decade ago, there were 19,000,000 dozen Chinese eggs imported. By 1918 the imports totaled 52,400,000 dozen, and in 1920 the number had climbed to 71,600,000 dozen. In 1922, the year the tariff went into effect, only 25,827,000 dozen were imported. Last year the number was still further reduced, with only 23,710,000 dozen coming in.

Present prices are not especially attractive to imports. The demand is for strictly high quality eggs, the production of which for the home markets the American hen monopolizes.

Horse Markets Coming Back



Horse markets are coming back. As both farm and city are demanding more and better horses, better prices may ultimately result, according to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation based on a study of the trend in the buying power of farm horses during the past 57 years.

Low prices probably will continue to discourage horse and mule production and cause a falling off in the equine population until average prices return, the Foundation believes. But already horse breeding operations have begun to expand in the districts possessing the kind of foundation stock capable of producing the sort of horses the market wants. Attractive prices are now being paid for all good, big sound shapely drafters coming to market and good horses of the wagon type weighing 1,400 to 1,600 pounds. Prices have advanced from the extreme depression of two years ago.

How soon the turning point will be reached on the rank and file of horses is uncertain. Previous cycles of horse and mule prices as shown by the accompanying chart have varied greatly in length. The first lasted eleven years from depression to depression, the second eighteen years and the present cycle is already twenty-seven years. It seems logical to believe that an upward turn in prices which will last for a decade or longer will start before long and that good horses and mules produced from matings in the next few years will get the benefit of that advance by the time they reach marketable age. Good horses are the exception on farms today. It is unthinkable that good farmers will be content with plugs for long.

Visit The Big Show

You'll want to go to Chicago the week of Nov. 29th to Dec. 6th to attend the greatest of them all, the world's best live animal exhibit—of course. Well, you can't go wrong anyhow, whether you go by rail. by automobile, or you go to St. Joseph or Grand Haven, and get there by boat across Lake Michigan. At all events you will see the biggest show you have ever seen, even if you have been there before, as this one will exeel all former attempts.

In cattle and horses there is we presume no better in the world, than are shown there.

You will travel mile after mile through the great packing plants ef "Porkie" Armour and Louis Swift, Libby, McNeil & Libby, at the bidding of trained guides but the fatigue won't bother because your eyes will be too busy. Then too, the Live Stock Show is not all the sights; because you want to visit Little Italy and Little Russia over on the West Side at Halsted street, where you can walk for miles without seeing an American sign. Jane Addams, the establisher of Hull House, left a great institution to her memory and there is the Municipal Pier and Lincoln Park with its incomparable zoo, the Art Institute and its wonderful collection of paintings and statuary. Jackson and Washington Parks, the great Field Columbian Museum and a hundred other places. See the Ghetto district with its teeming underworld and vaudeville features, the Chicago River which the hand of man turned backward in its course; the freighters that come and go and the tunnels under the heart of Chicago where two stories below the surface there is more heavy traffic than in either Jackson or Battle Creek; the great Union Station at the city's main gate where more trains arrive and depart in one day than at Hillsdale in a month. Now we haven't told you half because there isn't space, but your work is well along and nothing to bother. Come on, let's go!

Protecting The Investor.

The national campaign for thrift the education of the people to save their earnings and invest them safely, makes this a subject of vital importance.

Consideration of the more important factors affecting securities, especially upon farm lands and city property, is of the utmost importance.

Capital is constantly accumulating in our Country and is seeking safe and profitable investment upon real estate values that are constantly growing.

More and more the bankers of Our Country are besought for information and advice that will protect investors against speculative securities.

It can be saftely set down that even under adverse circumstances 90 per cent of the farmers of Our Country are solvent.

It is admitted that farm mortgages are one of the best forms of investment and they are securing the lowest rate of interest on long term mortgages.

The only obstacle to the farmers securing the cheapest money in the world is high rates of taxation and the insurance of nontaxable securities.

Cleaning Service Helped Him Out

The other day a farmer from Ingham county brought 1208 pounds of clover seed in the dirt, to the State Farm Bureau Seed Department to see if he could get it cleaned up. It was chock full of wild carrot—about 32 per cent expresses it. It also carried a lot of buckhorn and other weed seeds. It didn't look as though it was worth much. However, the Seed department put it over it's cleaning mills through the centrifugal mill to get the wild carrot and thistle out and through the buckhorn mill to get the buckhorn. Some 760 pounds of wild carrot and other weed seeds were taken out. What was left was No. 1 clover seed of the highest purity and after the cleaning costs had been taken care of, it netted the farmer $104.53. He was well pleased with the service and results.—Farm Bureau Bulletin.

Young Man Ahoy!

* * * *

The other day we thought we heard a man make this stirring remark to a specimen of the human kind, so we stopped and listened to what the man had on his mind and believe us 'twas interesting indeed. He was talking to his son, a lad about 19 years of age and by the way quite large for his age, in fact he was what we used to call a "big calf" not so much on account of his temendous growth as on account of his calfy ways. We hate to say it but it is a fact this son of his father was not up to the standard as usually required by the United States army. He was about six feet tall, hollow chested stoop shouldered shuffling and uncertain in his gait and slatternly in appearance. His manner of carrying his chin made you metally remark that a steel collar about two inches in height wouldn't be a bad investment for pa and ma if they expected the hopeful of their household would ever attain an upright position of the spine.

As we were saying, we eavesdropped on this father and son long enough to hear snatches of the following popular ditty which is rehearsed probably ninety times each year in our village by different dads and sons.:

Father— "What did I tell you James, the other day about that booze which you were taking with you in the car the night you went to the dance? The less you drink of that stuff the better off you will be young man!.

No reply.

Father—The last time you got stewed it cost me exactly twenty-two dollars and you said it would be the last, now you are at it again Where'd you get that stuff anyhow?

Son—"Well, you seem to take it mighty hard Dad, why can't you let a fellow alone a little while. Or would you like to know just where it came from for your own benefit?"

A pause

Son—"What'll you give me Dad to say nothing about the time you went to the Lincoln Club Banquet, and arrived home via neighbor S--s car and good Neighbor S--- though not so much better off than yourself, escorted you up stairs at 2:30 a. m. and gently esconsed you into the bed and when you found yourself the next morning, you had a cigar stub still stuck between your teeth, your clothes on, and tobacco juice and slime down your shirt bosom—and"

Father—"That's enough, James Where'd you put my shot gun, I think I'll go out and round up that wood chuck on the back forty."

Silence

Father—"When you git back James put'er in the garage."

Michigan Items For Immediate Release

Prof. C. R. Magee of the Michigan College of Agriculture has been selected as a member of the small grain judging committee to make the awards at the International Grain and Hay Show in Chicago November 29th to December 6th.

The Michigan State Agricultural College in co-operation with the State Crop Improvement Association, has selected D. F. Rainey, E. Lansing, to represent Michigan at the International Grain and Hay Show in Chicago, November 29th to December 6th, and have official charge of the exhibits of this State.

Ralp Arbogast, Union City, Michigan, known as the Wheat King of the state, has entered a sample of his famous soft red winter wheat in the classic contests of the International Grain and Hay Show which will be held at Chicago November 29th to December 6th. Mr. Arbogast raised an average of over forty bushels to the acre of Red Rock wheat on one hundred acres this year. He formerly was closely connected with Thomas A. Edison but when his health gave out ten years ago, he took up farming on four-hundred and fifty acres of Michigan Land which he has built up to a state of productivity.

Michigan will be strongly represented in the individual live stock competitions of the International Live Stock Exposition at Chicago, the first week in December. Exhibitors from this state have entered cattle in the Shorthorn, Hereford, Aberdeen-Angus and Polled Shorthorn divisions. The state will send Shropshire, Cotswold, Oxford and Rambouillet sheep, Berkshire, Chester White and Tamworth swine and Percheron and Belgian horses to Chicago to meet the finest animals produced any where for supreme honors of the world.

L. G. Hutzler, South Manitou, Island, twelve miles off the mainland of Michigan in the northern portion of Lake Michigan has entered samples of rye and beans in the International Grain and Hay Show which will be held in Chicago November 29th to December 6th. At former Internationals, Mr. Hutzler has won first prize twice and second prize once on his rye. He has never shown beans before.

New Records Set In State Corn Contest

Twenty-eight fields of corn sampled as entrants in the 5-acre growing contest conducted in the state during the past season by the M. A. C. fail to include a contestant likely to approach the 100-bushel goal set for the contest.

Adverse weather conditions during the season proved too big a handicap for Michigan corn growers to overcome in the contest, according to D. F. Rainey, M. A. C. extension specialist in charge of the Five Acre tests. The fields sampled for production all showed very high moisture content in the corn, running from 51 percent down to 32 percent, the lowest found among the contestants.

This high moisture content, checked for the best growers in the state, gave positive indication of the need for careful handling of the state's seed corn stores this year. It is said to be unsafe to "crib" corn with more than 30 percent moisture content.

While none of the entrants in the 1924 contest are expected to reach the 100 bushel mark, Mr. Rainey predicts that the 1923 record of 83 bushels of shelled corn per acre, will be equalled or passed.

Winners in the contest, which will be announced during Farmers Week at M. A. C. in February, will be awarded special medals and other prizes run all the way from a standard cullipacker to pure bred seed and farm paper subscriptions.

The Five Acre contest is a new thing for Michigan farmers, having been started only a year ago. It will run again in 1925, according to the college men, becoming an annual event.

The Voter's Quandary.

A good many of our citizens will doubtless remember Henry Sawin, son of John Sawin who lived in the north part of the village a number of years ago. Mr. Sawin has for a number of years resided at Grand Rapids and has a family. He is following the profession of writer and his frequent contributions appear from time to time in the Grand Rapids Chronicle. Henry recently sent us a paper containing the following comedy from his pen:

"O! Noble Censor! From some distant land,
Come listen to my plea, and lend a hand.

There's trouble all around, the deuce is sure to pay,
New England's gone for Davis, so all the people say.

New York is for the Elephant, Al. Smith is on the run,
Young Teddy's thrown his stick away and wields a mighty gun

Brookhart came out irregular, Iowa's on the fence,
The country to the dogs has gone, the flag is full of rents.

The farmers in the west, by heck are full of fight and vim,
The South has gone Republican, let's sing another hymn

Milwaukee's gone for Volstead, will wonders never cease?
The Germans are for Coolidge, the Sweedes vote as they please.

La Follette's captured Michigan no longer we'll be dry,
But serve our foes and friends alike, with good old rock and rye.

Old Kansas votes for Davis, the Donkey's full of zest,
The Reds have captured Oshkosh an' all the Middle West.

And so at last all candidates are 'neath the White House Dome,
I'll quiet down b' jinks today, and cast my vote at home."

The weather has stiffened up a bit since our last issue and we suppose the coal man is happy as it means dollars to him, but candidly we feel as though our best friend had left us with the warm days of summer. Can't say we like winter weather, but there are opinions and opinions, and some folks tell us that this is the lattitude in which the strong nations and rulers of the world reside, and we presume it is so. But we don't want to rule the world—far from it, and would be willing to reside in Rome if necessary, this winter if the weather was warm enough. Give us from June 15th to July 1st weather, please!

FARM SPOKESMAN AFTER WALLACE

Secretary's Dismissal Of J. M Burns Because Of Latter's Testimony Called "Underhanded.".

ACTION IS CAMPAIGN ISSUE

Department's Laxity In Administering Packers And Stockyards Act Alleged.

Washington, D. C., October.—Secretary Wallace's alleged favoritism to commission merchants who were practicing fraud on farmers and his unsatisfactory enforcement of the Packers and Stockyards Act have been brought once more into the limelight by his attack on Ben C. Marsh, managing director of the Farmers' National Council. It is expected that the complaints against the laxity of the Department's administration of this law, which was intended for the protection of farmers and producers of livestock, will be a big issue during the remainder of the campaign, especially in the Northwest.

Mr. Marsh complained in a letter he wrote to Secretary Wallace characterizing the latter's removal of John M. Burns from the legal staff of the Packers and Stockyards Division of the Department of Agriculture as "one of the most underhanded and sneaking cases of official terrorism in our country's history." Marsh charged that Burns was really dismissed because he told a Senate Committee that officials under Secretary Wallace "have administered the law in the interest certain marketing agencies to the jury of the producing public." Bur also expressed the opinion in his tes mony before the Committee that " the Department of Agriculture h exerted its influence to bring abou competition in the stockyards rathe than to stifle it, it would have bee worth many millions of dollars a nually to the livestock producers this country."

Burns Dismissed For Testifying

Burns was discharged, and Secr tary Wallace now practically admi that his offense was that he testifi so frankly to the Senate Committe "The Burns case," wrote Secretary Wallace to Mr. Marsh, "was handled with far greater consideration than he had any right to expect." Originally Secretary Wallace explained the dropping of Burns as due to lack of sufficient funds for the operation of the Packers and Stockyards Division. That is what the records of the Department of Agriculture were made to show.

It is believed that what angered Secretary Wallace more than anything else in the testimony given by Burns was the latter's statement that, when auditors reported sixteen members of the St. Paul and Minneapolis livestock exchanges as practicing fraud against farmers who sent livestock to them, Secretary Wallace declined to take any action against them but turned the matter over to the exchanges "for such corrective action as they may see fit." If Secretary Wallace had denied that, he would have been confronted with the fact that the legislature of Minnesota said practically the same thing in a formal resolution and that Jacob Preuss, the Republican Governor, backed up the veracity of the legislature by approving the resolution.

Wallace Doesn't Meet Issue

Persons who have read Mr. Marsh's statement and Secretary Wallace's reply cannot see that the Secretary ha disproved the charges against him saying that Mr. Marsh did not t the truth. His tactics of having official record show that Burns w dismissed as a matter of economy, b way of reducing the force, and the admitting under pressure that Burn was discharged because of what he told the Senate Committee is looked upon by some persons as possibly justifying Mr. Mash's adjectives, "underhanded" and "sneaking." The incident calls to mind the fact that, some time ago, Walter Y. Durand, formerly of the Federal Trade Commission, said, "The facts have been so shrouded in secrecy by the Secretary and his statements regarding them so meagre and blind, that the farmers and the public are still in the dark"

JOHN W. DAVIS QUICK TO ADMIT ERROR

"It is recalled by a distinguished jurist before whom John W. Davis often appeared that he was ever ready to acknowledge error, and that he impressed his colleagues at the bar as possessing a fair mind. Upon one occasion the Court announced a ruling with which he disagreed and to which he took indignant exception. The Court, however, was firm. The next morning the younger Davis approached the bench, and addressing the judge, said:

"'I was mad last night.'

"'Yes,' said the Court, 'I know it.'

"'I went back to the office,' Davis continued, 'to look up cases to pr you were wrong. I found [illegible] right. I wanted to tell

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

Editorial From The Classmate

The following was taken from the "Classmate" a Sunday school publication put out by the Methodist church:

"The great fight against liquor is still on. The full victory is yet in the future. This is causing disappointment and some despondency bnt there is no reason for the latter. No speedy downfall of an evil so vast, was to be expected, and the wise did not expect it; Any thing so deeply rooted in appetite and greed. and in the business of the country and the world, could not be extirpated at a stroke. National prohibition was long in being enacted into law, but it is now fixed in the statutes and in the fun demental law, and this work will never be undone. There is not the slightest probability of it. The wicked rage and do their utmost against temperance and its righteous laws and agencies but the traffic is outlawed and the forces enlisted against it are strengthened all the time. Meanwhile the beneficient effects of sobriety are becoming better known, and the day is surely coming when they will make the use of strong drink impossible under the flag. The only thing for us to do is to "stand pat" and to fight on.

The Boston Post tells us that the effect of prohibition in the city is a surprise to all. Instead of the vacant stores and business disasters as was predicted five years ago Boston realtors are more prosperous than ever before, There are no vacant spaces and rentals are a hundred per cent higher than they were. The old corner bar rooms have given place to clean and prof itable stores doing legitimate business. No greater boon could come to realty holders than the Volstead Act. One of the great hotels was never a paying proposition with a bar. To-day, with added revenues from a cafeteria and a shop on the corner, it is paying well. There were never so many homeseekers as now. The wiping out of saloons has imdroved neighborhoods that seemed hopeless before. and boost ed realty values in an unprecedent ed fashion.

We are coming to identify the opposition to prohibition as largely alien in character. Ninety per cent of the congressmen who have introduced bills to nullify the Con stitution of the United States by permitting the sale of wine and beer represent the districts that have been submerged under the alien tide, many of them being per sonally associated with alien of unassimilated groups. Our foes are mainly low grade foreigners who care nothing for this country beyond what they can get out of it, and many of them are positive enemies of our free institutions, who would be glad to overturn our constitution and government with the anti-liquor laws if they could do so

An encouraging movement is that of our women. The Woman's National Committee of Law Enforcement includes ten national womens national organizations with a membership of ten miflions of patriotic women. It held a two day conference in Washington recently, at which the presiding officer, Mrs. Herbert Hoover, stated the object of the movement to be "to work for the enforcement of all law, with special stress on the prohibition law at present— the front to-day where the battle against lawlessness is being fought." It proposes to organize strong commit tees in every state and county in the union to carry out a program of action against the liquor foe. There is no doubt of the energy in which this organization will act or the great results that it will accom plish.

The young people too, are rallying to the conflict. This presages good for they are brave and eager, and they have the years before them. More than 85 of our leading colleges were represented by 206 registered delegates at the Stu dents' Law Enforcement Conference held in Washington last spring, and they took strong action in favor of the righteous cause. It marks an increasing recognition of the influence of students upon our national life, and a determination to organize them for the most effective effort,

All real patriots will hasten to array themselves against the host of ruffians and reckless enemies of the Republic. However long the conflict, it can have but one issue."

He's Gone! Where?

A startling case of the strange disappearance of a man who has apparently dropped out of sight, was reported to the Jackson police by Dowagiac parties this week. Milt Oppenheim of the latter place came to Jackson ou Thursday of last week, went to Pearl street and purchased a consignment of seeds, since which time he has not been seen or heard of. The lodging houses and hotels of Jackson have so far been unable to produce any man of his description, and as yet there is no clue. After reaching Jackson, Oppenheim sent back to his wife at Dowagiac a supply of checks and directions to pay what he owed, also a list of amounts due Oppenheim. He was in the best of spirits when he left home and had no trouble that any body knows of.

If the "long arm of Mannister" could be literally worked out by the officers they might locate Oppenheim. His description is as fol lows: 31 years of age, smooth shav en, and wore a dark brown overcoat and soft gray hat. If anyone has seen a man of this description it would be a great favor to notify Chief of Police Hudson of Jackson or William Britton of Dowagiac.

Pullman Company Offers Scholarships.

The Pullman Company announces that it will annually offer twenty scholarships of $250 each to the agricultural colleges making the most efficient showing in the contests at the International Live Stock Exposition, which is held the first week in December each year at the Chicago Union Stock Yards. The fund is to be administered by trustees chosen by the Directors of the Exposition and is to be loaned to deserving students who would not otherwise be able to secure a scientific training in agriculture or animal husbandry.

In accordance with the Pullman Company's wishes, the $5000 it will annually appropriate must be divided in equal amounts among not more than twenty students and is to be paid to them in quarterly installments. The students accepting these scholarships are to refund the loans when this can be conveniently done and the money is to be reloaned to other students at the same college, creating a permanent revolving fund to which each institution can add annually by making a good showing in the various contests at the International Live Stock Exposition in Chicago.

The Pullman Company directs that five scholarships be alloted to the agricultural colleges whose teams do the most efficient work in each of the five classes of the Inter-Collegiate Live Stock and Crop Judging Contests and a sixth scholarship to college scoring highest in all five classes combined. The remaining 14 scholarships are to be distributed on the basis of the total cash prizes won by the colleges on entries in the open live stock classes not counting special money offered by others than the Exposition. itself and awards for educational displays. Not over five scholarships can be awarded to any one schocl.

This permanent revolving foundation, to be known as the Pullman Company Fund, is established in recognition of the importance of basic industry to all other lines of business endeavor and it is fitting that it should be announced on the eve of the 25th Anniversary celebration of the International Live Stock Exposition which will be held in Chicago November 29th to December 6th.

The agricultural colleges of America owe more to the International than to any other single agency for their present status in farming circles as it gave them the opportunity to prove their worth in open competition with the private leaders of the industry at a time. a quarter century ago, when they were looked upon as mere theoretical schools of little or no practical value. During the past twenty five years they have played a prominent part in the classic contents of the International, exhibiting their live stock against the best produced in the world and capturing their full share of the most coveted honors.

The Inter-Collegiate Live Stock Judging Contest has been carried on continously since the first Exposition in 1900. Twenty-two contests have been held to date in which 237 teams composed of 1095 students representing 27 colleges in the United States and 4 in Canada have competed. The Inter-collegiate Crops Judging Contest was held for the first time at the 1923 International with 7 colleges entered and Professor A. C. Arny of Minnesota, who is superintendent, states that this number will be substantially increased at the second contest this year.

Quite frequently we find some one coming in and remitting a back subscription to the paper and usually he remarks something like this: "Why don't you stop every paper the minute it runs out? If you would do that nobody could steal a march on you" Ah yes! If we could do it and at the same time have 40 subscribers coming in every day and paying up and 40 more new ones coming daily for one year that advice would be very timely, but the suggester forgot a number of things when he made that remark. And if he were the publisher instead of a sour-dough he'd know mighty quick how badly such a practice would work. A large number of people who take papers are sensitive in the extreme, and they don't want their good credit expunged, therefore when you stop a paper on them because it has expired you whack the sore spots. They'll come in and shout "What's wrong? I did not get my paper last week" and one chap we remember very well said he thought we knew he was "gilt edged" and so we did. There are a certain class of subscribers whom if their paper has expired three months back and you should stop it you would get (oo), then there are others if you did not ask them on the average every other day you would get ooo, and so it goes. We fancy we know pretty near how to run a paper but it can't be done that way.

They Soaked Him.

The editor of the Pittsford Reporter was placed under arrest last week by Sheriff Bates on charge of non-payment of his dog-goned dog tax. We probably would not have thought anything of this matter (as large numbers of respectable citizens) are constantly being menaced for the same offense if it is an offense, but we happened to pick up the Pittsford Reporter and therein we saw the write-up which Editor Emerich himself gave to this article. Emerich certainly pulled his tormenters through the hole both ways then scarified them Brother Emerich evidently has not yet attained his wings otherwise he would just meekly submit and charge the results to profit and loss He says in part:

"The trouble all started when the report was circulated that G. A. Emerich was supposed to have used his legal right as a free born, native, white, Protestant, Gentile American citizen and joined the Ku Klux Klan. This organization is composed of law abiding American Citizens and believes in God and the principles of true manhood, and uses the constitution as a basis for their patriotism. As to the truth of this report you are to be the judge. If he wished to join a lawful organization he certainly had a right to do so.

On the other hand if he wishes to stay out on the outside with all the criminals, thugs, prostitutes, women chasers, libertines, dope peddlers, crooked politicians, white slavers and Charles Teachout, who are known to be opposed to nearly everything that is good, moral and right, he has that privilege also.

There are thousands of good people who do not belong to the Klan and they must not be classed with the above. Most of them do not know the true purpose of this organization and are therefore not in, and may seem to be opposed to it. An honest objector is to be admired if he does not refuse to learn the truth. But remember you cannot learn the truth from the false statements of any vile, "Diarrhea" mouthed man who does not know and who refuses to try to find out the truth.

As a part of this underhanded, dirty work "Vic" Lane was also arrested for the same supposed offense. But in his case he had paid his tax and had a receipt. This only goes to show that all of this tricky work was an attempt to discredit Mr. Lane and Ye Editor and not because they wished to see the law enforced".

It is condition and quality rather than weight that decide whether a steer is to be placed in the beef cattle classification. Within the class it is condition and quality that largely determine the amount of profit that goes to the shipper. Choice to prime steers bring from 75 cents to $5.75 per hundredweight over the common light stock, according to a study made of lightweight steers coming to the Chicago market by the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation.

The bulk of the shipments are classified under the grades of prime steers, 1,200 to 1,600 pounds; choice steers, 1,150 to 1,600 pounds; good steers, 1,150 to 1,600 pounds; medium steers, 1,100 to 1,400 pounds, and common rough steers, 900 to 1,200 pounds. These are the classifications of the United States Bureau of Markets.

Prime beef steers are the ideal type, combining exceptional breeding and thorough finishing. Short neck and short legs, smooth flesh and well-filled, bulging briskets are prerequisites. Prime beef steers are rare, even steers good enough to grade as choice are few. They show most of the characteristics of the prime grade, good breeding and long feeding, smooth flesh and thick fat. On the block the quality steer will show a good proportion of red meat covered with a modest amount of smooth white fat. The lean, while firm of texture, will be mellow to the touch. The carcass should carry down full to the hock, being highly marbled with bright lean of a fine grain.

Four rather wistful faces aren't they? They were snapped at the state tuberculosis sanatorium at Howell. Averaging less than ten years old, these girls fight desperately against death from tuberculosis, the most persistent scourge known to man.

The treatment prescribed for them was rest and heliotherapy, which means exposing the body to the curative rays of the sun. Tanned they are, and happy they might be, if they did not know that they might be added to the death toll of 3,189 taken annually in Michigan for the last ten years by "The Great White Plague."

Double, triple and quadruple these wistful faces many times and you have some idea of the number of boys and girls who daily lose their youth; perhaps their lives, as a death toll to tuberculosis. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made Mrs. Dube Well and Strong

E. Hartford, Conn.—"After a severe sickness I was so weak that I could not do my housework, so my mother told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I am taking the Vegetable Compound right along while nursing. The baby seems to be in good health, and my friends say they see a big change for the better in me."—Mrs. EUGENE DUBE, 59 Woodbridge Street, East Hartford, Connecticut.

The Vegetable Compound is a splendid medicine to bring back health and strength. Many mothers have found this true, as did Mrs. Dube. Ask some of your neighbors and friends, for there are women everywhere who know by experience the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Trains Named Like Ships

Naming railway trains is an old and pleasing practice that some of the roads seem to be reviving. A new train between Boston and New York has been named the Bostonian. The Cannonball, the Mountaineer, the Wolverine, the Navaho are among the picturesque titles that different roads have bestowed on favorite trains. The Flying Yankee used to be the fast train from Boston to Bar Harbor, and the Flying Bluenose is still a merry jest, for it "flew" as the emu and the penguin fly. The inclination of mankind to give distinctive and personal names to inanimate objects that serve him is a psychological phenomenon as old as history.—Youth's Companion.

"Peter Pan of Nations"

"America is truly the Peter Pan of nations," says Capt. Bruce Bairnsfather, British cartoonist. "Here I find dignified men of business, bankers, brokers and statesmen reading the comics. In England or on the continent such a thing could not happen. America is a youthful country and Americans have the spirit of youth in their hearts. They like to laugh."—Capper's Weekly.

Cruel

"Women certainly have no consistency," said Brown ruefully, when he strolled into the club.

"What's the matter?" came in chorus.

"Well," he said, "my wife chased me out this morning, and then cried because I left home without kissing her good-by."

"It's about that man your mother wanted you to marry?" Ellen suggested, after awhile, her arm still about Lizzie's shoulders. The girl nodded without looking up. "And Lizzie, should you marry him?" Ellen ventured.

"I love him!" Lizzie answered, in a choked and angry voice, after a shamed pause.

"You love him— You poor child! And he wants to marry you?"

"He says he will." Lizzie had writhed about so that her back was almost turned to Ellen, who had to bend forward to catch a glimpse of the flushed face and inflamed eyes.

"And don't you think you would be happier," Ellen pursued sweetly, "don't you think you would be happier, if he loves you, and you—"

"He don't love me," Lizzie interrupted sullenly.

"But you said—"

"I said he'd marry me!"

The blood came to Ellen's face, and she sat back, feeling a little sick. She had read of the old tragedy a thousand times, but how much more poignant was this first encounter with it, this sickening realization of what it means to the woman to sue! She had loved, and she had given, and now it was his royal prerogative to lift her up, and make her "honest," or to drive her to self-murder. Ah, life was hard enough for the Ellens, who keep a man's respect, but lose his love. But for the Lizzies—!

"Lizzie," she asked timidly. "Are you—you're not—?"

Lizzie had dried her swollen eyes, and their misery was turned toward Ellen.

"No, ma'am," she answered, with returning self-control, "if there was a baby coming, I'd marry him tomorrow. But he—he's a good man, Mrs. Josselyn, and he'd never be anything but shamed and kept down by a girl like me. And we done what we done like children might do something wrong," poor Lizzie added, with her eyes brimming again, "and all the time he was in love with another lady—I knew he was, but he didn't know himself how he had come to think about her—and so when we—when we said we wouldn't see each other no more, I thought that it was all over and done with—except for the way I felt. But —but ma guessed it, and she was awful mean to me," the girl said simply, "and nothing ever seemed right again. I didn't want to go with any of the other boys, and I kep' feeling what if I should marry some day, and have a little girl—"

She began to cry again softly. Ellen, whose face had grown ashen, sat staring at her blindly. Her heart was pounding; her brain in a whirl. She had heard those terms before—Lizzie had been Aunt Elsie's maid through an illness last winter—

"When was this, Lizzie?" she asked, clearing her throat.

"Last winter, Mrs. Josselyn."

"Look at me," Ellen said, after a pause. "Look at me, Lizzie. Was it Joe? Was it Mr. Latimer?"

She saw the answer in Lizzie's eyes before the girl said quickly:

"No, ma'am! Oh, no, ma'am!"

Ellen could smile sadly as she shook her head.

"He told me about it, Lizzie. He told me all about it, but he didn't say it was you. I'm so sorry. I'm so desperately sorry. You—you do love him?"

"Oh, my G—d, how could I help it?" the girl answered, with sudden violence. "I had never worked before, Mrs. Josselyn, and at home it was trouble—trouble—trouble! My father drinks and my sister's husband drinks —I've seen him hit her a few days before her children come! And your aunt was so good to me, and the captain treated me like I was his granddaughter, and everything was so pleasant and warm. And Joe always anxious for me to get enough to eat, and helping me with kindling and all, and one night tying up my finger where I'd cut it, and sometimes he'd kiss me, you know, and tell me I looked nice! And then one night he wasn't coming home, and the captain wanted some tobacco, and I run up street for it, after supper, and when I come back my feet were all sopping, and after I'd undressed, I come down in a wrapper, to get warm—"

Ellen could see the old Main street house. Her eyes were shining.

"I've done that a thousand times!" she said, half-aloud.

"And Joe come in," pursued Lizzie, "it was after nine, but he hadn't had his supper. And him and me went out and got something to eat—"

Her voice fell. Ellen did not speak.

"He's going to marry Miss Lathrop," Lizzie said presently. "But that can't stop me loving him, and remembering how he'd laugh when he was building the breakfast fire—and how I felt about him! I thought then we might get married, although I always knew it wouldn't be right for Joe—and she's rich, and all that, and—and of course he loves her—"

She stopped speaking, staring drearily ahead of her. Ellen was silent, too. But she kept one warm friendly little hand tight over Lizzie's hand, and in her troubled face there was no hint of reproach.

"You say he loves her," she said, thoughtfully, after awhile. "I think he does, too, in a way. But he has been most unhappy about this, Lizzie; I've seen it, only I didn't understand. He has been worried and uncertain—we've all been wondering what was on his mind. And I didn't understand. I thought it was some reckless girl—I suppose it's always this way. Only I never thought of you, Lizzie, so quiet and good and unselfish—no, don't begin to cry again. I didn't mean that unkindly. I blame myself—I blame myself—"

Thus Ellen, reaching for some guiding principle through all these mazes.

"Well! Some one will come in and find us here," she said, with sudden decision. "Go upstairs and bathe your eyes, Lizzie, and get Tommy ready for lunch. And don't worry, I'm going to think it all out!"

Comforted, the girl escaped, and Ellen ate her lunch in thoughtful mood, and afterward walked with Tommy to the station a mile away. She said nothing to any one at the house, but when they were on the road she told Tommy that they were going to meet Uncle Joe.

'How 'j' know he was comin'?" Tommy demanded.

"I telephoned him, dear." Ellen was excited: she trotted Tom's small legs along in a spirited fashion. Joe, descending from the train, complimented them upon their cheeks.

"Of course you don't understand," Ellen echoed his greeting as she kissed him. "But I'll explain, Joe. I didn't bring the car because I want to talk to you, by myself. Trot ahead there, Tom. It's about Lizzie, Joe."

His honest, kind eyes flew to hers consciously.

"She told you?"

"She was going to kill herself Joe."

He walked along at her side for ten paces without speaking.

"My G—d—my G—d!" he said then, under his breath. And, after another silence, he said, suddenly and firmly: "I'm sorry, Ellen. I know how you and Gibbs will feel. But I can't stand it any longer. Perhaps other men can do it; I can't. I'm going away—get a job somewhere—and she's going with me. It's the only way, for me. She's a better woman than I am a man, because she gave herself where she loved. I thought I'd cut everything, and get out for awhile, but now I see that this is the way out. I'll go and I'll take Lizzie. We'll go now. I'll make it up to Lizzie, somehow!"

"Oh, Joe, I love you!" Ellen said, tears and laughter in her voice. "I think that's the only way out! I know that you'll be glad some day."

Half an hour later she sent Lizzie out to the gate on some pretext, and Lizzie did not come back for almost two hours. When she did come, Ellen was playing with Tommy, and Tommy's stone blocks, on the nursery table.

"Mrs. Josselyn," Lizzie said, coming close to her, and laying one hand on Ellen's arm, "I hope God will make up to you what you done for me. I don't deserve you should treat me like this—but I'll never forget it! Mrs. Josselyn, we've been talking—and he's just gone down to get the four o'clock train—and he says we are to be married. And if God helps me—if God helps me—I'll make him the best wife—!"

And Lizzie, turning her back suddenly, began to cry again. But Ellen knew that these were tears of joy. Her own mood was the more sober of the two as she went slowly to her own room. "The right thing is not always the easy thing," she mused apprehensively.

Now she must face Gibbs with this extraordinary news. And Gibbs, intolerant of Joe always, would find in this a complete confirmation of his poor opinion of the younger man. George Lathrop's dearest dream shattered, Harriet and a fortune flung aside, and Joe and a village girl, ungrammatical and unlettered, off to be married; the summary was disheartening indeed. And yet under all her uneasiness Ellen's heart was singing with the joy of a decision wisely made, and a hard step bravely taken.

She left Lizzie tremulously smiling, and building Tommy such a tower as never had gladdened his eyes before, and went downstairs to the study. Her father-in-law was alone there, dreaming over a fire and a book, and smiled as she came in. Lillian had gone off with Mabel Pointdexter for dinner, he explained, and would be there all night. Ellen, seating herself, seemed to feel a certain lightening in the atmosphere with Lillian's departure. Presently Gibbs came in, silent and gloomy, to find them having tea. He declined Ellen's brief, civil offer with equal brevity and cold civility. He answered his father's questions, delivered dryly, with patient monosyllables, and followed his wife upstairs to make himself presentable for the informal dinner.

In their room, Ellen nervously broached the subject of Lizzie. He was surprised, but his comments amazed her with their mildness, and he brought a pang of strange, unfamiliar pleasure to her heart by his final summary:

"I think you did right. Joe's not the first man who has made a fool of himself, but they may hit it off, after all. She's just as apt to make him a good wife as that empty-headed little Harriet. I respect him for doing it."

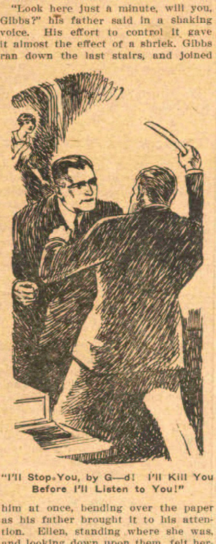
Ellen, sitting at her dressing table, felt a wave of happiness, almost weakening in its intensity, pass over her. To have him approve her again—to have the ice of the past months show the least break—

He was sitting by the fire. Now, glancing at him through her mirror, she saw him drop his head into his hands.

"Money!" she heard him say moodily. "What good would it do him? What good has it done any of us? I wish to God we had never come here! I wish to God we had stayed in Paris!"

Why did they go downstairs earlier than usual that night? Ellen never could remember. She remembered that they had not dressed, and that at about six o'clock she was following Gibbs down the wide, open stairway, when his father came across the lower hall toward them. The old man held the evening paper that Gibbs had brought from the city, in his hand. Ellen, on the landing, stopped short, aghast at the dark, angry suffusion of blood in his face.

"Look here just a minute, will you, Gibbs?" his father said in a shaking voice. His effort to control it gave it almost the effect of a shriek. Gibbs ran down the last stairs, and joined him at once, bending over the paper as his father brought it to his attention. Ellen, standing where she was, and looking down upon them, felt herself beginning to tremble.



"I'll Stop You, by G—d! I'll Kill You Before I'll Listen to You!"

Gibbs read the indicated lines and faced his father. He seemed to tower over the old man.

"Well, what about it?" he asked at length, after a frightful silence. The two were measuring each other like wrestlers, Gibbs' eyes hard and angry, his father's look the soul of all that was suspicious and revengeful.

Ellen did not hear the old man's answer, which came in a quick, furious undertone, nor what he said again, after Gibbs had made an ugly response. Their faces were close together, and they looked straight into each other's eyes as they spoke. The sound of their tense, harsh voices, in this beautiful hall of so many perfect silences, seemed to Ellen full of sudden terror and menace.

"You're telling a deliberate falsehood!" she heard the old man snarl, and something was added to which Gibbs answered, in a measured, grating voice: "You shall not say that! By G—d, no man shall say that to me!"

And suddenly the dignified custom of the years dropped from both, and they were like two hairy denizens of some primeval forest ready to spring and rend. The storm had come so suddenly, and from so clear a sky, that Ellen had had no time to run for help, no time to think. She stood where she was, one hand gripping the carved dark wood of the rail, the other pressed against her heart.

"Oh, don't!" she whispered, unheard. "Oh, what is it?"

She caught the words ". . . you hound . . . you liar! Betraying your own father . . . lying your way out of it like a common . . ."! and then everything was unintelligible again until Gibbs, hoarse with passion, shouted suddenly:

"I'll stop you, by G—d! I'll kill you before I'll listen to you! . . . I'll stop you . . .!"

"Oh, no, Gibbs!" she half-sobbed, from the landing, seeing the threatening gesture. In the same instant the old man groped blindly for an ivory scimitar that lay on the hall table, a beautiful thing supposedly a book-knife, but measuring some two feet in length, and very heavy.

Then suddenly it was all over. Silence fell in the hall, and cutting through it Ellen heard the gasp of a maid. Torrens and some of the girls had come running in.

Gibbs, with an ugly sneering smile on his lips, stumbled back, clearing with his hand a flowing skin-wound in his forehead. His face, under the trickling red, was ghastly. The old man, steadying himself with one hand on the table, stood panting and staring wildly at him.

"By G—d, you ought to be killed . . . my mother's name . . . a fight like this!" Gibbs spoke thickly, his breast heaving. "If any other man had said that . . ."

"You get out of my house!" the old man answered, in a quivering whisper. "Get out of my house—do you hear?"

"I'll get out of your house!" his son answered bitterly. As he strode toward the big closet the maids murmured and drew back from him. "I'll get out and I'll take my wife and child tomorrow!" he said, surlily.

"Gibbs, dear!" Ellen had run down the stairs, and was clinging to his arm. "Gibbs, dear, it's your father! Don't speak so!"

He took her hand from his arm, but not roughly, and for a moment looked at her vaguely. He had taken an overcoat from the closet, and had his cap in his hand.

"Gibbs, you'll come back!" she begged urgently as he turned toward the door. "When you're cooler, Gibbs —you mustn't quarrel with your father—"

She saw that in the whirl of his passion he could not hear her, or could not understand her. But at the door he seemed suddenly to notice Torrens, and he turned back.

"Here's your chauffeur," he said, bitingly, to his father. "Why don't you ask him where your wife was that night? Why don't you ask him whether he left her in Great Neck, or whether she took a train for the city? You remember the night of the storm, Torrens: where did you leave Mrs Josselyn that night?"

"I took her to Mrs. Pepper's house in Great Neck, sir" the man said, eager and uneasy. "Before we laid the car up, we went there, sir."

Gibbs gave one last look at his father, shrugged his shoulders, and was gone. The noise of the slamming heavy door died away, and there was silence. The maids stood grouped together at the dining room door, their eyes terrified. Josselyn, Senior, was still keeping one fine old hand on the table for support, his eyes fixed unseeingly upon a spot on the floor a few feet away, his head hanging.

Ellen was the first to move. She gave the maids a quick look that dismissed them, and went to put her arm about the old man's shoulders.

"Come into the study," she commanded him, as if he had been Tommy. She was trembling herself and her heart was beating violently. This burst of primitive fury, this rending of all the careful structure of years, had left her shaken and shocked. "Smiles and politeness and explanations for years," thought Ellen, "and then suddenly—this!"

The old man sank into a chair by the fire and leaned wearily back with closed eyes. For a while they were silent: Ellen, watching her father-in-law anxiously, saw that he was breathing more evenly, and gradually regaining his self-control.

"I struck him, Ellen—I struck him!" he said suddenly, resting his head in his hands, and his elbows on his knees. He looked old, and strangely broken. "I saw it in that accursed paper," he went on, "that Lindsay Pepper and his mother had gotten back yesterday from visiting the sister in Montreal. And it all came over me in a flash— I thought he and Lillian had made the lie up between them."

"But you remember that Torrens, that very morning in the studio, said that he had just come in from Great Neck," she said soothingly.

"I'd forgotten it!" he answered, stricken.

"I know how Gibbs feels about Lillian," Ellen said gravely, in a low tone. "But Gibbs wouldn't do that! Oh, no, he wouldn't!" she added, half to herself. And as he gave her a miserable look, everything that was sane and motherly in her came to the surface. "Now, let's not worry about it," she said, cheerfully. "Gibbs was too angry to be reasonable, but I begged him to come back, and I know that as soon as he's worn off some of his temper, he will. Then you can explain it to him: it isn't," Ellen added innocently, "it isn't as if he hadn't rather lost his head over Lillian, you know, he has something to blame himself for there!"

"You've known it all along," Josselyn, Senior, commented thoughtfully, with a shrewd look.

Both Birds and Animals Subject to Epidemics

Dr. Herbert Fox, pathologist of the Philadelphia zoo and head of the Pepper laboratory at the university, has written a book on the diseases of wild animals and birds. For the last eighteen years Dr. Fox has been studying the tenants of the zoological garden —the only place in the world where such exhaustive work has been done.

Pulling a tiger's tooth or treating a humming bird for tuberculosis is all the same to this man of science, observes "Girard" in the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Dr. Fox has laid bare many startling results. Among others he found that tuberculosis was the foe which swiftly depopulated monkey cages.

Epidemics afflict birds as they do men. The inference is drawn that extinct races of animals and birds were wiped out by disease.

A practical result of Dr. Fox's search is that monkeys and other animals and birds may now live for a far longer time in captivity than formerly.

And his experiments on the epidemics among birds may give the real clew for the startling and sudden annihilation of our wild pigeons.

Solving the Problem

There has been a good deal of argument about the way the young people carried on in the town square these evenings. Many of the city fathers thought it a public scandal, but they didn't have a big enough appropriation to employ special police.

The village halfwit, however, felt that he could solve the problem. He offered to do it for a can of black paint and two dollars. One of the town fathers was rash enough to furnish these requisites.

Next day the town was electrified to see that all the "No Parking" signs roundabout the square had, by the insertion of an "S" before the second word, become effective warnings to romantic youth.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Coal Has Bright Flame

Cannel coal burns with a bright, candle-like flame, and it is probable that the name is a corruption of candle-coal. This coal is found in Kentucky, Ohio and Indiana, and some believe that it is a product of an accumulation of animal as well as plant remains. The same kind of coal is found in Scotland, where it is called parrot coal.

Get rid of constipation by internal cleanliness

HEADACHES, biliousness, sleepless nights, heaviness, are Nature's warning that intestinal poisons are flooding your system. If this is allowed to continue, you may become a victim of serious organic disease.

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Why Physicians Favour Lubrication

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

THANKSGIVING DAY PROCLAMATION

Thanksgiving Day this year should mean much to the American people. We are blessed with a reasonable degree of prosperity and the outlook for the future is encouraging.

In spite of the many handicaps under which our governmental operations are carried on, our people as a whole, are making steady advances in the cause of good government. The progressive spirit which they repeatedly manifest in relation to the public service, demonstrates their faith in American institutions and the stability of constitutional government.

For these great blessings and the many good things that are ours, it is most fitting that we should render united thanks to Almighty God, the giver of all that is good. Therefore in pursuance of our time honored custom, and in accordance with the proclamation issued by the President of the United States and by virtue of the authority vested in me as Governor of Michigan, I hereby designate Thursday, November 27 1924, as a day of Thanksgiving and Prayer.

A Bonanza in Your Winter's Reading

Most of the lady readers of this paper know what McCall's unrivaled magazine is and that it is the finest illustrated story magazine published in this country today. The stories inside its covers are of the highest class. The fashion pages are the most up to date right from Paris. Every woman who expects to wear tasty clothes must know how to have them made in harmony with the very latest. Harold Bell Wright is a regular contributor to this magazine, and his last novel "The Son of his Father" will appear in its columns. Other writers are Conningsby Dawson, Rupert Hughes Robert W. Chambers, Louis J. Vance Harold McGrath, Rudyard Kipling. We have arranged to supply this wonderful magazine and the North Adams Advocate both one year to new subscribers and those paid one year in advance of present time for the sum of $2.00.

Jerome High School

The class in Tenth English are planning on dramatizing a few scenes from the Merchant of Venice for the next literary program.

Howard Sawdey was out of school a few days the first part of the week. He is taking treatment at the University Hospital, Ann Arbor.

The manual training classes have been making playground equipment. New swings and slide will be seen on the grounds in a few days.

A "who is who" is being conducted by the Latin class. Each day a five minute test is held on the lesson, the marks being posted on the bulletin board. Thus far Bell Anderson leads the class with Charley McGee a close second.

The New International encyclopedia which was recently added to the library has been found to be very valuable, especially to the classes in history. These book are used more often than the dictionary.

A literary society has been organized by the upper grades and high school. Programs are given about every two weeks. The members of the faculty take turns in supervising the programs and acting as critics. The next program will be held the day before Thanksgiving.

The orchestra is well under way under the direction of Mr. Wertenberger. It is composed of sixteen members, a few from the old band, the rest beginners. Practice is held three evenings a week from 6:30 to 8:30. The organization hopes to make its debut about Christmas time You will hear more about us in the near future.

Judges are appointed to determine which is the best production both from the standpoint of literary merit and originality. Last week "The Freshmen's efforts" was so far ahead of the "Sophomore Ripper" that the sophomores were ashamed of themselves. However, things are going to be different next time for the sophomores have been meeting after school for the past week making plans for the thanksgiving number. The freshmen won't have a walk away next time.

Merwin Baker of Addison has purchased the Hanover Local, and bouquets are being handed him at a rapid rate. Genial Charley Anson over at Horton sounds the tocsin long and loud for the Lime Kiln Club. and we presume Merwin will "jine" at the next regular.

Fire wiped out several hundred dollars worth of furniture, severely damaged the interior of a dwelling and came mighty near burning a man alive on Wednesday morning about 9:00 when the home of William Morley over the Straw & Wheeler meat market on North Howell Street Hillsdale caught from the drippings of an oil stove in the apartment. Morley was trapped in the dense smoke and could not get away but his cries brought assistance from those below and one man rushed above and rescued Morley, both being quite badly scorched.

He Looks Fierce.

A number of readers who have seen the pictures published of Chas. Dawes, the famous Republican candidate, remark he looks cross. Well it is not to be wondered at as likely a banker worth as much as he, did not get into the political game free gratis. If we knew what it cost Dawes to get his nomination in dollars and cents we would probably faint, yet the world goes right on working politics and such chaps as he will run for office no matter what the price. The campaign budget necessary to put up a man for office, even as dog warden these days makes a drunken sailor look like thirty cents, and Dawes should not be too severely criticised for looking "cross" It cost Sheriff Warren Stoddard over $400 to run for the office again in Jackson county, but he "dug it up."

The Divorce Mills.

The divorce mills keep on grinding and the grist runs out freely as water. Henry Horn of Moscow testified on the stand when he first met Ella Horn in 1917 he supposed he was the first man on the job but later he learned differently and that she had three or four previous unfortunates chained to he chariot, and one son about as old as Horn himself. Henry also says she is given to high temper, throwing of butcher knives, dishes and various other tools. Henry makes solemn oath that she weighs 185 and he weighs 147 and says this is not classed properly--in other words she is out of his class. The Judge decided that Henry needed a rest cure so granted his petition without alimony.

Hazel Crume charges extreme cruelty in her divorce proceedings against Everett Crume. She charges Everett with having other affinities and says he has been naughty in the extreme. The Judge says Amen! and Everett will have to pay an alimony of $25.00 per week for the support of the children from now on. Why didn't he behave?

PITTSFORD BURNS

Between 1:00 and 2:00 a. m. Thursday morning the little village of Pittsford was visited by a blaze which destroyed three buildings and serously menaced the business portion of the village. The Old hotel building used as a storage room for junk, the two story building used as a poolroom and a one story block all went up in flames. As Pittsford is about as well equipped as North Adams to fight fire, practically little could be done. Hillsdale fire department was called upon for assistance but declined to turn out and Pioneer O, finally sent their fire fighting apparatus. Several other buildings in the vicinity were menaced by blazing cinders. At this time we are unable to estimate the loss.

Prominent Couple Pass 57th Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Knowles for a number of years residents of this village, and previously residing in Moscow township for 38 years, celebrated their 57th wedding anniversary on Sunday Nov. 16, at the home of a daughter, Mrs. Clara Culver, in Jackson

The date of their anniversary was November 19th, but for the sake of convenience it was observed on Sunday, Thirty-four relatives were present on that day and their happy faces testified to great satisfaction in helping to make Grandpa and Grandma recipients of many good returns of the day. There were present two children. 7 grand-children and 3 great-grand-children. Mr. Knowles has no brothers living, and one sister in New York state was unable to be present. Mrs. Knowles" two brothers, Horton and Scott Winfield of Mosherville were present.

Mr. Knowles came to Moscow and bought the farm he now owns in 1868, and while he has and does own many other pieces of property, they have never resided in any other but the home place and in this village. He built the large brick house on the farm in 1875 and has always kept it in the best of repair, so that to day it is fully as modern as most of the new ones.

For many years he made a business of real estate and implement dealing and in the course of time accumulated a large amount of personal property, so that it came to be said he could furnish "anything of use to man" which was verily true. It was possible to obtain from Mr. Knowles anything from a hatchet to a threshing machine, and at one time a man desiring a slab of marble was jocularly told to go and see "Edd." Upon being questioned Mr. Knowles hesitated only a moment and replied "Yes sir, I have it" and thereupon sold the chap a second-hand tombstone from his stock of used goods.

A few years ago he scrapped his second-hand stuff for junk and it goes without saying when he retired from business the charm was broken up, as at no other place could such odds and ends be duplicated.

From long distances away came farmers and machine operators to get repairs for every conceivable machinery and they were in hard luck when "Edd" went out of busineas. Many of the reapers and mowers, harrows and seeders would have been a very creditable exhibit for Henry Ford's museum. Mr. Knowles bought and operated the first Osborne wire wheat self binder in his part of the county, and was also a pioneer in buying steam threshing outfits when the old horse powers went out of existence.

Although he had handled hundreds of buggies (mostly Cincinnati) and horses galore, at times as many as sixty in his fields, yet he never cared to indulge in automobiles and has never driven one in fact he finds very little use for "gas buggies."

During the years he has lived in this country he engaged in contracting and built the North Adams high school, Grange Hall, the 2-story corner brick occupied by Wertz and Young stores, two garages, a store house and numerous houses in different locations Mills. both grist and saw, he has handled, and transported heavy machinery from long distances, so that his experience covers a wide field of trading. His father used to relate that when "Edd" was a mere lad in school he delighted to trade hats and coats and usually came home each night attired differently.

Following is a list of properties he has owned : Gillett farm near Mosherville 160 acres; Fowle farm south of North Adams 80 acres; Sponseller farm 38 acres; Parker farm 80 acres; Parkers Corners 55 acres; Gilmer farm, Gilmer's flats 120 acres: Hess farm in Liberty, 160 acres; Blanchard farm (Delano) 160 Betts farm in Cambria 80 acres; Parliman farm (sold to Jim Speer) 40 acres; Monroe farm in Moscow 120 acres; Borden farm (sold to F. What you GET here depends on what you GIVE here

Did you ever stop to think that what you get in the milk pail you must first put into the feed box?

When production falls off it's easy to blame the cow. But she isn't a magician. She can't make something out of nothing.

A good cow, rightly fed, will pay for herself over and over, year in and year out.

But no cow, wrongly fed, will produce milk profitably for any length of time.

That's why it pays to feed Larro. Larro will produce more profit, dollar for dollar, than any other feed, however little you pay for it.

We can prove this by the actual experience of other dairymen; or by a test with your own cows.

Mrs. Bradford Recommends Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Phoebus, Virginia.—"Having this opportunity I just cannot refrain from saying a word of praise for the Lydia E. Pinkham medicines. I have used them as occasion required for twenty years, and my three sisters have also used them, and always with the most gratifying results. During the Change of Life I had the usual distressing symptoms—hot flashes, insomnia, etc.,—and I am pleased to testify to the wonderful results I obtained from the Vegetable Compound. I heartily recommend it to any woman and I will be pleased to answer any inquiries that might be sent to me through the publication of my testimonial."—Mrs. H. L. BRADFORD, 109 Armstead Street, Phoebus, Virginia.

Consider carefully Mrs. Bradford's letter. Her experience ought to help you. She mentions the trials of middle age and the wonderful results she obtained from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you are suffering from nervous troubles, irritability, or if other annoying symptoms appear and you are blue at times, you should give the Vegetable Compound a fair trial. For sale by druggists everywhere.

In the Garden

Calvin Sandborne, the efficiency engineer of Sioux City, said in an address before the Sioux City Rotarians:

"All our boasted modern inventions are really very ancient. Moths since the beginning of time have employed a wireless system more efficient than our own. Our skyscrapers are wonderful, but the old Egyptian temples are more wonderful still. As for the loose leaf system, it was first employed in the Garden of Eden."

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Lansing — Richard Schram, of Grand Rapids, was killed when an automobile which he was riding left the road and crashed into a tree about four miles west of Williamston, on the Detroit-Lansing road.

Pontiac—Trying to cross a pond in Rochester on thin ice, Myron, 9 year old son of Charles Strafburg, was drowned on his way to school. An attempt to rescue him was balked by the breaking of the ice and only after a boat was forced through could he be taken out.

Mt. Clemens—Taking advantage of the first fall of snow here, two brothers, William and Jake Henry, 10 and 6 years old coasted down the South Front street hill and were drowned when their sled broke through the thin fringe of ice on the banks of the Clinton River.

Battle Creek—Jim Christ, a restaurant proprietor, was shot twice and badly wounded here when two bandits sought to rob his place. As one bandit tackled the cash register Christ tackled him with a broom. The bandits fired several shots and made their escape as Christ fell.

Lansing—Herbert L. Chestnut, an Olds Motor company employe, was killed instantly when a dynamite charge with which he was blasting stumps exploded and blew his head from his body. He placed the charge and it failed to explode. He went to determine the cause and the charge let go.

Mackinaw City— Two hunters, Chester Clark and Robert Radka, both well known residents of Rogers City, lost their lives in Lake Huron near the shore of Drummond Island when they were attempting to ferry deer they had shot on the island across to their camp near Detour on the mainland.

Grand Rapids—Dr. Perry Schurtz, 69 years old, regarded as the "father" of Grand Rapids' municipal hospital plan and one of the best known surgeons in the country is dead. He had been in ill health for several years and had been confined to his bed since March 9, when he suffered an attack of heart disease.

Monroe—Earl Hudson, 25 years old of Toledo, was killed instantly in the yards of the Pere Marquette railroad here. Hudson, employed by the railroad as a switchman, was said to be standing between a switch engine and box car when a draw bar pulled out, the speed of the locomotive throwing him beneath the wheels of the freight car.

Ludington—Loss of life was narrowly averted when a big Ludington-Hart passenger bus turned over into a ditch five miles south of this city, in trying to avert hitting another automobile. The smaller car was hurled into the ditch when the bus crashed into it while the bus swung to the opposite side of the road and overturned. Passengers and both drivers escaped unhurt.

Detroit—The postoffice department has authorized the use of special envelopes for letters intended to be carried by air mail. These envelopes are to be white with three stripes of red, white and blue across the face. These envelopes are not to be issued by the department, but any person may get them printed for his own use. They must not in any case be used for the regular mails.

Monroe—Charged with having made an assault with a dangerous weapon upon Henry Hobart, well know farmer of Lambertville township, the night of August 22, Conrad Bealworski, Edward Stepanski, Howard Kessler, Stanley Ambordki, Joe Byers, all of Toledo, and Edward Nidek, of Temperance, Mich., pleaded guilty here in the circuit court and were remanded to jail pending sentence.

Ann Arbor— An endowment of $400,000, the largest ever bestowed upon the University of Michigan, for purposes of medical research, has been presented to the board of regents by Mrs. Christine MacDonald Simpson, widow of the late Thomas H. Simpson, Detroit manufacturer, clubman and industrial executive, who died May 8, 1923. The endowment is to be known as "The Thomas Henry Simpson Memorial Institute for Medical Research."

Flint—Benjamin Criddle, of Detroit, is alleged to have shot three persons including his divorced wife here. According to the police, Criddle found his divorced wife at the home of Charles Boston. Boston and William Bailey were present when he entered and the three were commanded at the point of a pistol to stand with their faces to the wall. Criddle then is alleged to have fired three shots, wounding the three in the back and to have fled from the home.

Lansing—The sale of 1925 license plates will start December 1, according to announcement by Secretary of State Charles J. DeLand. No extensions of time will be granted, and every motorist must be equipped by January 1 if he plans to operate his car, it was said. DeLand asserted that it is needless to have applications for license plates sworn to by notaries who charge a fee, as notaries who will do the work free will be stationed in the 80 branches out in the state, the five in Detroit and the main office in Lansing.

Mt. Pleasant—Judge Ray Hart, of Midland, in Circuit Court here, sentenced Austin Vahey, 25 years old, a farmer, to seven to 15 years in the Michigan Reformatory at Ionia for causing the death of Raymond McKillip. Vahey, according to a signed confession, deliberately drove his automobile into McKillip, who was walking down the road after he and Vahey had an argument, and after fatally injuring him he picked him up and took him to a railroad track, to give the impression that McKillip had been killed by a train.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Commission Begins Study of Ailments of Agriculture—Porter's Opium Plan

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

THERE seems now to be an actual chance that the worst ailments of American agriculture will be discovered and remedies for them devised. The commission appointed for this purpose by President Coolidge has been given the fullest latitude by him and has begun its task in a way that shows it means business. But it realizes the magnitude of the work and holds out no hope that its conclusions can be laid before congress at the approaching short session, as the President had thought possible. It will have some recommendations to make at that time, to meet emergencies, however. One of these will have to do with the cattle industry, which has not shown the signs of recovery that other branches of farming have shown this fall. The cattlemen have been unable to obtain credit and have been marketing their young stock prematurely, and many of them have gone into bankruptcy.

To begin with, the commission arranged for the co-operation of all the bureau chiefs of the Department of Agriculture and called on them for great amounts of information from many sources. When this is at hand the real work will start. The commission is composed of real farmers and live stock men and three of the members are heads of big farm organizations. Former Gov. R. D. Carey is chairman. In a preliminary talk concerning the work he said:

"One of the first requests of the commission was for a digest of the large number of agricultural bills introduced in the last session of congress and still pending. In this connection co-operative marketing of agricultural products will come in for special attention. The present laws bearing upon co-operative marketing will be closely studied and the co-operative bills now pending in congress will be considered.

"Information has been requested by the commission on all phases of the tariff, including protection afforded agriculture under the present law and upon what basis the tariff in each case was determined.

"Present powers of the federal government with respect to quarantine regulations for the protection of different branches of agriculture will be considered. This subject will be taken up in its entire scope, including regulations between the United States and foreign countries, as between various states, and between the federal government and the various states.

"One of the most important studies to be undertaken by the commission will have to do with foreign competition of American agricultural products. This will involve an investigation of the costs of foreign products with which major American products compete and a study of the main obstacles with reference to exporting surplus products from this country."

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE has been asked by the American Legion, through National Commander Drain, to indorse in his message to congress a number of recommendations from the Legion having to do with national defense. The more important of these are: Universal draft in time of war; maintenance of the navy on a par with that of Great Britain and elevation of our battleship guns; liberal appropriations for the air service and the army; restoration of General Pershing to the active list; retirement of disabled emergency officers, and completion of the government's permanent hospital building program.

EVEN as the "Dawes plan" is operating to restore the financial and economic stability of Europe, so may the "Porter plan," also American, put an end to the illegal use of opium and other pernicious drugs. It has been submitted to the League of Nations conference on opium in Geneva by its author, Congressman Stephen Porter, chairman of the American delegation, and is warmly supported by the representatives of most of the forty-odd powers; but at this writing some of them, notably Great Britain, are opposed because it will mean economic losses, and maneuvers to render the plan ineffective are expected.

The Porter plan provides for the reduction and restriction of the growing of opium-making poppies and for a system of import licenses under the control of the governments; for full superintendence of the marketing of the drug, from the manufactory to the prescription counter; and for the complete outlawing of heroin. It also provides that certain countries that permit the importation of certain narcotic drugs reduce their imports by 10 per cent annually and finally shut out those drugs entirely.

STERN declarations by Australia, New Zealand and Canada that they propose to keep themselves "white" despite the success of Japan in influencing the drawing up of the proposed security, arbitration and disarmament protocol are having their effect. The British government has asked the League of Nations council to postpone indefinitely consideration of the protocol, on the ground that it has not had time to study it. British officials denied this meant the scrapping of the agreement, saying a substitute might be offered. In Washington the action was viewed as the beginning of readjustments in which Great Britain would gradually turn away from Japan and defer more to the attitude of the United States. It will be remembered that, as drawn up, the protocol permits Japan to appeal to the League of Nations against any nation that excludes the Japanese, as does the United States.

One early result of the British action may be the calling of a conference by President Coolidge to consider the further reduction of naval strength and of land forces. He had this in mind last summer, but dropped the plan when a similar conference was proposed by the league. This latter project, it is believed, must now be postponed or entirely abandoned because of the British request.

YOUNG Mr. Gilbert, agent general for reparations, has run against his first big snag. The entente nations have been collecting, through recovery acts, a 26 per cent tax on German imports, and Mr. Gilbert has notified the German minister of finance that after December 1 the reparations agent will collect such moneys, but will not reimburse the German government for them. Mr. Gilbert meant this as an assertion of the jurisdiction of the transfer commission over all reparations money. It is not an attack on the recoveries, as Germans at first hoped it was. The French especially are displeased with Mr. Gilbert's action. They assert they will continue to collect the tax and that it has nothing to do with the Dawes plan. The British are said to take the same attitude. The dispute may be referred to a neutral expert, as provided in the Dawes plan.

AUSTRIA, after all, is deprived of the services of Mgr. Seipel, for, stating that he found it impossible to carry out successfully the economic policies laid down by the League of Nations, he has resigned. Rudolph Ramek has succeeded him as chancellor and, though he promises to follow Mgr. Seipel's reconstruction policies, the outlook is not very good. Doctor Seipel was driven from office by the opposition of bankers and officials to a budget of $100,000,000 for next year and by the resentment of speculators and profiteers whose operations he sought to check.

GEN. WU PEI-FU reached Hankow and, in conjunction with the tuchuns of the Yangtse and Yellow river provinces, established a military government and proclaimed its independence of Peking. He said he intended to raise 200,000 troops for the purpose of driving General Feng and Marshal Chang from the capital, and then left for Wuchang with 20,000 men. Sun Yat-sen is now in Japan to discuss the situation and strengthen the friendship of the Japanese for his side of the quarrel in China. Meanwhile Chang is watching for the chance to eliminate Feng, the betrayer of Wu.

ESTHONIA is going ahead resolutely with the trials of about two hundred Communists accused of revolutionary plotting, and several have been executed, despite the demands and threatening actions of soviet Russia. There are daily demonstrations before the Esthonian consulate in Moscow, arranged by officials of the Third Internationale, and along the Esthonian border are large concentrations of soviet troops.

TWO ministries quit office last week, that of Portugal, because parliament refused it a vote of confidence, and that of Finland because the diet accepted measures providing pensions for state officials. The new government of Mexico took office, Calles being inaugurated President.

LUMBERMEN from 40 states and Canada heard a most impressive lecture from President Coolidge last week, and it was made more emphatic by moving pictures. His subject was the waste of lumber that, together with our neglect of reforestation, threatens to exhaust the supply in about two-score years. "Between cutting timber in the woods and finally putting the product to use," he said, "nearly two-thirds of the total volume is lost." At the present rate of cutting, this waste amounts to more than 16,000,000,000 cubic feet annually. A third of this enormous loss, the President told his hearers, can be saved with tried and approved methods. He told them how rapidly overcutting and fire are denuding the land of forests, and said the government was going to ask them to consider definite plans.

THE American Federation of Labor is in convention in El Paso, Texas, and probably will have before it nothing more exciting than the row between the United Mine Workers of America and the Coal River Collieries company, which is owned by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. Early in the proceedings a resolution was introduced censuring the actions and attitude of the coal company and condemning Warren S. Stone, chairman of its board of directors and president of the engineers' brotherhood. A warm fight over this was promised in committee, and also on the floor if it were recommended for adoption. John L. Lewis, head of the mine workers, was indorsed for the position of secretary of labor. President Gompers, in his opening address, intimated that he would soon be compelled by age to relinquish his activities, but there was little question of his re-election for another term.

The Mexican Federation of Labor, in session in Juarez, took a strong stand against communism and refused to seat Alfonso Soria, a Communist delegate from Michoacan.

WHAT was considered a victory for radical socialism and a demonstration of the strength of Premier Herriot's position was the action of the French senate in granting amnesty to Joseph Caillaux, former premier, who was convicted of obstructing the prosecution of the war, and to Louis Malvy, former minister of the interior, who was convicted of having communication with the enemy. Both men had been banished, the former from Paris and the latter from France.

ALL Ireland and innumerable people elsewhere mourn the death of the venerable Cardinal Logue at his residence in Armagh. He celebrated his eighty-fourth birthday about a month ago. The cardinal was beloved by Catholics and Protestants alike and was always the unfaltering advocate of peace in Ireland. He was given the red hat 21 years ago.

Thomas H. Ince, one of the leading producers of moving pictures in America and the developer of many film celebrities, was stricken with heart disease while aboard his yacht off San Diego and died three days later at his Beverly Hills home. He had just passed his forty-third birthday. Among the stars who owe their success to Mr. Ince are Charles Ray, William S. Hart, Douglas McLean, Dorothy Dalton, Madge Bellamy and Doris May.

BY DIRECTION of Attorney General Stone, the Department of Justice has obtained the indictment of the Baltimore Daily Post for publishing income tax lists. This is a test case and speedy court action is sought.

America to Take Lead in Study of Eye Diseases

Baltimore.—Trustees of Johns Hopkins institutions have joined the Wilmer foundation in a campaign to establish a $3,000,000 foundation for the endowment in Baltimore of an eye hospital and school which, it is announced, is to be the finest of its kind in America and the equal of any in the world.

The plan is for an institution for the study and treatment of diseases of the eye, for research into causes of blindness and kindred ailments and for the education of American specialists, who heretofore have had to attend European universities and clinics.

Forty free beds are to be endowed. Additional facilities will be installed for patients who lack means to pay for hospital care.

The institution will be conducted as a unit of Johns Hopkins University Medical School and Hospital. It will bear the name of Dr. William Holland Wilmer of Washington, a noted ophthalmologist, and will be directed by him, according to Dr. Frank J. Goodnow, president of Johns Hopkins university.

Doctor Goodnow said it would cost approximately $1,000,000 to erect and equip the Wilmer institute, as it will be known. Another $1,000,000 will be required to endow the free beds and other charitable features, and a third to endow the teaching of ophthalmology and for the payment of members of the staff.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best-- Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says, "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by parcel post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

Most headaches due to lack of internal cleanliness

WHEN you are constipated, poisons form in the accumulated food waste and are carried to all parts of the body. Headaches follow. Biliousness, insomnia, lack of energy, all result from constipation, which if unchecked will lead to serious results.

Avoid Laxatives—Say Doctors

A noted authority says that laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition.

Medical science has found in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative, and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

RICHER LIFE SOUGHT BY FARMING PEOPLE

Comfortable Home, Leisure for Worth While Pleasures, Would Come With Electric Service.

That it is the enrichment of life, in all that this term represents, which the average farmer hopes electricity will ultimately bring him is the reflective opinion of H. W. Riley, professor of rural engineering of the New York State College of Agriculture. Professor Riley, who has lived with farmers and studied their problems for years, appreciates that the immediate ambition of the farmer, in respect to electricity, is to obtain a larger cash return from his farming; but he maintains that the farmer looks beyond this, and has in his mind, as the final goal, a greater share of the stimulating social and mental possibilities of life, which he hopes will come with an increased cash return.

Showing that so far as getting through season after season of farm work and actually producing marketable crops is concerned, the farmer could doubtless "get along" if he never secured electric power, Prof. Riley asks why, then, is there such an insistent demand for rural electric lines and what is the real service that electricity from such lines is to render?

"The answer to these questions," he asserts, "can be found readily enough when it is realized that the farmer's central objective in life is the maintenance of an independent and comfortable home, where he and his wife may live, where his children may grow up strong in body and resourceful in mind, and where he may live in peace to the end of his days.

"Money must come in reasonable amounts sometimes, to be sure, or, like any other man, he will not count his work successful, but money is of value to him mainly as it enables him to improve his farm and home and to enjoy some of the pleasures and amenities of modern life. The ready sale of automobiles and small electric light plants to farmers, the extension of country telephone lines, the demand for rural free delivery of mail are instances that prove this point. Now interest is starting to concentrate on the extension of electric power lines into the country for the very evident reason that the whole farming population have seen what electricity has done in the cities and they want the same benefits for themselves.

"The farmers want electricity mainly because they know that it will make their lives better worth the living. They do not want it to cost too much because cash money is scarce with them, but they want it mainly for what it will do for them and not primarily because of a possible low cost for the service."

TARIFF TAX ON HOMES

Woman Lecturer Says Cost Is $125 For Each Family.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Women are the purchasing agents for all of the 25,000,000 families in the United States, and as such they are the heaviest sufferers under the Fordney-McCumber high protective tariff, according to Mrs. Olive Beldon Lewis, of Indianapolis, who has been delivering a series of lectures to women on the tariff.

Mrs. Lewis points out that the Republican tariff increases the expense of every American home by at least $125 a year in extra cost on commodities in daily use.

JOHN W. DAVIS AS HE IS TODAY

Ninety Years of Successful Railroading

It is a far cry back to the days when the railroad first began to function and the days when they carried passengers in open cars across the country in spite of cinders and inclement weather, and it was customary to halt most anywhere along the line and pick up fire wood and barrels of water.

From Parley's Magazine published in the east we copy an account of a trip of 12 miles made in 1834 in Massachusetts and from all accounts it must have been an exciting experience, though it dont say the train stopped to allow the engineer to take a drink. The letter goes on to say it is considered very dangerous to travel by railroad etc., all of which seems very ridiculous iu these days of aeroplane travel:

"Well, I have ventured at last upon the railroad. You know I bave often told you that there must be more or less risk in traveling in so rapid a manner and that people ought not to travel in railroad carriages for mere pleasure but only in case of very urgent business.

But as no serious accident has occurred in this region we have in a great measure dismissed our fear and now everyone goes in them when he pleases, as much as in a chaise or an hourly, whether for business or pleasure.

There were five cars in the train on the run from Boston to Needham, 12 miles away, and perhaps sixty passengers. Five minutes before the hour arrived a bell gave us warning and at the expiration of five minutes another bell rang, upon which the train began to move. There was no waiting. Passengers one-fourth of a minute too late were not received. One who was a minute late very coolly exclaimed 'Well time, tide and the railroad cars wait for nobody."

For twenty or thirty rods at first our motion was rather slow, but by the time we had gone fifty rods we were proceeding at a great rate. The motion was considerably much more than I had expected, though pleasant. When we were pretty well under way one of the men climbed along from door to door on the sides of the cars to receive the usual compensation. His situation seemed to me a little unpleasant, for a fall would inevitably have thrown him under the wheels and killed him.

Travelers have said that a passenger cannot count the posts in the fence when passing them on these roads at great speed but I did not find it so. Still, our motion was rapid—about equal to the runuing of a swift horse. We had an opportunity of comparison; the turnpike ran parallel with the railroad for a considerable distance on one part of our route, and coming opposite a couple of gentlemen in a wagon they attempted to race with us, but we went the fastest and soon left them behind, though I rather think the horse was not one of the fleetest. The wind seemed constantly in our faces both going and returning, owing to the speed, Fire and cinders also kept driving back on us and occasionally burned our hands and clothes slightly. This is one of the evils of railroad traveling though not a serious one. It was pleasing to see the groups of children collected by the wayside to see us pass tho' one could hardly keep from smiling to see some of the boys who were rather slow of motion, take so much time in adjusting their feet and preparing to make their best bows, that they made them to empty air, the cars having gone past.

We stopped at two or three places in Brighton and Newton but not long. I was agreeably surprised to see how quickly a halt could be made when desired, as a man on a galloping horse could not stop any quicker. At one place we stopped little boys brought wreaths of flowers to sell, but there was not much time for bargaining. In one instance the train starting sooner than was expected, and the passengers having taken the flowers, the boys were contented to gather their 12½ cent pieces from the sand by the roadside where they where thrown.

The railroad often passes under bridges and in a few instances over them. In one place it passes thru a solid ledge of rocks which was excavated to the depth of nearly 20 feet. We passed directly by but one village, the town of Newton. Owing to high hills and deep valleys the road often passes around villages and even through the most unfrequented sections to follow level parts.

We returned safely at the usual time, and were about an hour and a half traveling the whole distance both ways, viz., 25 miles, but this included our various halts. Some parts of the route were traversed with far greater speed than others, The last four miles were passed in ten minutes."—Courtesy of the New York Central Magazine.

It has been 33 years since the New York Central Railroad inaugurated what it was pleased to term fast transit between New York and Chicago, and the first train to make the speed of more than one hundred miles per hour was the Empire State Express, and that record stands unchallenged today. It has never been beaten. Until a different form of propulsion is invented, the railroad officials do not expect to see this record broken. The most famous engine which made this record was "999" still in use on the lines but of course getting old. There is a record of repairs furnished 999 kept in the headquarters and we understand it runs up to several thousand dollars, in fact more than the company is accustomed to put out on aged engines, but owing to the history of 999 they desire to keep her going as long as practicable. Probably when her days of running are ended she will repose in the Grand Central Terminal New York City alongside her forebear the "DeWitt Clinton" first engine to make the successful trip on the line. There is nothing monstrous or remarkable about 999 except her speed and we understand the first drivers were so high that after she was taken off the trans-continental run, smaller drivers were used. But the comfort and convenience with which people can travel today as compared with 90 years ago is worthy of more than passing notice. A ride on the "20th Century Limited" is an experience never to be forgotten.

Their Side of the Question

We are in receipt of the following item from F. M. Goldsmith President of Local Chapter No. 273 Federation of Postal Clerks of Jackson Mich:

"As you no doubt know, there is an active campaign on to secure the passage of S. 1898 over the presidential veto. This measure proposes to give some relief to hard pressed postal workers. The President has since expressed himself as in favor of relief, although he opposed the original bill, due to its lack of a revenue raising clause. The bill passed Congress with only three dissenting votes in the Senate and less than a dozen in the House. It should become a law.

We are endeavoring to reach all classes with our side of the case, but particularly the farmer who has been told that any upward revision of postal rates would place the biggest share of the burden up on him.

We are well aware that to the man who raises the major portion of his living, the postal workers salary of $1400 to 1800 a year seems more than adequate, However, did this same man face the high rents, high prices of food stuffs, clothing, etc., paying cash for everything, he would find the postal wage totally inadequate to support a family. We believe that the farmer is too fair minded a citizen not to see the justice of our case when it is properly presented to him.

So believing that our cause is just, we are making this appeal to you for any publicity you can give us in our effort to put our case before the general public as well as the farmer."

"The melancholy days are here, the saddest of the year, of wailing winds and falling leaves there is but little cheer. Put your gas buggy in the garage b'gosh and prepare to wallow morning, noon and night in mud and slosh."

In Memoriam

Continuing our series of historical obituaries this week we note among the pioneers of this section Dr. Lewis Wood, who practiced medicine around North Adams at an early date and was yet at it in the memory of some of our younger readers:

Dr. Lewis Wood—Was born in the town of Scipio Cayuga County New York, January 24, 1827, and graduated from Geneva College of Medicine in New York June 10, 1848, coming immediately after to Michigan. He located in Tompkins, Jackson county, and commenced the practice of his chosen profession. April 11, 1853, he married Miss Margaret Huntley of the same township, One daughter was born to them April 17, 1857, The following August his wife and child passed away. The affliction rested heavily upon him and for several weeks he was prostrated with severe illness.

February 22, 1859 he married Mary Jane Bennett of Sandstone in Jackson county. To this union was born one son, Harry who still resides in North Adams. In 1881 the wife and mother passed to her reward and the rest of the doctor's life was clouded and lonely. His father the aged Hon. Amzi Wood, of New York was yet alive in 1892 at the time of Dr. Wood's death. Amzi was born in January 1803 aud was a little over 89 years of age.

Lewis Wood was one of the rigid practitioners of the old school and resided here at about the time when "the little German doctor," W. R. Ditmars, was attending the ills of a large number of residents.

Dr: Wood was buried at Sandstone.

Lyman Smith—Died at his home in the town of Fayette Saturday. May 14, 1892, of heart failure aged 77 years and 6 days. Deceased was born in Wilkesbarre, Penna., May 8, 1815, and when 3 years old came with his parents to Livingston county N. Y., where he resided with them 25 years. After being in business in Ohio ten years he came to Jonesville in 1854. He was married to Clara Kimball in 1857, and to them were born 3 children, two sons and one daughter.

It is quite unusual for us to publish sketches of residents of other states but when one has attained the ripe old age of 102 years, it is worthy of more than passing note. The following clipping from the Newark (New York) Gazette was handed to us recently:

"Mrs. Harry Drake and Mrs. Eldora Horton called upon Mrs. Ruth Lucas Olmstead, last Friday. They found her in her usual good spirits When asked if she intended to vote she replied "Why certainly."

Give us your choice of candidates Mrs. Olmstead"

"Coolidge and "Teddy" was her animated reply.

A pleasant conversation with memories of the past she gave with wonderful tact. Miss Delia then suggested some music as next in line and her mother seconded the motion. Said Mrs. Olmstead "Now give us some lively music and I won't promise to keep my feet still" and she did not.

Two hours passed quickly. It was a happy time for all present, and left pleasant memories of this wonderful woman. If she lives to see March 20, 1925, she will be 102 years young."

The attention of President Coolidge was called to this centenarian voter who cast her ballot for him, and true to his courteous instincts he sent her a personal message expressing his deepest interest in her extreme age and his especial pleasure in receiving her words of congratulation and also her photo that she tendered. The above articles are of special interest to our readers, as Mrs. Olmstead was a lifelong friend of the late Ezra L. Tiffany. They were both born and reared in the same neighborhood in New York State.

Yard Lights Are Useful on Farm

Yard lights on the farm, especially the large farm, have been successfully tried in one or two localities, proving a decided help in after-dark or before-dawn work. The old-time lantern has no place in the electrically lighted barn; and in the electrically lighted barnyard there is also little need of it.

A farmer in the northwest has a yard light on his windmill, controlled by switches both in the house and the barn. He uses it ordinarily to light his way between these two places. It also serves as a beacon during the blinding northwest blizzards. When any of the family is out in a storm, especially if it is getting dark, the big light is turned on and is visible for more than six miles.

Darkness on the farm is "very, very dark," isolated, as most farms are, from the street lights of the city. And the yard light serves as the farmer's counterpart to the city street light.

NATIONAL GROUP BACKS STUDIES

Co-operative Committee Will Promote Scientific Experiments in Electric Farming.

Recognition of the farmer's increasing desire to obtain electric service on his farm in the same manner that the city dweller has obtained it in his home—by power lines connected up with existing electrical systems—has taken definite form among leaders of the electrical interests. It is tangibly expressed by the formation of a national committee, known as the Committee on the Relation of Electricity to Agriculture.

With the establishment of permanent headquarters in Chicago, and the appointment of Dr. E. A. White as director, this committee has now begun its co-ordinated activities through which it is hoped that the underlying problems of this enterprise may be permanently cleared up.

The committee perceives two main objectives. They are expressed in these two questions: 1. How can service be supplied to the farmer and what is involved in its establishment? 2. How can service be utilized by the farmer so that it will be profitable to him?

Several Co-operating Interests

The committee stands pre-eminently for co-operation. It is believed to represent every interest or group of interests involved. Its membership comprises representatives of these organizations:

American Farm Bureau Federation, National Electric Light Association, Power Farming Association, American Society of Agricultural Engineers, three government departments, Agriculture, Commerce and Interior, and electrical equipment manufacturers. Each of these organizations has one or more representatives on the committee. The committee's officers are: J. W. Coverdale, chairman; G. C. Neff, secretary-treasurer.

It is through this committee, as a clearing house, that the nation-wide investigation of the most efficient and economic methods of electrifying the farm will be carried on. The ultimate goal that will be kept constantly in mind is to discover how the average electrified farm may be made profitable to both farmer and power company. The purpose of its work is solely to ascertain facts.

State committees, similar to the national committee, are to be established where sufficient interest is found. The various state experiments now in progress are being fostered, assisted and watched by the Committee on the Relation of Electricity to Agriculture, which, by its very nature, will undoubtedly speed up the intensive study now being conducted of this whole broad question.

HAIL THE WARRIOR!

Electricity seems likely to produce a sturdier race of roosters and hens. Farmers' wives in Red Wing, Minn., where a scientific study is being made of farm electrification, declare that the chickens that come out of electric incubators and electric brooders are stronger than previous generations of chicks which were hatched and reared by oil incubators and oil brooders.

One farmer summed it all up in this manner: "An electric-hatched rooster can lick an oil-hatched one every time!"

AID TO DAIRY FARMERS

Possibilities of Electric Refrigeration Look Very Attractive.

Co-operative agencies which are examining into the various aspects of "power farming," as it is called—farming with the powerful aid of electrical energy—believe that the electric refrigerator will prove to be one of the most valuable applications of electricity to farm operations. So promising does this field of investigation appear that in several of the states where experimental electric lines are in operation the committees will specialize in the possibilities of electric refrigeration.

On dairy farms the electric refrigerator apparently will have a very definite place. It will be useful in preserving cream, milk and butter, and on poultry farms it will permit the preservation of fresh eggs. In some states where a state law requires dairymen to put up a specified quantity of ice per cow per year the electric refrigerator would be a considerable boon.

The General Electric Company has paid special attention to this line of equipment and believes that more than almost any other single form of electric farm apparatus, the electric refrigerator is likely to prove a money coiner. Many creameries offer a bonus for strictly fresh cream, and certified milk can be produced for markets where the price is attractive for the farmer.

On a scrupulously clean dairy farm, equipped with proper refrigeration apparatus, the milk can be passed immediately from the cow to the refrigerating plant without giving the bacteria a chance to multiply.

Gauging a Giant

A writer in a popular weekly declares that electricity is a great giant working to "lift this country up and on." Chares A. Coffin, founder of the General Electric Company, has declared his belief that electricity will instigate a decentralization movement which will end the overcrowding of cities. The fulfillment of these electrical remarks rests with Father Time.

More Brilliance for the Stars

Electrical gowns have appeared on the New York stage. They are treated with a chemical substance which contains an infusion of radium, so that after being exposed to powerful electrical floodlights they glow like brilliant spots of various tints when the stage lights are turned off.

Education by Radio Is Coming, Say Teachers

Some of the nation's leading educational authorities predict, and are working for, the establishment of a broad, permanent program of public education by radio. So convinced were educators who attended the annual convention just held at Washington by the National Education Association of the value of radio in education that they were practically unanimous in declaring that "radio will take its place beside the printing press as a means of disseminating knowledge."

It was pointed out that during the past summer 73 schools and colleges, all over the country, were broadcasting from their own sending stations. During the regular school year this number is considerably larger.

All this is of particular interest to those who live on farms, especially isolated farms. It is also of interest to people in small rural communities where a district school is not maintained for the entire school year. For the nation's educational leaders see the isolated farms, the smaller rural centers, logging camps and mining districts as the places which the radio school will eventually reach, taking a well-rounded grammar and high school training to thousands who have never before had such an opportunity.

Almost Any Law

—Will interfere with the personal liberty of some man.

—Will have a few enemies.

—Works some harm along with its good.

—Can be evaded by a crooked lawyer.

—Results in injustice in a few instances.

—Can be made effective with popular support.

—Has a right to a fair trial,

—Rev. Roy L. Smith

"This is my covenant, saith the Lord, that I will put my laws in the hearts of the people and write them in their minds,"

"Inspired by this promise we press on to achieve the realization of the aspiration of Lincoln that 'reverence for law may become the political religion of the nation."

—Rev. Joseph, Fort Newton,

"Until reverence for laws, particularly for laws that are embodied in the moral sense of a great nation, is in the hearts of the people of every locality, these laws will not be satisfactorily enforced."

—Mrs. Mable Walker Willebrandt.

"Benjamin Franklin was once invited to dinner in France during the days of Louis XIV, and the diplomatic corps, in all its lace and jewels, attended. First the British ambassador spoke. 'Great Britain is like the sun which gives warmth and growth to the world,' he declared. The French secretary of state wanted to say something nice without offending England, so he remarked, 'France is the moon which sheds poetry, romance and beauty on the world.' Then up stood Benjamin Franklin. If Great Britain is the sun and France is the moon, he said, America is the Joshua who says to the sun and moon, "Stand still!" Franklin's words were significant. America has said to individual oppression, 'Stand still!' America has said that the purpose of government is a moral purpose. And never until you and I, and the citizens of this nation who believe in decency and uprightness and law, unite and demand that the law be enforced and that righteousness prevail in government, will America really be able to say to all kinds of injustice and oppression, 'Stand still forever!"

—Hon. Florence E. Selen, of the Ohio Supreme Court.

"If America is to be a law abiding, peace-loving and prosperous Republic, its youth must be trained as well as instructed. In them must be formed the habit of reverence for God, respect for the moral law, and regard for the rights, the interests, and the opinions of their fellow men."

—Dr. Lyman Abbott.

'Tis a Great Point

A number of the wet jokesmiths throughout the country are making merry over the recent trial of Representative John P. Hill of Baltimore who was lately acquited in the United States Court of the charge of making and maintaining wine and cider in his home and making a general nuisance of himself. The case was used as a test to determine how the law would work out. The jury on this famous case were out 17 hours and had a hard time to convince two of their number that Hill was not guilty of misdemeanor. Finally by hook or crook these two fellows gave in and voted with the crowd probably were starved to it and the wets think this is an indication of weakening. We'd say it was a mighty poor argument since everybody knows cider has no bearing on the subject. In the first place it is the standard product of southern Michigan and right here in this community the wets have found out that most of the drunkeness coming from this source is readily taken care of, in fact there is so little of real cider drunkenness as to be out of the case. At best the cider is only fit to drink a short time and any preservative known in a short time makes swill out of it, which not even the most determined toper will drink. The harm in local drinking comes mostly from so-called home brew made out of various fruits, raisins, plants and even dandelions, and with the right kind of officers this stuff can be driven out of the country. The extreme small manhood of a person who will make this stuff and try to sell it or give it away in order to increase drunkenness would make a maggot look like a whale, and yet such animals are found occasionally. We claim as we always have—that anyone who makes "home brew" for their own use purely and never allows it to get to anyone who would drink too much, is quite within the law and we don't say this because we are "wet" either—and we will defy any person to show a case where liquor has hurt if used this way, but at the same time we have no use for it and it will be a good move when these home brewers quit it—if they ever get smart enough to do without it. So the arguments of the juicy boys hardly go with people who know their business.

State Crops Enter Big Chicago Shows

Michigan Agriculture will be represented fully at the big International Livestock and Hay and Grain shows in Chicago from Nov. 29 to Dec. 6.

In the farm crops classes, 75 Michigan farmers have entered 286 samples of hay and grain. A year ago, most of the prizes in classes in which they were eligible to compete were brought back by Michigan growers. The M. A. C. will also have a big educational exhibit at the Hay and Grain show featuring the gradual "moving north" of the country's corn belt. Many sections of Michigan, for instance, have been brought into the true corn belt region through use of adapted varieties and better cultural practices.

The Livestock Show will have, in addition to all entries from private exhibitors in the state, a long list of animals from the horse, sheep, swine and cattle herds at M. A. C. The horses, headed by Pervanche, grand champion Belgian mare at the 1923 International are considered the stars of the college string.

A livestock judging team, composed of six M. A. C. students, and a student grain judging team, will compete in the collegiate contests with men from other states. Fifty Michigan Boys and Girls Club members, all champions at county or state fairs, will also attend the big shows.

Southern Counties Watch Ditch Blasts

A series of ditching demonstrations, using explosives to complete the operations, was witnessed by hundreds of farmers in seven southern Michigan counties during late October and early November. The demonstrations were conducted by extension specialists of the agricultural engineering department at the M. A. C., in showing the practicability of explosives in farm drainage operations.

Fifty percent straight nitroglycerin was used in the ditch blasting, according to N. A. Kessler, in charge of the work. The counties included in the schedule of demonstrations were Washtenaw, Ionia, Kent, Clinton, Lapeer, St. Clair and Huron.

Outside Pens Make Bid For Egg Honors

Prize hens from 16 states and Canadian provinces are competing against "Michigan's own" for top honors in the third International egg laying contest which opened its year's run at the M. A. C. on November 1.

From Texas in the southwest to New York in the northeast, "foreign" pens of high producing birds have been entered among the contestants in the long race. Two Canadian provinces, Ontario and Alberta, are included in the roster, along with Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Kentucky, Tennesee, Pennsylvania, Minnesota, Missouri, Washington, Oregon, Texas and New York.

Michigan pens won all the top honors in the 1923-24 contest, which closed the end of October, but with a greater percentage of outside entries than ever before in the running this year, managers of the event are predicting that other states will be listed among the winners at the close of the 52 weeks of production.

A new figure for the first week of the contest was established when the 1,000 birds included in all pens produced 1,662 eggs up to Nov. 7.

Farm Courses Start At M. A. C. On Jan.5

Six different "short courses", ranging all the way from a course in general agriculture to special schools in definite branches of farming, will open at the M. A. C. on Jan. 5, according to announcement made here by E. B. Hill, director of the winter school at M. A. C.

The short courses are open to any citizen of the state over 16 yrs. of age, no scholastic requirements for admission being held. They are said to be designed for those who cannot or do not care to take the longer four year agricultural course at the college, and yet still want to gain scientific training in their agricultural field.

Two dairy courses, a ten weeks course in dairy production, and an eights weeks course in dairy manufactures; an eight weeks course in general agriculture; and eight weeks Horticulture course; a four weeks poultry course; and an eight weeks agricultural engineering course are those which start on January 5.

Clover Seed Is Scarce

Michigan faces the greatest shortage of cloverseed in its history and the farmer's salvation is to grow alfalfa, according to a statement by the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. The statement is based on government figures just made public which show this year's production to be the lowest on record.

Production was poor in 1923, the total in the state dropping from 240,000 bushels in 1922 to 147,000 bushels. This year the production is only 101,000 bushels or 69 percent of last year.

In its statement on the cloverseed shortage the Institute says;

"The crop report just issued shows that the total production of cloverseed in the United States this year is estimated at 817,000 bushels, as compared with 1,610,000 bushels. Last year approximately 24,000,000 pounds of clover seed were imported to make up the deficiency in America but Europe has a shortage this year also and probably will have little clover for the United States.

"Red clover seed prices already are high and are likely to go higher. Fortunately, both alfalfa and sweet clover have produced larger crops than usual this year, alfalfa being onethird larger, so farmers of the nation are urged to seed with alfalfa. It will be more economical than to practice thin seeding which is so frequently done when clover seed is scarce as now.

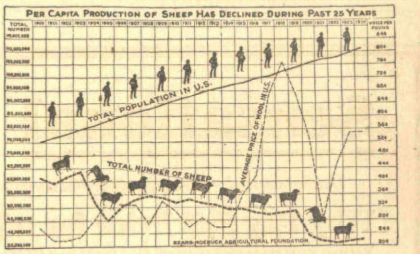
Bright Outlook for Sheep



The sheep industry presents one of the bright spots in the present agricultural outlook, according to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. The number of sheep in the United States has been increased for two years, but is still far from being back at wartime or pre-war figures.

The United States produces only about 10 per cent of the world's total wool crop, but consumes 25 per cent of it. World carry-over stocks of wool have been shrinking for four years and are now low. World production last year was 66 million pounds below the previous year.

The prices of both wool and lambs have been strong the past two years and the outlook for reasonable profits in sheep is excellent for several years to come.

African Dean Is Gloomy

Johannesburg, South Africa, has what the residents call a "gloomy dean" in the person of Rev. M. Ponsonby. He thinks that no honest man can look on South Africa with hopefulness unless there is a radical change. The white man has interfered with the black race, he says, driving them from agricultural and fighting to industrial occupations, and by spreading half castes over the entire country through marrying the black women.

Her Optimism

The talk had turned to psychology. This disturbing question had just been put: "When does old age really begin?"

To establish a formula was proving father difficult, when a woman, who did not look her years, found the following:

"Oh, yes, I've seen it."

"And how much does he care about her, do you think?"

Ellen flushed, and managed a smile, before she answered bravely:

"Oh, she fascinated him, I think, from the first. I don't know—" Her voice dropped wearily. "He'll come back, and he'll be sorry for this quarrel," she added, after a silence. "And you'll forgive him, won't you?"

"I struck him," the old man repeated somberly. "I don't know how I ever came to do a thing like that. Yes—yes," he added, sadly. "We must make it up—my boy and I. I never should have brought you both here—a man is dull about such things. Well! We'll make it up: and you and he shall start fresh somewhere—"

"Dinner, Mrs. Josselyn," said Florence in the doorway, rather timidly, breaking a few minutes of silence in the study.

"I think I'll not dine—" the old man began quickly. But Ellen went to him with a smile.

"Indeed you'll dine!" she decreed. "And, Florence, go see if Tommy has had his dinner. If he has not, tell Lizzie I said he might dine with us. You'll feel very different," she said to her father-in-law, as they went toward the dining room, "when you've had some hot soup, and perhaps Gibbs will come back in time for some coffee!"

After dinner she and Tommy went with Josselyn, Senior, into the study, and even after Tommy was in bed Ellen ran down again for a few friendly words of goodnight. She pleaded a headache as an excuse for going upstairs almost immediately after the little boy, but as a matter of fact, it was excitement rather than distress that made Ellen long for the quiet of her own fire tonight.

When Lizzie had gone to bed, Ellen sat on, thinking. Lizzie came in, to stand beside the fireplace, and talk to her, half-shamed, half-shy, but yet with a certain great happiness in her face. And as Ellen drew from her the story of the sordid home, the drink and dirt and laziness, the unwelcome babies, the lack of courage, self-control, kindness, of everything that make life worth while, she marveled at the world that could accept Lillian, and cast Lizzie out as a sinner.

She had a book, but she could not read it. Thoughts of the long day would interpose themselves between her and the page. She remembered the quarrel, herself innocently following Gibbs downstairs, and being arrested on the landing by the frightening, rough voices. How strange they had sounded, how hideously alarming this unexplained and sudden animosity!

"Now we will go away," Ellen thought, in deep satisfaction. For even though Gibbs became reconciled to his father, he would no longer live in the 'Villino dell' Orto.' He would take Ellen and Tommy to some little apartment—a sunny kitchen—and the old hilarious breakfasts—

Ten o'clock. Ellen roused herself from a golden dream, and began to prepare for bed. She stepped into the next room for a good-night look at Tommy. Lizzie, in the narrow bed beside his short, square bed, was asleep, too, her relaxed little sensitive face wearing a smile as childish as Tommy's own. Before she got into her own bed, Ellen put out her lights, and stood at the window, looking out at the dark, cold night.

It was sharply clear, the stars shining coldly. Against the bare shrubs at an angle of the house she could see the dull green light that filtered from the bottle-end windows of the study, and far across the hills there was another light, the country club, where Gibbs perhaps had dined. Ellen left a shaded light for him; before the clock struck eleven she was sound asleep.

Yet she was too tired and excited to sleep deeply, and it seemed to her that she had been waking and tossing a long time when a slight but definite sound awakened her, and she sat up in bed. The night light was still burning, and the fire had been coaxed into fresh life. It was after two o'clock. Gibbs, still dressed, was sitting staring at the coals.

"Gibbs!" she said bewilderedly.

He got up, and as he came to the side of the bed she saw that his hair was tossed about in disorder, and his face strangely pale. The cut on his forehead looked ugly and swollen, and his manner was agitated and stern.

"Look here, Ellen," he said quickly. "We get out of here tomorrow morning, do you understand? I'm done with this house. I'll not stay here an unnecessary hour, do you see?"

"Why, certainly, dear, I'll go anywhere—whatever you say!" she said soothingly. For a few minutes he stood looking at her gloomily, then his face softened.

"You're a good little thing, Ellen!" he said gruffly. The quick tears sprang to her eyes as he turned away; she saw him through the glittering haze of them. He did not speak again, as he undressed, and Ellen, leaving all talk of reconciliation and all planning until the morning, and with a lighter heart than she had had for many weeks, fell asleep again.

CHAPTER XI

Ellen awakened to find Gibbs swiftly packing. His manner discouraged any attempt she might have made to soften him; far better to give him his way while this unfamiliar and terrifying mood lasted. She went into the nursery and found Lizzie packing, too. She and Tommy had had breakfast, and the child was wild with excitement. They were going to dad's studio, and Marie was going to cook for them, and they were going to get an apartment somewhere near. Ellen, dressed, went back to Gibbs.

"Aren't you going to eat any breakfast, dear?"

"No, thank you!"

"Gibbs—but you'll say goodby to your father?"

He made no answer, strapping shirts into the lid of his suitcase.

"What train do we take, Gibbs?"

"I'll start in the roadster just as soon as you're ready. We take Tommy, and Lizzie can follow by train."

"I'll wait—and have breakfast with you, in the studio," Ellen said, opening her own bureau drawers, and thoughtfully selecting linen.

"I ask you—as a favor—to go down and get something to eat!" he answered sharply.

Instantly she obeyed. But passing him, she laid her hand pleadingly on his arm, and he put his arms about her.

"Don't be cross with me, Gibbs! I'm so sorry—"

"Cross with you!" he echoed penitently. "Who could be cross with you! No, but I'm nervous, Ellen—I won't be happy until we get away! Just help me out, all you can—"

"I will!" she answered. And her heart sang as she went downstairs. In an hour she and Tommy and Gibbs would be in the car, speeding away from this unnatural atmosphere. Gibbs would not be reconciled now, but after a few quiet days he would forget his present anger, she knew. And she would say good-by to her father-in-law, and beg him to be patient with Gibbs. She ate her fruit, and drank a cup of coffee, shaking her head as Florence came in with an omelette.

"Nothing more, Florence. Has Mr. Josselyn had his breakfast yet?"

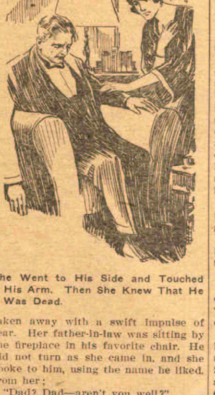
"No, Mrs. Josselyn. He is in the study, I think. At least Mollie said she saw the light there when she started the breakfast fire, before sunrise."

"So early?" Ellen got up. "He must have had a bad night," she added. "Hasn't he rung for any coffee?"

"No, Mrs. Josselyn. You know he doesn't like the girls to interrupt him there, so Katie didn't go in—"

"I know he doesn't," Ellen smiled. "But he doesn't mind me!" And turning over in her mind the exact phrases with which she meant to bid him goodby, she went to the study.

Sunlight was coming in through the bottle-green windows now, but the lights were lighted, and gave a garish look to the place. Cold ashes had drifted to the hearth. The air was stale and dull. Ellen felt her breath taken away with a swift impulse of fear. Her father-in-law was sitting by the fireplace in his favorite chair. He did not turn as she came in, and she spoke to him, using the name he liked from her;



She Went to His Side and Touched His Arm. Then She Knew That He Was Dead.

"Dad? Dad—aren't you well?"

Her voice died into silence. She went to his side, and touched his arm. Then she knew that he was dead.

"He's fainted, that's all!" she said aloud. But her own voice frightened her and she stood there for a few minutes, rooted to the spot with horror and shock, staring at the fallen gray head and the still hands. Then she backed slowly from the room, and ran wildly back to the dining room.

"Florence—Mr. Josselyn is very ill—he's—telephone for Doctor Cutter, will you? And telephone for Mr. Lathrop—I'm going up to get Mr. Gibbs—"

"My G—d, Mrs. Josselyn, oughtn't we to get him to bed?"

Florence, a sensible, gray-haired woman of fifty, had her arm about Ellen now, and was holding a glass of ice-water to her lips.

"No—no use!" Ellen whispered, staring at her. "He's dead, Florence!"

"It's his heart," Florence said, pale herself. Ellen ran on her way upstairs.

"Gibbs," she said, at his side, "your father—we found him in his chair—he's—I think he's dead—Gibbs—"

"Good G—d!" he said violently. He pushed her aside as he ran to the door. Ellen stood still for a moment in the center of the room. Then she called Lizzie.

"Lizzie," she said, quivering, "a terrible thing has happened. Mr. Josselyn's father has dropped dead. I want you to keep Tommy in the nursery all morning. We'll have the doctor here—other people—and I don't want him to know. He can play on his porch—"

"Depend on me, Mrs. Josselyn," Lizzie said quietly. "Well, the poor old man, God rest him!"

"It was the quarrel—it was the quarrel—and Gibbs will never forgive himself!" Ellen said to herself, as she went slowly downstairs again.

The whole house was in confusion now. Gibbs and Torrens were bending over the dreadful figure in the chair by the study fire, Florence hovered near them, Keno and one or two of the other maids were grouped fearfully near the door.

As Ellen came in Torrens straightened himself, and looked at Gibbs.

"That wasn't heart failure, Mr. Josselyn," he said quietly. "He's shot himself right through the heart—look here, sir."

One of the girls gave a hysterical scream, and Ellen cried out: "Oh, no—oh, no, why should he do that?"

But her eyes, and the eyes of everyone else in the room, went swiftly to Gibbs; the son whose bitter quarrel with him had broken the old man's heart.

"Get these girls out of the room, Ellen," Gibbs said briefly. "And have them fix my father's bed, Florence; we're going to get him upstairs." He turned sharply to Torrens. "What did you say?"

"I say that I don't think we had better touch him, sir," the man answered. "We'll have the coroner here, sir, and he'll want to find things like they are—"

"I guess you're right," Gibbs said, after a pause, staring at him dully. "I guess you're right. We'll have to have the coroner—who is the coroner, and where is he, do you know?"

"Mineola," quavered one of the maids.

"Yes, that's right," Torrens approved.

"I can telephone for him, sir," Florence offered.

"I suppose you had better," Gibbs said. "And telephone for Mr. Lathrop, at Sands Point."

"We did telephone George," Ellen told him quickly; "he is on his way."

"Do you know where to telephone Mrs. Josselyn?" Florence asked, respectfully.

Ellen and Gibbs looked at each other. It was the first time they had thought of Lillian.

"Yes, telephone her at Mrs. Pointdexter's—" Ellen said hesitatingly. "Perhaps I had better do that. Had Torrens better go for her? It isn't very far. I'll telephone and tell Mrs. Pointdexter to prepare her somehow."

Immediately activities of all sorts commenced. Torrens went off on his errand, Florence went to the telephone, and the maids scattered. Gibbs seemed dazed; Ellen kept herself in his neighborhood. Florence came back from the telephone for advice; the coroner had asked if they had seen the revolver with which Mr. Josselyn had killed himself, sir.

Gibbs roused himself. Ellen saw him brace himself to go into the room of horror again. She went with him. Presently Gibbs himself went to tell the waiting coroner, at the telephone, that they did not seem able to find the weapon.

"What did he say?" Ellen asked him.

"Said he was coming over," Gibbs answered with weary indifference.

Presently George came in, breathing cold air, pulling off his thick gloves, and full of sympathetic distress. With him came Joe, silent, full of sympathy. Ellen felt them both towers of strength. In an incredibly short time other men arrived, old Doctor Cutter, and Corrigan, the coroner, a stout, cheerful-looking man, the sheriff and his deputies. The lower hall, Ellen noticed, was tracked with the mud of boots. It was all like a dream.

George came to her, where she sat forlornly in the hall, and told her to go upstairs.

"Have a fire," he said kindly, "and let Tommy come in and play. Try not to let the thing scare you—"

"Does Lillian know?" Ellen asked.

"Lillian is on her way here; she'll come upstairs, too," George said. "Now go on up, dear. This will only distress you."

Ellen obeyed. She and Tommy and Lizzie shared her fire, and while Ellen read the adventures of "Sinbad the Sailor," Lizzie put the room in order, and unpacked all the clothes that Gibbs had so swiftly packed a few hours ago.

After awhile Keno came in to ask her to come to Lillian's room, and Ellen found Lillian there, with the sympathetic Mrs. Pointdexter in attendance. Lillian was lying by the fire, robed in white. She turned aside her head, as Ellen came in, and burst into tears. After a moment she regained her composure, but while the other women murmured together, she did not speak. Now and then she touched her eyes with a folded handkerchief.

"I don't think Lillian'll live through it," Mrs. Pointdexter said presently, with watering eyes.

"Yes, I will—yes, I will," Lillian said bravely. "Because I know that is what he would want me to do!"

Ellen escaped as soon as she decently could.

About ten o'clock George came to her room, and carefully closed the door behind him.

"This matter begins to look rather serious, Ellen," he said, his face very grave.

"You can't find the pistol?" she asked, quickly.

"Oh, yes, we found it—it was in the wastebasket—on the other side the room. Corrigan says that he couldn't have possibly—" He paused. "They've sent for Dan Ryan."

"Ryan?" Ellen asked, puzzled.

"The district attorney," George said quietly.

"Then that's—" she began, with whitening lips. Her voice stopped.

"That's murder," George Lathrop finished. "Anyway, these fellows say so. They may be wrong; I hope to G—d they are! But it's going to be something of a strain—where could you send the boy and his nurse? They'd better not be in the house."

"To Port Washington—Aunt Elsie's. I'll send them at once!" she promised, trying to collect her senses.

"That's right. And pull yourself together, Ellen."

He patted her shoulder affectionately and left the room. Ellen turned to the window and stood there a moment, struggling to control her nerves. There was a tightening sensation in her throat, her lips were dry, and her hands ice-cold. As she stared out across the bare garden and clipped hedges a motorcar wheeled into the pebbled drive and stopped at the door. Four men stepped from the automobile. Instinctively Ellen knew that among them was the district attorney.

She turned giddy a moment, her senses swimming.

"I mustn't give way like this," she told herself sharply, sinking into a chair and making a desperate attempt to compose herself.

Half an hour later, when George Lathrop knocked again at her door, she was still sitting there.

"Is Lizzie here?" he asked. "Ryan has come. He wants to talk to her. I told him about the boy and your wish to get him away. He understands and is quite willing. He'll get Lizzie's deposition and then she may go."

Ellen rose bravely and went toward the nursery.

"This is all a formality, my dear," George said kindly. "We'll have to have all the maids in, Torrens and the rest. The coroner must have a verdict, you know. We won't keep Lizzie long. And, Ellen, Ryan will question you later, you know. I'll be right there. And let me advise you, my dear. Don't talk fast; think a moment before you answer and be sure of what you say—don't try to keep anything back. No matter where the conversation seems to lead, tell the sober, careful truth."

"George!" Ellen said in sudden terror, "they'll find out that Gibbs and his father had a terrible quarrel yesterday—you must have noticed the cut on his forehead—"

"They know all about that!" he answered soothingly. "They'll know everything, sooner or later. So just go straight ahead and tell them the story just as you would tell me—"

"But a wife isn't expected to testify against her husband," she said, half wild with apprehension. The man looked at her silently for a moment.

Triangular Wheels

The cars that travel the "rocky road to Dublin" would have a much rougher time of it if their wheels were like those that the Mongolian peasant uses on his ox cart. The two wheels, says Mr. A. S. Kent in "Old Tartar Trails," are unprotected by iron tires, and therefore with constant use over stony roads they soon lose their roundness and become first octagonal, then hexagonal and then pentagonal. At that point the Mongol begins to think that he ought to have new wheels; but before his caravan has reached a place where he can find a Chinese to do the work the wheels have passed the rectangular stage and have become triangular, and the vehicle will go no farther.

China's Great Wall

This historic wall, extending for a distance of more than 1,700 miles across the northern boundary of the Chinese empire, was built by the Emperor Chi-hoang-ti about 200 B. C. It was built to protect his dominions against the incursions of the Tartars, Kalmucks and other northern tribes, but proved utterly useless. It was from 25 to 30 feet high and 20 feet thick at the base, but tapered to a thickness of 15 feet at the top. It was surmounted by towers 35 to 40 feet in height, at intervals of 200 or 300 yards. The "Great Wall" is said to have required ten years to build, and to have caused the death of tens of thousands of workmen.

Great Metropolis Has Had Many Nicknames

London is probably the leader in names, as in many other things. Some of its names had a vogue for a while, then, with the passing of time, dropped out of use. Such a nickname was the "City of Masts," which referred to the great argosies of commerce that came and went from its shores. With the advent of the steamship this name has gone the way of others before it. "The City of Smoke" and "The City of Fog" are nicknames for London that seem destined to survive for a while. In these names it disputes our own Pittsburgh. It also challenges Boston's claim to being the "Hub of the Universe"; and when O. Henry has made New York famous as "Bagdad of the Subway," British writers have dubbed London the "Modern Babylon."

Other writers have given it other names, but it remained for an Irish poet to give it the name it loves the best. This is "Eternal London," which has been current since Thomas Moore wrote "Go where you will, Eternal London haunts you still." A Scottish poet gave it the name that it loves the least. This is "The City of Dreadful Nights," which had its origin in the name James Thompson gave to a poem on London night life.

British statesmen have dubbed it "The Metropolis of the Empire," while others have called it the "Imperial City." Lloyd George referred to it as the "Heart of the Empire." It has also been known as the "City of Palaces" and "The City of Poets."

THANKSGIVING DAY PROCLAMATION

Thanksgiving Day this year should mean much to the American people. We are blessed with a reasonable degree of prosperity and the outlook for the future is encouraging.

In spite of the many handicaps under which our governmental operations are carried on, our people as a whole, are making steady advances in the cause of good government. The progressive spirit which they repeatedly manifest in relation to the public service, demonstrates their faith in American institutions and the stability of constitutional government.

For these great blessings and the many good things that are ours, it is most fitting that we should render united thanks to Almighty God, the giver of all that is good. Therefore in pursuance of our time honored custom, and in accordance with the proclamation issued by the President of the United States and by virtue of the authority vested in me as Governor of Michigan, I hereby designate Thursday, November 27 1924, as a day of Thanksgiving and Prayer.

A Real Big Man

John Aason, the tallest man in the world is at present in Oakland, California and for size he beats all previous records. John is 24 years of age and eight feet, nine inches tall, weighs 503 pounds and is not what you would call fat but a good proportioned all-round man. He is 5 feet 1 inch around the chest and attributes his size to heredity only. His grand-father was on exhibition at the World's Fair at Chicago as the tallest man known at the time being 8 feet, 7½ inches, and John's father is 7 feet, 6 inches, his mother is 6 feet, 5 inches. His grandfather is 84 years old, and still living.

Being large has its disadvantages so John says. He must have all his clothes made to order, wears an eight and a quarter hat and size 20 shoes, women's stockings size 10½ and they only reach half way to his knees. When he gets a hair cut the barber has to stand on a stool and it is impossible for him to ride in an auto unless the top is down. Just as we thought—Aason is not American because this nervous busy country don't produce 'em. John was born in Norway.

Death of Mrs. Harding

The expected death of Mrs. Harding, widow of the late President, occurred at her home in Marion, Ohio Nov. 21. She did not long survive her distinguished husband, and his death hastened hers. During her severe illness she received many letters of condolence from distinguished people in this country and abroad.

The License Situation

It is rumored that the state of Michigan will not begin selling 1925 license plates as announced on December 1st this year on account of projected license legislation which is pending in Lansing at the present time. Gov. Groesbeck has practically O. K.d a plan of taxing automobiles per hundred weight also signified his willingness to place a gas tax on the people so that it is sure to come out in the wash. Groesbeck has been forced to take this stand by public opinion, notwithstanding his personal judgment is decidedly different.

The Grange and kindred organizations have clamored long and loud for gas tax and it looks as if the Governor was half a mind to give it to them. Suggestion has been made that a weight tax of 70 cents per hundred be placed but likely a happy medium somewhere betwixt and between will be decided upon, and nothing will be done until something degnite is known, the autoist being allowed to use the old plates until February 1st, 1925. Some think a new law will be in force by that time but others think it will never be fixed with the present gang in the legislature. We presume Wayne county as usual, though only one thirtieth of the state, will control a majority of the sentiment regarding automotive legislation, and this fact alone makes the farming contingent a little mad. Detroit Automobile clubs and affiliated organizations somehow exert a powerful influence on our bullet-headed legislators at Lansing, and taking into consideration the number of real dirt farmers up there, we sometimes wonder what our farmerite legislators are about all this time anyhow!

It requires nine tons of steel to make the plates for this county and they trucked this nine tons over from Jackson prison at the usual rate. These plates represent an expenditure of $81,000 for motorists in the county. One-half of this fund goes back to the county to tip the contractor for building good, bad and indifferent roads and the only thing we need now is real honest-to-goodness supervision of the contractors to see that they don't "jolly" the highway bosses into accepting their handiwork when it is not properly executed.

Brotherhood Meeting at Methodist Church

The County Brotherhood of Methodists met with the Brotherhood of the North Adams M. E. church on Friday evening Nov. 7th. Representatives, from Allen, Litchfield, Jonesville, Hillsdale, Frontier, Moscow Plains and Reading with their wives present At 6:30 the Ladies Aid served a delicious banquet to about 150 in the church parlors after which all retired to the auditorium for the program. The Brotherhood Chorus furnished fine music and the address by Dr. Spence of the First M. E. church of Jackson was an exceptionally fine feature. Rev, Henry of the Hillsdale church introduced the speaker by saying that Dr. Spence always gave his hearer something to think about the next day and this address proved his statement Dr. Spence quoted Dr. Voelker of Oberlin College as saying that only 2 per cent of the people do independent thinking—the 88 per cent being followers. He said our educational system was a cramming process which might produce a man with a diploma who could appear on the street with a cigar in his mouth—a fire at one end a fool at the other—but not a thinker. He said education should produce an open mind. Rome and Greece were compared with the U. S. and the Anglo-Saxon race must remember that no one race has endured simply because it thought itself supreme. He spoke of meeting a brilliant Chinese girl student at AnnArbor and emphasized the fact that truth and worth were the same everywhere, and the only things that counted, no matter in what race or creed they existed. In the rapidly changing condition of modern times the thing we need most is an intelligent government by intelligent people and that, in a Democracy, means all of us. He deplored the existence of the little churches in our own town and said he fancied he could hear one singing. "Will there be any stars in my crown?" then the second following with, "No, not one" and the third concluding with "That will be glory for me."

North Adams is fortunate in having Dr. Spence here and the Brotherhood is to be congratulated for the unusually good meeting The next meeting will be in the spring with the Reading church and men and wives are invited.

Organize Radio Farm Club

To make radio the handmaiden of agriculture is the object of a national farm club just organized by the Sears Roebuck Agricultural Foundation Radio Station W. L. S, according to an announcement by Edgar L. Bill, director of the station. The name of the club, to be selected from suggestions being submitted by its listeners, will be announceed December 4, according to Mr. Bill.

"For seven months this station has been sending out programs for farm folk," Mr. Bill says, "and experience has convinced us that these programs are the most important we can put on. Radio means more to rural America than any other group and we are proceeding with our program to make W. L. S. more than ever the farmer's station.

"At present we are devoting thirteen broadcasting hours a week to farm subjects, embracing markets reports, agricultural news, weather forecasts and talks by leaders in the agricultural world on matters of vital concern to the farmer. It is to tie the various farm features of W. L. S. together, as well as to provide a meeting place for the discussion of farm problems that the farm club idea is being formed. Every W. L. S farm listener is eligible to membership.

"The tremendous interest in radio was well demonstrated at the Chicago Radio Show last week The attendance for the week was enormous and it was surprising to witness the attention given the new science by the people out in the country.

The new guard which road builders are now using has been placed on the angling road and we believe it is the most practical and nifty we have ever seen. The body of the fence is of woven wire similar to a mattress and very elastic if hit by an automobile. The guard rails have suffered so many damaging collisions it has been decided to give the new elastic fence a trial. It is obvious that unless the unruly machine should be very heavy and powerful it would rebound rather than smash through. We suppose all this fence is tested before use.

The jokers down at Fayette Ohio, have started a fest as to Sunday closing down there and the poor public is wondering where it will all end. Some one thinking to be extra nice made a "yell" about the running of Sunday movies. At once the slogan of "close up" was taken in hand and they carried it to the limit. They say at present everything is so tight that one cannot buy a cigar or any gas in the town and the end is not yet. Someone suggested that they make it a misdemeanor to eat on the Sabbath day but the business men thought it might effect the sale of provisions so they called it off.

What you GET here depends on what you GIVE here

Did you ever stop to think that what you get in the milk pail you must first put into the feed box?

When production falls off it's easy to blame the cow. But she isn't a magician. She can't make something out of nothing.

A good cow, rightly fed, will pay for herself over and over, year in and year out.

But no cow, wrongly fed, will produce milk profitably for any length of time.

That's why it pays to feed Larro. Larro will produce more profit, dollar for dollar, than any other feed, however little you pay for it.

We can prove this by the actual experience of other dairymen, or by a test with your own cows.

His Work for Liberty

A judge who had been serving in a criminal court effected a transfer to a divorce court. Some lawyers were wondering why he made the change. One of them offered a solution.

"The judge," said he, "is a very humane man."

"What has that to do with it?"

"Well, in a criminal court he had to send people to jail. In the divorce court he gives them their liberty."—Minneapolis Tribune.

The State Administrative Board has ordered the Department of State to defer the sale of 1925 automobile license plates until Feb. 1, pending the possible enactment of the Finance Highway Law by the legislature. Governor Groesbeck favors a combination weight and gasoline tax, he declared, following the board meeting. Figuring at the rate of 70 cent per hundred, the license fee, on a weight basis, would be about $16,000,000 and a 2-cent gasoline tax, with more than 800,000 cars now in operation, would net around $7,000,000.

The Consumers' Power Co., of Bay City, has purchased from the Flint Land Co. the flowage rights on the Rifle River, which include sites for four power dams with a maximum capacity, when developed, of about 12,000 horsepower. The company plans ultimately to build dams and "tie" this power in with that produced on the Au Sable River, but there will be no immediate construction.

With 12 precincts yet to be counted, a total of 3,078 votes has been thrown out by the board of canvassers in the recount on the sheriff's election at Jackson. Tabulation of the 52 precincts showed that Sheriff Stoddard, Democrat, had made a net gain of four votes, giving him a 1,220 majority with only 12 precincts missing.

The state operated cement plant at Chelsea showed a profit of $200,000 up to November 1, according to a report submitted to the administrative board. The Chelsea plant was leased by the state several months ago for three years at $75,000 a year. Prison labor is employed in making the cement.

Contracts for remodeling, repairing and enlarging the Escanaba coal docks of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway at a cost of approximately $500,000, will be let soon. The docks were badly damaged by the fire which on Oct. 23, destroyed two iron ore docks with a loss of $1,500,000.

The crew of the steamer J. C. Ford was rescued after a narrow escape from death when the boat was destroyed by fire off Little Trout island, near the town of Detour. The steamer was owned by William J. Crosby, of Port Huron. She was 172 feet long and had a beam of 33 feet.

The fire which swept a part of the plant of the Port Huron Times-Herald, caused a loss of $5,000 according to estimates. The fire of undetermined origin, started in a pile of paper, damaged several ink rollers, and endangered several barrels of oil and a store of newsprint.

School electors, at a special meeting at Algonac, voted to bond the district for $10,000 to purchase school furniture.

Mrs. Charles Heath was killed by a Grand Trunk switch engine in the Grand Trunk tunnel yards while crossing the tracks at the Sixteenth street crossing at Port Huron. Several cars had passed over her body before it was found.

George Brooks, 22 years old, of Marshall, was sentenced by Judge Leonard D. Verdier to serve from 18 months to 3 years in the State Prison at Jackson when he admitted having abandoned his infant daughter, Grace.

Richard Elliott, of Ypsilanti, has been reappointed under-sheriff by James Robinson, of Ann Arbor. John Connors, Max Mat, Fred Babcock and Stanton Ferguson were appointed deputy sheriffs for this section of the county.

By a vote of 696 to 504, Ypsilanti voted in favor of issuing bonds for $175,000 for the purchase of additional land adjacent to the high school, and the erection of an addition to the Woodruff school.

Egypt Likely to Lose Her Independence Because of the Murder of Stack.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

EGYPTIAN nationalists who assassinated Gen. Sir Lee Stack, sirdar of the Egyptian army and governor general of the Sudan, brought about a crisis for their country and deprived it of much of the limited liberty that had been granted it by Great Britain. Lord Allenby, British high commissioner, promptly presented to the Egyptian government an ultimatum from London and British sea forces began moving toward the land of the Nile. The note from the British required that the Egyptian government should:

1. Present ample apology for the crime.
2. Bring the criminals, whoever they are or whatever their age, to condign punishment.
3. Henceforth forbid and vigorously suppress all popular political demonstrations.
4. Pay forthwith to his majesty's government £500,000 ($2,300,000).
5. Order within twenty-four hours the withdrawal from the Sudan of all Egyptian officers and purely Egyptian units of the Egyptian army.
6. Notify the competent department that the Sudan government will increase the area to be irrigated at Gezira from 300,000 feddans to an unlimited figure as the need may arise.
7. Withdraw all opposition in respect, hereafter specified, to the wishes of his majesty's government concerning protection of foreign interests in Egypt.

The two last demands were the hardest for the Egyptians to accept, and Premier Zagloul Pasha rejected them, yielding to the others. The indemnity was paid at once and the Egyptian troops began withdrawing from the Sudan. Then Zagloul resigned and was succeeded by Ahmed Ziwar Pasha, who formed a moderate ministry. Meanwhile the British had occupied the customs at Alexandria and followed this up with impressive parades of troops through that city and Cairo. The British cabinet held up further measures to give Ziwar a chance, and London believed there was no danger of serious trouble, for the population of Egypt seemed quiet. The Egyptian chamber of deputies protested to all countries of the world and to the League of Nations, and for a few days the French talked excitedly of laying the affair before the league, but it was quite evident that Premier Baldwin and Foreign Minister Chamberlain had laid out their course and would not be diverted. The Laborites in England and in milder degree the Liberals attacked the government for what they termed its brutality and oppression, and it was generally believed the result would be the resumption of the British protectorate over Egypt. At least, the Egyptians have lost all chance of enforcing their claims for joint control of the Sudan, and also the British will now be free to divert all the Nile water they desire for the Sudanese cotton fields through the Gezira irrigation project. The British ministers strongly resent the obvious comparison of their action with that of Austria after the Sarajevo assassination, pointing out that they have only put into operation powers that were expressly reserved in the grant of independence to Egypt. They assert the affair is not the business of the League of Nations, since Egypt is not a member of the league.

SECRETARY WILBUR in his annual report sets forth a lot of facts and figures that are discouraging to those who believe in having the nation in a state of preparedness to resist attack by a foreign foe. Mr. Wilbur declares that owing to the niggardly policy of congress in the matter of appropriations for repairs and replacements, the navy is steadily and rapidly deteriorating; that the ships and their machinery are wearing out faster than they can be renewed, and that this condition has been responsible for numerous accidents. Of the eighteen battleships we retain under the Washington treaty, six are so antiquated and out of condition that they cannot take part in fleet operations. Those vessels, he says, must be modernized if our ratio of naval strength is to be maintained.

Our navy also is outranged by the guns of the British and some of the guns of the Japanese navy. That, however, is due not to the attitude of congress, but to the refusal of the administration to permit elevation of our guns in the face of the British view that such procedure would be a violation of the treaty.

There is a shortage of officers and men properly to man the ships. The enlisted personnel is limited to 86,000. Though officers are needed, congress has reduced the capacity of Annapolis to turn out officers by limiting appointments of cadets to three instead of five for each senator and representative.

It is costing $70,000,000 to scrap the ships we are obligated by the treaty to destroy. One of the vessels in this class was the partly completed dreadnaught Washington, the hull of which has just been sunk off the Virginia capes where it was made the target of ships and bombing planes. It withstood the shells for several days, and the navy officials intimate that much was learned in the process of destruction.

ZR-3, OUR huge German-built dirigible, sailed from Lakehurst down to Washington last week and, settling down on the landing field of the Anacostia naval air station, was christened "Los Angeles" by Mrs. Coolidge while a big flock of homing pigeons was released from its cabins. The airship was then formally placed in commission by Rear Admiral Benjamin F. Hutchinson and made its way serenely back to Lakehurst.

IN PURSUANCE of its determination to settle the question of publication of income tax returns, and probably to expedite the repeal of the publicity clause of the law the Department of Justice has obtained the indictment of the New York Tribune company, publisher of the Herald-Tribune, and also of Walter S. Dickey, owner, and Ralph Ellis, managing editor of the Kansas City Journal-Post. It appears most likely that congress will make quick work of knocking out the publicity clause, for Senator Pat Harrison says he favors its repeal, and some other Democratic leaders are known to agree with him.

TUAN CHI-JUI, Anfu leader, is now both premier and dictator of China, having been installed at the head of the new provisional government in Peking by Chang Tso-lin. The government is regarded as conservative and has strong hopes of harmonizing the Mukden and Yangtse factions. At Chang's request none of his adherents is in the cabinet, and none of Feng's men included. Indeed, the elimination of Feng is complete. He announced that he would resign his command and retire from the army and would make a tour of America or Europe.

Charging by implication that all political disorders in China are caused largely by missionary education, the China Educational conference in Kaifeng passed resolutions demanding close government regulation of all institutions of learning operated by American and other foreign missionaries in China and that all teaching of religion by missionaries in China be stopped.

OPPONENTS of President Mustapha Kemal of Turkey have succeeded to the extent of forcing the resignation of Ismet Pasha, his premier, and the appointment of Fethi Bey, who formerly held that post.

In Italy, too, the opposition has scored to some extent, for Premier Mussolini, in order to avert a parliamentary break with his friends, promised in the chamber of deputies to prosecute sternly the Facisti guilty of excesses against the population, and also to moderate the utterances of the Fascisti, beginning with himself. He apologized to parliament for the events of November 4, when Fascisti attacked the war veterans' victory demonstration, and admitted that the country was deserting the Fascisti. But he warned the chamber that if he were overthrown, the government would revert to the Communists. He was given a great ovation and later a vote of confidence.

WILLIAM J. FAHY, long considered the best thief catcher among the postal inspectors, was convicted in the Federal court in Chicago of complicity in the $2,000,000 mail robbery at Rondout, Ill. James Murray, a small politician, also was found guilty. Six others implicated had confessed. All eight face long terms in the penitentiary. Fahy still insists he was "framed" by other members of the postal inspection force.

Another alleged Chicago criminal has been caught and must stand trial. He is Leo Koretz, who is charged with swindling many of his friends out of sums amounting to several million dollars by a bogus oil land scheme. He was found in Halifax, N. S., disguised by a full beard and cutting quite a splurge in society with his ill-gotten money.

ONCE more the American Federation of Labor voted to adhere to its long-time policy of nonpartisanship in politics, rejecting almost unanimously two resolutions, either of which would have committed its membership to the support of a new party. The committee report against the resolutions, which was adopted, said:

"Our nonpartisan political policy does not imply that we shall ignore the existence or attitudes of political parties. It does mean that labor proposes to use all parties and be used by none.

"Your committee unequivocally recommends full approval and indorsement of the attitude and activities manifested and engaged in on the recent presidential and congressional political campaign. We rejoice in the results achieved in the congressional elections and are inspired by the future opportunities presented to America's wage earners.

"Labor having succeeded in elections where congress, and congress alone, was the issue, the effort was made in this recent election to reconquer congress under the guise of a presidential election, declared to be of paramount issue. Our nonpartisan political policy withstood the test and issued forth triumphant with its forces intact. The opponents having played their strongest card and having failed, the future belongs to labor and progress."

Samuel Gompers was elected president for the forty-fourth time, and Frank Morrison was re-elected secretary. Atlantic City, N. J., was selected as the convention city for 1925.

THERE will be at least three election contests for the senate to decide in the next congress. Daniel F. Steck, Democrat, who was defeated by Senator Brookhart of Iowa by 755 votes, thinks ballots that were thrown out may give him the seat. Senator Bursum of New Mexico, Republican, and Senator Magnus Johnson of Minnesota, Farmer-Labor, will contest the elections of S. C. Bratton, Democrat, and Schall, Republican, respectively.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE settled the matter of a secretary of agriculture by appointing Acting Secretary Gore to hold the place until he becomes governor of Maryland on March 4. Middle Western Republicans appear dissatisfied with the representation of that part of the country in the cabinet, and some of them have recommended that M. E. Greenebaum, Chicago banker, be given a portfolio. They also hope John L. Lewis of Indianapolis, head of the mine workers, will be given the post of secretary of labor on the retirement of Mr. Davis.

FLORENCE KLING HARDING, after a brave fight but a losing one, lies at rest beside her husband, the late President, in the vault at Marion, Ohio. The death of this beloved woman brought expressions of sorrow from people of all parts of the country, and her funeral was attended by many notables, including representatives of the administration.

Tell Harrowing Tales of Soviet Cruelties

Mobile.—Officers and crew of the Greek steamer Margarita, arriving here 40 days out from Pita, Russia, on the Black sea, with manganese ore, told tales of cruelty and outrages against the people of the state of Georgia in the Soviet empire.

The vessel touched at Pita ten days after wholesale murders of Georgians, whose population of that unfortunate country is said to be beneath the heel of Red Russia.

A famine is predicted in parts of Russia this winter.

Members of the crew who went ashore at Constantinople reported that city rapidly declining. The ancient city of Byzantium, at one time the largest foreign center in the East, is being abandoned by all except the natives.

The Greek seamen of the Margarita reported the Russian Reds are conducting a campaign of extermination against the Georgians. A huge mound just outside Pita bears mute testimony to the massacre of 450 Pitans, who dug their own grave at the point of Red guns, and then were executed.

The Russian government will derive 55 per cent from the profits of the Margarita's cargo, and the owner 45 per cent. This is the result of the Soviet confiscation of 55 per cent of all manganese deposits, a step toward complete nationalization of the manganese mines, a source of wealth to the tiny Georgian republic.

English Village Brides Measured for Dowries

A quaint ceremony is observed at Roydon, in Norfolk, England, the Philadelphia Inquirer says.

About 300 years ago the lord of the manor bequeathed the sum of £1,000, the interest from which was to be voted annually to provide dowries for four brides. Under the terms of the bequest the money has to be divided between the youngest, the eldest, the shortest and the tallest brides married during the course of each year in the parish church.

This entails the "measuring of the bride." After the marriage ceremony the bride and bridegroom proceed to vestry to sign the register and the bride is then measured by the officiating minister. In order that her correct stature may be ascertained she is required to remove her shoes and let down her hair. At the end of the year the marriage records are examined and the dowries awarded to those qualified to receive them.

Are You Nervous?

Portsmouth, Ohio—"About twenty years ago I was clear down and out physically, my nerves were completely gone and I could not sleep or eat. I was able to sit up only about an hour at a time. I doctored for six months but instead of getting better I grew worse. A neighbor persuaded me to take Dr. Pierce's medicines. I took his 'Favorite Prescription,' 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pleasant Pellets', and in three months I was back to normal health, my nerves were good, I could eat and sleep well and do all my own work."—Mrs. Edward Pollitt, 844 Front Street. Drastic Action

"Can you fix up this yur clock so's it'll run?" inquired Gap Johnson of Rumpus Ridge.

"I reckon so," replied the jeweler, examining the sadly dilapidated timepiece. "How in the Sam Hill did it get in this condition?"

"The presiding elder was at my house tuther night, and he said he'd read that every time the clock ticked a baby was born and every third child was a Chinese. My least boy, Bearcat, heered him and said by-gosh he'd stop that foolishness. He up with my pistol before I noticed he had it and poured the whole blame seven shots into the bowels of that there clock."—Kansas City Times.

Real Tribute

A lot of funny things go through the mails. One morning Senator McKinley, in Washington, received a request from an aged constituent to see what could be done to hurry along his pension.

"I heard you make a speech the last time you were in town," he wrote, "and you had some good things in it that I laughed at. In fact, I laughed sa hard that one of my teeth came out. I inclose the tooth."

The senator says this is the strangest proof of fealty and token of esteem that has ever come to him in his whole political career.—Houston Post.

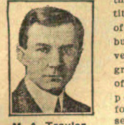
A GREAT MENACE

By M. A. Traylor, Chairman, Economic Policy Commission, American Bankers Association



M. A. Traylor

A cross section of American thought today, as reflected in private conversation, public addresses and through our multitude of avenues of thought distribution, would reveal perhaps as great a confusion of ideas and purposes as confounded the assembled throng at Babylon. Is it not high time that the bankers demand the preservation and practice of those sound fundamental principles which are so absolutely essential to the welfare of the nation? Bankers and business men of the country have little right to complain of the prevalence of unsound economic theories, of radical political tendencies and paralyzingly foolish legislation, so long as they maintain the silent or defensive attitude which has characterized them in the past.

A few days ago I heard a gentleman, supposedly well versed in politics, say that if the charter of the Federal Reserve System were up for renewal or extension at the present time, he doubted very much if Congress would prolong the life of the System, and certainly if it did would only do so after such amendments and modifications as would destroy the basic principles underlying the present structure.

A real menace is involved in this suggestion, but I wonder how much we have done or will do to acquaint the voting public, who will eventually elect the Congress who will pass upon this proposition, with the actual facts of the case. Notwithstanding mistakes that have been made in the administration of the System, most of

DAVIS AND BRYAN FRIENDS OF LABOR

By W. B. WILSON

Former Secretary of Labor, 1913-1921

Information reaching Democratic headquarters shows that large numbers of officials and members of labor organizations are giving their support to Davis and Bryan because of the unequalled labor record of the Democratic Party and the fact that the Democratic platform is the most favorable to labor of any presented in this campaign, and that both of the candidates have clean labor records.

More than a month ago the statement was given wide publicity that in all of the public career of John W. Davis not a single word is cited or can be cited antagonistic to the rights of labor. In the face of a strenuous campaign where even matters of minor importance are magnified, no one has been able to point to any official act of his that in the slightest way tarnishes a record that has been consistently favorable to labor.

In the light of these facts as they become generally known and the knowledge that citizenship is personal and every individual must be responsible to his own conscience and judgment for the proper exercise of the franchise Davis and Bryan are daily growing stronger with the wage-workers of the country and the great mass of the common people.

Michigan Takes Over State Alfalfa Crown

That Michigan ranks first among all states east of the Mississippi river, both in total acreage of alfalfa grown and in increased acreage during recent years, was shown in a report made recently before the American Society of Agronomy by O. S. Fisher, U. S. Department of Agriculture specialist.

Wolverine farmers grew 338,000 acres for Wisconsin, the second state in total acreage. Percentage increases since 1919, as given by Mr. Fisher. show that Michigan gained 357 percent in acreage of the important leguminous crop while Minnesota stood second with an increase of 173 percent in the same period.

The alfalfa and dairy campaign conducted in various counties of the state during the past four years by the extension division at M. A. C. is generally credited with the remarkable increase in Michigan. The "farm and barn" type of intensified campaign, which has been used throughout the state, is new in extension methods, it is said. An average of about ten counties a year have been reached by the college campaign teams, local meetings being held in practically every township in the counties covered.

With the increased alfalfa acreage estimated by crops specialists to be worth fully five milliou dollars to farmers and the state as a whole, and the campaigns costing only between ten and fifteen thousand dollars a year, it is estimated that the campaign work is paying dividends of several thousand percent.

Time Extended For Dairy Record Entry

The final date for entry of animals in the Michigan dairy Record of Performance has been postponed from Dec. 1 until Jan. 1, according to A. C. Baltzer; extension specialist at M. A. C. and in charge of the record of performance work for Michigan. Cows in herds which are included in cow testing associations are eligible to compete for the records.

There are now 105 official cow testing associations operating in Michigan, according to Mr. Baltzer, placing the state second only to Wisconsin in organized dairy improvement work. Interest in the record of performance has been so marked among dairy men of the state, it is said, that the dairy department at M. A. C. decided on the postponed final entry date to allow more cow test association members to get in on the records.

Twenty Reach Goal In Ton Litter Test

Twenty Michigan swine breeders reached the coveted goal in the state Ton Litter contest during the past season, according to summary figures just announced by the animal husbandry department at the M. A. C.

Top honors went to H. M. McIlwain. of Bath, Clinton County, who checked in a litter of 13 Duroc Jerseys for a total weight of 3,074 pounds, 180 days after birth. Houseman Brothers, of Albion were second with a 2,824 pound Duroc Jersey litter; while third went to Earnest Barnard, of Portland, whose Poland Chinas weighed in at 2,686 pounds. The rest of the 20 successful entrants in the contest scaled down gradually to an even 2,000 pounds, Fred Rohlfs of Fairgroves just getting into the select ton classification.

Several contestants who stood an excellent chance of reaching the ton minimum with their entries dropped out before the 180 days were up in order to take advantage of favorable markets, according to V. E. Freeman, specialist with the M. A. C. staff who checks the contest records.

Advises Feeding Of Surplus Potato Crop

With the government crop estimates for November placing the nation's potato crop even thirty million bushels higher than the October estimate, and the Michigan crop alone estimated at 38,227,000 bushels, J. W. Weston, potato specialist at M. A. C. is calling attention of Michigan farmers to the opportunity of feeding low quality and surplus stock potatoes.

Potatoes may be fed safely to livestock if established rations are followed, according to Weston, their feeding value being estimated definitely in relation to corn. When potatoes reach a certain low price level, in relation to the price of corn, it is said to be good economy to feed them out on the farm.

Information on the safe and best rations for feeding potatoes, and other information on their utilization as feed may be had from local county agricultural agents or from the college specialists at East Lansing.

Harvests 4,000 Bushels of Wheat

Ralph Arbogast, Branch county Farm Bureau member, is one of Michigan's leading wheat growers. This year he produced 4,000 bushels of high market value wheat, running better than 60 pounds to the bushel. He had 40 acres of certified Red Rock wheat running 47 bushels to the acre and another 40 acres running 37.7 bushels. He also had 12 acres of Michigan No. 1, a new beardless variety. This wheat is being tried out by the M. A, C. Farm Crops Department and Mr. Arbogast is assisting in the experiments. He is a member of the Michigan Crop Improvement Association.

Reasons for Mr. Arbogast's good yield may be summed up as follows: a good season, a very careful system of farming with emphasis on alfalfa, clover acid phosphate manure and pure seed of productive varieties.

Which System is Best?

In Seattle, the city owns the street railroad system and the people pay ten cents for a single ride and, in addition, dig up some $600,000 a year taxes which the private company formerly paid.

In Portland, the street railway is owned privately, gives better service than the Seattle system and car riders pay eight cents for a single ride. The city collects annually some hundreds of thousands of dollars taxes from the private company, thus relieving all Portland property of a corresponding amount of taxation.

Cleveland, Ohio, the star performer in municipal ownership, is going into an eclipse. Figures show that the private electric company in that city which competes with the municipal electric plant, has gained 184 per cent in customers over a given period as against 121 percent for the municipal plant during the same period. The gross revenues per killowatt hour for all electricity supplied by municipal and private plants in Cleveland is approximately the same but if taxes are deducted from private company rates, private service would be considerably cheaper. Draw your own conclusions.

"BOB'S BUNKEM" IN TOTAL COLLAPSE WHEN HIS CHARGES ARE ANALYZED

Appeal to Class Prejudice by Accusing American Business of Monopolistic Conspiracy Not Supported by Facts.

By Wm. M. BUTLER,
Chairman Republican National Committee.

Washington.—Senator LaFollette, opening his campaign with a speech on Labor day, pictured the American people as being in a terrible plight, and offered a bill of particulars. He also proposed his remedies. His speech was an appeal to class prejudice. The "facts" upon which his speech was based have been subjected to careful scrutiny, and his allegations do not stand up.

He said a gigantic monopolistic conspiracy of American business is sucking the blood, morals and pocketbooks of the American people. The truth is the Republican administration has fought monopoly and preserved free competition, as proven by the actual price of necessities. Examining Mr. LaFollette's speech in detail, how does it square with the facts?

1. "Exactly what do we mean by the 'system'?" asked LaFollette and answering his own question, he said: "We mean the combination which rules the coal industry of this country and which fixes the price of coal to the consumer."

The fact is that in the bituminous coal industry, which comprises 85 per cent of all coal production, there is no single corporation or group which controls more than 5 per cent of the total output. Eight thousand independent operators are in active competition, half of them selling coal for less than cost; bituminous prices are lower today than in 1916, though wages are 100 per cent above pre-war.

2. He said: "We mean the banking combine which, through its control of the federal reserve board, arbitrarily fixed interest rates and controls credit in the interest of the big monopoly system. It initiated four years ago a policy of deflation, causing a shrinkage in farm prices since 1920."

This deflation was inaugurated and carried out under the Democratic administration. Interest rates were at once lowered when the Republican administration came into office. Furthermore the Republican administration appointed a farmer on the federal reserve board and created the intermediate credit system for the farmer's special benefit.

Mr. LaFollette forgets that there has been a steady increase in the prices to the farmer, as well as an increase in the purchasing power of his crops, ever since the Republican administration reversed the policy of the Democratic administration, which placed the farmer in the economic situation that he was in in 1921 and later. This is shown by the following index numbers of the average price of agricultural products and the index numbers of the purchasing power of the products as published by the Department of Agriculture:

Wholesale Prices for Farm Crops.

Year	Index Numbers	Purchasing Power Farm Products—1913
1913	100	100
1921	109	67
1922	112	69
1923	136	72
July 1924	155	83

3. Mr. LaFollette said: "The consumption per capita of such a staple food as bread is very much less than it was a few years ago. . . . It means that there are many people in the United States today who are hungry for bread."

Bread consumption has been decreasing in the United States in recent years, but Mr. LaFollette distorts the reason. Every nation decreases its consumption of bread when it increases its consumption of meats, fruits, sugar and other palatable foods demanded by a higher standard of living. Senator LaFollette attempts to conceal the increased consumption of other agricultural products. Under the low standards of living in Europe the consumption of breadstuffs amounts to 60 per cent of the total diet as against 20 per cent in the United States.

The following table shows the increase in consumption of foodstuffs per capita in the United States in important lines compared with wheat:

Average Annual Consumption in Pounds Per Person.

	Wheat	Sugar	All Meats, Incl. Lard	Beef	Pork, Incl. Lard
1912-14	319.2	85.9	156.9	66.0	82.9
1923	208.0	106.3	183.4	70.4	107.8

4. He said: "We mean the meat-packing combination, which fixes the price of the products of the farm," etc.

There are about 700 independent competing packers in the United States. Three of the "big five" to whom Mr. LaFollette refers, have had to entirely refinance their business due to enormous losses; and one is in the hands of a receiver. The five have earned less than 1 per cent on goods handled during the past four years.

5. Mr. LaFollette said tariffs must be reduced. He attacked the whole Fordney bill and demanded all-around reduction.

Take the tariff off dairy products and you destroy that industry; take the duty off wool and you destroy the sheep industry; take the tariff off California fruits and nuts and the American growers are at the mercy of the Mediterranean growers. And so on down the list. Take the tariff off manufactured goods and the American workingman is at once in unrestrained competition with the sweated labor of Europe.

Mr. LaFollette said:

6. "The farmer in this country receives an average of only 40 cents of the dollar paid by the city consumer for farm products while the farmer of Denmark receives an average of 80 cents."

He neglects to state that the farmer in Denmark is within 125 miles of all consumers while in the United States there is an average of 1,200 miles between farmer and consumer.

7. He said: "We mean the sugar monopoly," etc.

The wholesale price of sugar at New York since the 1922 tariff was passed has averaged a little over 6 cents a pound; the average, for three years before the war was a little over 4½ cents; an increase of 30 to 35 per cent. The average increase in the price of all commodities has been 45 per cent. Seventy per cent of Cuban sugar (our chief supply) is controlled by four or five groups which operate on foreign soil beyond reach of our Sherman anti-trust law. But for the competition of American beet sugar, these four or five groups would control absolutely the price of sugar in the United States. The Republican tariff has preserved and fostered the beet sugar industry. The Cuban groups want to destroy the tariff on sugar; so does Mr. LaFollette.

8. He said: "We mean the transportation monopoly," etc.

The railways of the United States during the last four years have never earned more than 5¼ per cent on physical valuation, and on an average have earned less than 4 per cent. There cannot be much extortion in these earnings. Remember, labor comprises 70 per cent of railway operating costs. The average railroad wage is now 90 per cent above pre-war, yet the railways, by great economies of operation, have held rates on agricultural products to a point only 45 per cent above pre-war level. Agriculture needs a reduction in freight rates, but that does not justify a misstatement of the facts. The only way for Mr. LaFollette to bring about the gigantic rate reduction he talks about is to reduce the wages of railway employees, and if he does that he will decrease consumption of the farmer's produce.

9. He said: "We mean the oil monopoly, which dictates prices on gasoline throughout the land."

The average pre-war price of gasoline was 16 cents; it is now 19 cents, an increase of about 19 per cent. Remember the average advance in all commodity prices was 45 per cent.

10. Mr. LaFollette charges that the Republican administration failed to enforce the laws against combinations and monopolies.

The fact is congress during this administration passed bills to correct evils attending meat packing and stockyards, and the dealing in grain futures. Under this same administration 49 suits were brought to check violations of the anti-trust laws, and 47 of them have been cleaned up; this is a greater record than was made in the previous ten years. The Federal Trade Commission has handled 30 per cent more cases of unfair trade practices during the present Republican administration than in any previous four years.

Senator LaFollette said:

9. "We mean to conserve those natural resources and to make available to the people at cost the light, heat and water which can be developed from the water power sites now owned by the government."

What Mr. LaFollette really wants is government development and operation of public utilities. The government has never been able to operate public utilities as cheaply as can private enterprise. What Mr. LaFollette means, but is afraid to say, is socialism.

The federal water power act, in force since 1920, insures permanent public ownership and control of power sites on public lands and power privileges in navigable and international streams, which contain 85 per cent of the water power resources of the country.

Mr. LaFollette did not on this occasion mention his proposal of two months ago about government ownership of railways, nor his proposal that congress should override the Supreme court. Under government ownership of railways would he give employees the right to strike and disrupt all transportation whenever they wanted an increase in wages, or would he suppress strikes among government employees and thus thrust all of the railway employees in the country into entire subjection to congress for their fundamental living standards?

In the case of the plan to let congress override the Supreme court, it would be interesting to know whether the various minorities in the United States are prepared to sacrifice their right to freedom of speech under the present Constitution and subordinate such right to the will of a congressional majority.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

Join A Minority

Growing up is in many respects a process of joining the majority. Necessarily a large part of our early years must be occupied with learning to do what others do. Those features of our conduct which have the approval of our elders are encouraged and those other features which are frowned on by teachers and other representatives of good society are sharply curbed.

Going to school tends to make us all much alike. The boy or girl of high school age is one of the strictest conformists in the world. As a rule, he wishes his clothes to be identical with those worn by the rest of his classmates. Or when the girls are having their hair bobbed, not to have one's hair bobbed is nothing short of a world tragedy So with the boys, when the dictates of fashion prescribe hair plastered down tight on the head until it gleams likepolished ivory, nothing else but plastered hair will completely satisfy the heart. So the process of joining the majority goes on.

After leaving school other forcss continue the process of standardizing. In these days more than ever before, newspaper articles, so called comic strips and editorials syndicated all over the land and appearing in hundreds of newspapers tend to make the national mind into one type. Individuality is flattened out of thousands of people until their thoughts and speech are so much alike that they are like a string of paper dolls which have been cut from one pattern and resemble each other in every particular.

We have more followers than we have leaders. That is, we have more people who are trying to find out just what the popular opinion will be and so shout out loudly that opinion. It is just a case of watching which way the cat is going to jump first. A great deal of like mindedness among the population is necessary if we are to have any effective unity. But far too much of individuality and personality can be sacrificed. Like mindedness can be made a deadening thing. It should never be forgotten that all through history the great steps of progress have not come from majorities but from minorities. They have come not from what is popular but from what is right. Hence the soundest advice which can be given to a young person who wants to make good for the betterment of the world is this: Join a minority.

If we will recall the great steps of progress toward a better world in which freedom has been enlarged and injustice and suffering decreased, we will see that they have come from small minorities. It was so in the abolition of slavery in our own country. We easily forget that there was a time when abolitionists were just as much detested in Boston as they were in Savannah; just as much held in contempt in New York as in New Orleans. The small group of people who took their stand for the complete abolition of human slavery were regarded as fanatics. For many years to express such an opinion violently was not merely to risk being assaulted, but it involved the spoilation of property and even the risk of life. It was in those times that the man who believed it was possible to abolish slavery needed such a blazing faith as that of Wm Lloyd Garrison, who said: "Ask a mother to be quiet while her babe is in a house which is burning down, but do not ask me to be silent on the question of slavery. I am in earnest. I will not equivocate; I will not excuse; I will not retreat a single inch; and I will be heard." He was heard.

So it was with the abolition of the liquor traffic. Seventy five years ago the sentiment for prohibition of the liquor traffic was so small and scattered that it was hard to find even among the Christian churches of America. Great crusaders like Neal Dow and John B. Goff were like voices crying in the wilderness. A large majority of the people seemed to regard traffic in liquor as an inestimable feature of civilized life. Many would no more think of trying to abolish it than they would think of trying to abolish day or night. Even twenty five years ago those who actually believed that a constitutional amendment abolishing liquor was possible within a generation were a decided minority of the population. But they were a minority with unbreakable confidence and they so made their enthusiasm and faith contagious that what they hoped for was brought about.

But the most striking illustration of the power of a minority is the spread of Christianity itself. History does not furnish a parallel. The achievement of that little group of men who went out from Jerusalem into a hostile world on the undertaking of transforming it morally, politically, and spiritually was stupendous. That task, we need not say, has not yet been done But when we realize the far reaching results which have come into the world from that little organization of a few score men and women which was the first Christian church, we realize the tremendous power that lies in a determined minority, when that minority is held up and held together by a burning purpose.

License Piat tes Freeo Feb. 1

The State Administrative board to-day authorized Charles J. Deland, secretary of state, to issue license plates gratis to all purchasers of new cars between now and Feb. 1. Approval was given following a preliminary conference when it was agreed that something must be done to protect automobile dealers and manufacturers who complained that car sales were threatened by the recent action of the board deferring the sale of 1925 plates until Feb. 1. Many prospective purchasers the dealers asserted, who had ordered cars for delivery in December or January, thinking they could secure 1925 plates then, refused to go through with the deals when it was announced that no licenses would be sold until February, They apparently feared they would have to purchase 1924 plates to tide them over unt l Febrnary and then buy 1625 licenses. The state will loan all new car purchasers a set of 1924 plates which will be used until the sale of next year's plates is authorized. If the legislature fails to enact highway finance and license laws by that cate it is dossible that there will be another short postponement in which case the loaned plates will hold good. Presenf awners of cars will operate with their 1924 plates unfil the state offers new plates for sale. It is estimated by Mr. Deland that close to 50,000 sets of plates will be loaned New cars are being titlee qy the state at the rate of 400 to 500 per day. To take care of the situation outside of Michigan after January 1, the department of state is mailing letters to all other states asking that the 1924 pletes be honored.

Captain Cook's Turtle

We see it elabarately stated that Captain E. T. Pollock, the governor of American Samoa, has informed our navy department that the turtle marked and left on the Tonga Islands by Captain Cook, the English mariner in 1773, was seen there a few weeks ago. Although turtles have a record for longevity, this particular one shows signs of extreme old age and is said to creak like an ox cart when walking. In addition to being decrepit at the tender age of 150, this old animal is stone blind. Generally turtles of this species live to be 400 years of age, or more.

Though there is no official records to prove it, the story goes that Captain Cook stopped at the Galapagos islands on one of his numerous cruises and while there captured a number of giant turtles. After carving the date on the thick shell he released it in the Tongas group. It is supposed he selected a comparatively young turtle for the experiment (possibly 50 years of age) and so the old sod-buster is still wandering around in the Pacific and on the Islands at the advanced age of 200 years.

Shop Early

The "Shop Early Mail Early" campaign inaugurated by Postmaster General New last year, proved to be an unqualified success. It was one of great benefit to the people and enabled the post office employees to deliver all the Christmas mail before noon on December 25. The department again this year asks the hearty co-operation of the public in order that the record made last year may be equalled if not excelled.

When you shop early you are helping the clerks in the postoffice to eat their dinners home and you are greatly benefitting yourselves. You have a greater chance to secure a better selection of gifts from the stores, you have more time to wrap them securely, and you are sure they will arrive at their destieation in time to be opened Christmas morning. You are also relieving the burdens on the clerks behind the counters in the stores, and you are giving a practical demonstration of the good will that Christmas time signifies. Acting Postmaster General, John H. Bartlett requests that you refrain from using small envelopes in sending your Christmas cards as this very greatly retards the sorting and distribution of the mails. Let us all pull together this year, do our shopping early and do your mailing early. Let's make it a genuine old fashioned Christmas celebration.

Christmas Mail

Last year, through the generous cooperation of the press, the movies and other advertising mediums, Christmas mailers were induced to dispatch their Yuletide presents earlier in the month than ever before in the history of the institution of gift excanging in the holiday season.

As a result, the spectacle of the last minute rush of former years, with its attendant heartbreaking labor on the part of wearied and nerve worn store clerks and postal employees, was avoided.

This year Postmaster General New and First Assistant Postmaster General John H. Bartlett have determined to make an even better record and to banish for all time the suffering undergone in past years by those engaged in the sale or transportation of gifts. They hope to make "Shop Early" and "Mail Early" a habit with the American people.

Mailing early does not mean December 1 or before, but if every one could get their holiday tokens in the mail between December 10 and December 20, the post office could not ask more.

Particular attention this year will be paid to greeting cards. Despite the success last year it was noted that the last minute mail consisted largely of cards. Possibly many of them were returned greetings to friends, heard from on a previous mail, but overlooked on the original Christmas list. Unlike parcels and letters containing money orders, cards, of course, cannot well be marked "Do not open until Christmas." Therefore, it is possible that the many mailers hold them until the last to insure delivery on Christmas Eve. This class of mailers this year, however may find their cards undelivered until after Christmas Day.

Believing that the energies of postal employees should not be sapped to the last degree for any avoidable reason, and inteut upon securing for them the same Christmas privileges enjoyed by others Postmaster General New asks the hearty cooperation of the public. The last minute, or zero hour has been moved up so that all postal employees may eat their Christmas dinners at home. Rural carriers will deliver no mail at all on Christmas day and clerks and carriers in the city offices will stop work promptly at noon.

People of Mississippi are lamenting the loss of one of their finest old plantation homes, which was recently destroyed by fire. The home which required three years to build, was started in the year 1858 and contained 42 rooms and what was said to be the most beautiful stairway in the South. "Annandale" as it was called, was of historic value also, because it was one of the few southern mansions that survived the Civil war.

LINCOLN NEIGHBOR LA FOLLETTE FAMILY

As the LaFollette family were among the founders of the Republican party in Wisconsin, so were the ancestors of the future senator and Presidential candidate intimately associated with the family of Abraham Lincoln, the first President elected by the new party of freedom in 1860.

At the time of Abraham Lincoln's birth in Hardin county, Kentucky, in 1809, Jesse LaFollette, the grandfather of Senator LaFollette, was living in the same county and was a near neighbor of the Lincolns. Living with Jesse LaFollette at the time was his father, Joseph LaFollette, one of the original American LaFollettes and a soldier of the Revolution, who was to attain the age of a century and who died in Indiana in 1834. The LaFollette family moved from Hardin county, Kentucky, in 1828 to Indiana. As a boy Abe Lincoln was a frequent visitor at the Jesse LaFollette home, and in this connection an incident is cited in one of the biographies of Lincoln to illustrate his retentive memory. When he was President he was visited by a delegation from his native county of Hardin. Among the old neighbors about whom he inquired was "Uncle Jesse LaFollette." "As a boy I often played in his barn," said the great emancipator, "and remember it well, although I was then very young."

THIS WOMAN RELIEVED FROM SUFFERING

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. A Remarkable Story

Dover, Del.—"I wish every woman would take your wonderful medicine as it has done so much good to me. I had cramps and faint spells and very bad pains. One day I was over to my neighbor's house and she told me I ought to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. So I went to the store on my way home and got a bottle, and took the first dose before supper. I have been taking it ever since, and you can hardly believe how different I feel. I had just wanted to lie in bed all the time, and when I started to brush up I would give out in about ten minutes. So you know how badly I felt. I used to go to bed at eight and get up at seven, still tired. Now I can work all day and stay up until eleven, and feel all right all the time. My housework is all I do in summer, but in winter I work in a factory. I have told a good many of my friends, and I have had three come to me and tell me they wouldn't do without the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. SAMUEL MURPHY, 219 Cecil St., Dover, Delaware.

"Do you realize the situation that we are facing, Ellen?" he asked, with deadly gravity. "Do you realize the danger of your insinuation that your telling the simple truth would be construed into testimony against Gibbs?"

She looked at him, breathing hard.

"I see!" she said, in a whisper. "George, I'll put everything out of my mind—I promise you! I'll try to be sensible. But, George—they won't—they can't—"

He did not speak, but his look silenced her.

"You want Lizzie, don't you?" she said composedly, after a moment. "I'll send her out. And meanwhile, I'll be packing the baby's things, and send them away directly."

"Excellent!" he said. "Then we can get hold of Lizzie again if we need her."

"I'll telephone Aunt Elsie," Ellen added thoughtfully. She went into the nursery where Lizzie had been reading to Tommy and sent the girl out.

Lizzie was downstairs not more than fifteen minutes. Ellen looked fearfully at her face when she came up.

"It wasn't anything," Lizzie said, in a low tone, over her packing. "He just asked me a few questions, and how I knew there was a pistol in that drawer—and whether I had heard anything about Mr. Josselyn and his father fighting—he spoke kind enough, and a young fellow there wrote it down. I said I hadn't been downstairs until after they had their trouble—"

"Listen," said Tommy, rushing in from the other room, and insinuating his person into his mother's lap, "Will you tell Aunt Elsie that I can go down on the ice?"

"You be a god boy for Lizzie, dearest," Ellen said, kissing him. "And you'll keep him absolutely by himself, Lizzie?" she asked. "I don't want him to hear any talk of this." Ellen sighed in sick foreboding. There would be talk enough! She had his luncheon and Lizzie's brought upstairs, and saw them off at one o'clock. Gibbs came up for a moment, looking white, and Tommy gave his parents frantic hugs for good-by. Ellen breathed easier when the little boy was out of the atmosphere of death and mystery.

CHAPTER XII

"Just tell me simply and fully all about yesterday," said the district attorney pleasantly. Ellen, facing him across the big table in the library, smiled nervously in answer to his encouraging smile. The library seemed full of men; some writing, some watching her. Doctor Cutter was there, and George Lathrop. The air was thick with the odor of strong cigars, and also the smell of trays of coffee and sandwiches that had been taken away a short time before.

She began shakily, gaining confidence as she went on. They were all kind to her; they even infused a sort of brightness into the air. Occasionally she was interrupted, bu the questions were unexpectedly few and brief.

"Just a minute there, Mrs. Josselyn. About that revolver. You came into the study and found the girl looking at it?"

"She had it in her hand."

"Raised in the air?"

"Oh, no, lying idly on the table. She was frightened when I came in. I threw it in the drawer, and shut the drawer."

"She didn't go back to that room again?"

"I am sure she did not. She has told you it was a—a quarrel with her fiance—with my brother, in fact, that made her desperate. I sent for my brother, and they were—were reconciled."

"She couldn't have gone downstairs after dinner?"

"I know she did not. We were talking until late—until after ten o'clock, and when she went back to the nursery she left the door open. She spoke to me again while she was brushing her hair. And at eleven I went to look at my son and I saw her asleep."

"You had not suspected her attachment to your brother?"

"No, sir. She had been my aunt's—helper, and it began then."

Ellen went on with her recital. When she finished there was a tense stillness in the room.

George rose and filled a glass with water and brought it to her. There was a general stir among the room's occupants; a sibilant murmur was audible.

"Now, Mrs. Josselyn, there are some questions I should like to ask you." Ryan laid down his notes and cleared his throat. "I want you to go back to the scene of the quarrel. At the time you were standing on the landing and you saw and heard everything that was done and said. Did you know what the quarrel was about?"

"Not then. No, sir."

"Not then—I see. But 'ater you did?"

"Later my father-in-law told me that it was because he had seen the item in the paper."

"The item, yes—we have that here. But you saw the two men fight?—yes. And now tell me, did you hear your husband say anything in that fight? Begin at the beginning—"

"They talked so low—and so fast—" Ellen said, beginning to tremble. "I couldn't hear it all. But I heard Mr. Josselyn call out: 'That's a deliberate falsehood!' and then my husband said that he could not say that to him—"

"Didn't he say, 'I'll kill you if you say that again?'" Ryan suggested.

"I don't think he said that. I couldn't say—"

"Exactly," Ryan said. "You were excited and frightened by this noise, and naturally you only got a vague impression of it." He glanced at a paper before him. "Go on, Mrs. Josselyn, you saw the blow struck?"

"Yes, sir. I saw Mr. Josselyn reach for the paper-cutter, and I screamed, I think."

"Why did he reach for it? What had his son said?"

"He said 'I'll stop you—!'" Ellen began, and was silent.

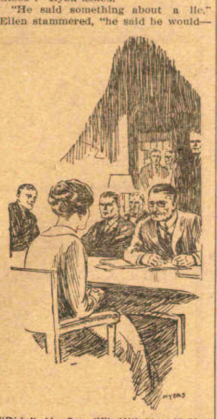
"He was terribly excited and angry," Ryan said quietly, not looking at her, "and he shouted, 'I'll stop you!' What else?"

Ellen glanced at George.

"Why, they were speaking both together—and so fast—" she began.

"What did he say that made you call out, 'Oh, no, Gibbs!' or 'Oh, don't, Gibbs'!" Ryan asked.

"He said something about a lie," Ellen stammered, "he said he would—



"Didn't He Say 'I'll Kill You If You Say That Again?'" Ryan Suggested.

he said his father was saying things that weren't so and that he would kill him if he went on—"

"I see!" Ryan said quietly, glancing toward the stenographer a moment. He paused, pursing his lips. "Well, go on. You said something about the sentimental attachment your husband had conceived for his stepmother. Did that worry you very much?"

"It made me unhappy, a little," Ellen said simply. "But I never thought anything was wrong. I told my father-in-law last night that there was nothing wrong," she added eagerly. "I told him that we would all forget it, and that he must not feel too badly about it."

"Tell us again what happened after your husband rushed out?" the district attorney said. She repeated her story, attempting to use the same language; she had quieted the old man, dined with him and her son, taken Tommy up to bed, come back to say good-night at about eight o'clock, and talked for an hour or more with Lizzie, and then sat reading until she retired at eleven. And she had then seen the study light shining on the corner of the house.

"So that your father-in-law was up at that time," Ryan said. "Now, then, you say you went to sleep. When were you awakened, and by what?"

"I waked up, and found my husband sitting by the fire," Ellen said. "It was two o'clock."

"It was two o'clock. And you and he had a talk?"

"No, we didn't talk. He said that he was going to leave the house in the morning, and I agreed. But we didn't say anything more."

"How did his manner impress you, Mrs. Josselyn?"

Ellen looked at George again.

"I thought he was still terribly shaken over his quarrel with his father," she said.

"He did seem shaken and excited?"

"Yes. I thought he did."

"You didn't tell him that you had quieted his father, and that you and the little boy had cheered him up so that he was quite himself at dinner?"

"No, sir."

"Why didn't you, Mrs. Josselyn?"

"Why, I thought—I thought he would be less troubled in the morning, and that I would try to—that I would talk to him then."

"You would try to—will you tell us what you started to say?"

"Well—I would try to—to reconcile them, I suppose."

Ryan took off his glasses and polished them with a large silk handkerchief, looking at them the while.

"That is, you thought that he was still angry rather than sorry?" he asked.

"No—I can't say that I thought that," Ellen said, attempting to speak firmly.

The glasses went on again and Ryan looked at her.

"You had good news for him, you know," he reminded her kindly. "You had to tell him that his father was sorry for the trouble and willing to forgive and forget. Wouldn't it be natural to suppose that such news would be welcome to a man who was bitterly repentant for his anger?"

"I suppose so," Ellen faltered.

"But that didn't occur to you? You felt that he was still too enraged to be approached in that way?"

Ellen felt suffocated. The close room, the watching faces, the quiet, merciless voice that probed her very soul, the dark walls with their dignified lining of books, the windows against which snow was beginning to fall softly, all began to waver in black fog before her eyes—she felt a hideous sensation of nausea.

George sprang to her side, and she caught his arm.

"You're all right, dear!" he said, tenderly, his eyes close to hers. She looked dazedly into them, and spoke in a childish bewildered voice:

"Yes, I'm all right, George!"

"Would you like to rest a few minutes, Ellen?"

"Oh, no, thank you!" she said quickly. And turning back with great dignity to the district attorney, she answered: "I thought I would not distress my husband with any reference to the matter that night. I thought sleep would do us all good, and make us see things in a better light."

"That was quite natural," Ryan said mildly. The tension in the library relaxed. "That is all, Mrs. Josselyn." Some of the men rose; there was a little stir and confusion in the room. Ellen went out with George. She turned to him in the hall.

"Was that all right?" she asked, giddy and uncertain. He nodded reassuringly. They went into the music room, where Gibbs sat, with Joe and Doctor Cutter. There was a tray there with some food on it, the coffee urn was steaming, and Ellen was glad to have a cup of coffee; it was two o'clock. She felt as if she could never get enough of the scalding, reviving drink, but she would not touch the solids, although Joe brought her cold chicken and salad on a plate, and coaxed her to eat.

George ate heartily, with great bites, walking about the while, and talking to them all. After a few minutes, however, he said he must go back to the library, and Gibbs went with him. Ellen had sat down close to her husband on the wide davenport, and put her cold little hand into his. He was pale, and looked tired, but there was a new look of peace in his eyes.

"Poor little old girl," he said to her. "I'll get you out of all this, and carry you off to the country somewhere—and make it all up to you!"

"Of course you understand that this is a sort of preliminary formality, Gibbs?" George asked him.

"And after this, does the coroner bring in his verdict?" Joe added.

"The coroner and the county detectives have been all over the study," George said. "The circumstance of the pistol being found seventeen feet away from the body, and some other details, are conclusive. Death came from a revolver shot that was fired by some person or persons unknown. Ryan is going at it thoroughly; that's his business. We've had all the maids in, they've all satisfied him of their absolute innocence. Every one of them has an alibi."

"Then, what's all this?" Ellen asked.

"This is merely one of the district attorney's duties of office. He is bound to find out what he can, while the whole matter is fresh." George put down his coffee cup and threw his crumpled napkin on the tray. "You understand that anything you say now may be used later, Gibbs?" he said, clearing his throat.

"Perfectly."

"They've pretty well satisfied themselves as to the order of events," George continued. "What they'll try to get out of you is that matter of where you were last night?"

"They asked Lizzie where she was, and they asked me!" Ellen said eagerly.

"They've asked everyone," George assured her.

"I can only tell them what I told you this morning, George," Gibbs said, calmly.

George shot him a look, but nodded as if he were satisfied.

"That's all right. Shall we go?"

They went off together.

Time wore slowly on. Ellen and Joe talked for awhile in low tones; the snow lisped against the windows of the little music room. Before three o'clock the first reporter appeared.

When Ellen went back to the music room Joe told her that Lillian had been fainting and that Doctor Cutter was with her.

"Did you know that she went off with that man Pepper for dinner last night, Ellen?" he asked.

"Last night!" Ellen echoed, amazed.

"Yes, it seems that she wanted to see Pepper, or he wanted to see her—she just used the Pointdexter invitation as a blind. They went off somewhere for dinner, the 'Wayside Inn,' it was, and then he took her to Mrs. Pointdexter's house, about twelve."

"How did you know this, Joe?"

"It's Lillian's alibi: she told Ryan the whole thing. Cutter was telling me. It seems that they were there until the place was actually closing, talking. Ryan has sent for the fellow who runs the Inn." Joe shook his head, half-smiled. "Gosh, she's lucky!" he ejaculated. "She's got a dozen people to prove what she did,; she wasn't even in the house herself—!"

"Joe!" Ellen said in a whisper, "where was Gibbs last night?"

"Oh, don't worry, Ellen—he can clear that up, easy enough! These things always sound scary, and then they all smooth right out—" Joe's tone brightened. "Well!" he said, "Ryan dragged in Mrs. Pointdexter, who came over here with Lillian. She had hysterics. Ryan told her that they'd have to have her testimony at the trial!"

"There'll be a trial, Joe?"

"I suppose so."

"But won't they have some one suspected, to try?"

"Yes, I suppose so."

Ellen began restlessly to pace the floor.

"Lillian and—that man—might have come here—in the night!" she said feverishly.

"They'll have to account for every second, old girl, you may be sure of that!"

"Or it might have been a burglar, Joe?"

"We-ll, they say not. They say that the study was lighted, which would warn any burglar. Then it was absolutely inaccesible by window; there was nothing of value there, and any man might have rifled the house without disturbing the study. But more than that, Mr. Josselyn was quietly seated in his chair, he had made no struggle, you know; he didn't even rise. Ryan made the point that he knew the man—or woman—who fired that pistol."

"He knew!" Ellen echoed, with white lips. She buried her face in her hands; her brother saw a violent shudder shake her whole body. Suddenly she looked up at the clock. "Four o'clock!" she said feverishly. "Why doesn't he come out?"

CHAPTER XIII

"Now we've been questioning the girls in the house, and your stepmother—and your wife," Ryan said, casually, arranging papers on the desk before him, and glancing now and then at Gibbs as he did so. "And I think if you will give us your version of this affair, Mr. Josselyn—?"

"Certainly!" Gibbs said, sitting back in his chair, and folding his arms. As Ellen had felt the unspoken friendliness in the air, so Gibbs was instantly aware of an antagonism; as Gibbs' Face Was White, and His Eyes Strained, Before the Quarrel Had Been Lived and Relived Again.

Ellen had seen that they sheltered and favored her in their questions, so Gibbs saw that he was not to be spared. The district attorney, who had sold papers and run errands for a living, twenty-five years ago, when little Gibbs Josselyn was riding his pony, and having his beautiful little suits made to order, was not apt to be over-gentle in his dealings with a rich man's son.

Gibbs' face was white, and his eyes strained, before the quarrel had been lived and relived again. He admitted his admiration of his father's wife, admitted that it had given his own wife and his father some concern, admitted that the matter had caused a strained relationship between the four. He did not glance at George; his eyes were fixed upon his interrogator.

Claim Columbus Landed on Island in Bahamas

The landing place of Christopher Columbus when he discovered America is on an island now known as Watling island. Watling island, in the Bahamas, is so called after one of the numerous intrepid British mariners who crossed the seas to acquire various lands and luxuries that did not naturally belong to them. Columbus, according to his journal as published by Las Casas, christened the island San Salvador immediately on landing, says the Detroit News.

The island was originally called Guanahani by the Arawak Indians, who inhabited it at the time of Columbus' discovery in 1492. The Arawaks are now extinct, except in certain parts of South America. They were not a fierce race, but pastoral people and fishermen at the time Columbus discovered them. The Caribs, who inhabited Jamaica, were cannibals, making continual war on their Arawak neighbors.

Whether San Salvador island was the actual landing place of Columbus has been disputed for many years, owing to confusing statements in the Las Casas journal. But American and British research has established the fact that San Salvador is entitled to the honor of being the first landing place, for examination of the topography of Watling and its neighboring isles established its identity through the testimony of no less than the discoverer, who described the island on which he landed.

Big Noise, Little Cause

The noise in the receiver of the telephone apparatus is made by the vibration of a diaphragm, but it is hard to conceive the minuteness of this vibration. A scientific person has recently undertaken to measure this agitation of the diaphragm and has arrived at the conclusion that it is no more than one thirty-fifth part of the millionth of an inch.

Anybody's Compass

If one floats a nail upon water its magnetism is sufficient to make it take a north-south direction like the compass needle. A nail of considerable length should be chosen and thrust through two bits of cork, one at either end, and then laid on water. At first it will be pulled about by the currents in the water, even when these are weak. But as soon as it comes to rest it will gradually take the north-south position, although one must often wait several minutes for the north-south direction to be assumed.

75% of disease avoided through internal cleanliness

WHEN you are constipated, poisons are formed in the accumulated food waste, and reach all parts of the body. The first results, headaches, biliousness, a feeling of "heaviness", etc., serve as warnings of graver diseases to follow if this intestinal poisoning continues unchecked.

This is why intestinal specialists state that constipation is the primary cause of three-quarters of all illness, including the gravest diseases of life.

Physicians Advise Lubrication for Internal Cleanliness

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste, and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless. Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

AN EPISODE

There's a doubtful story going the rounds to the effect that a stranger from Chicago with his brain befuddled because of over indulgence in moonshine, came into town the other evening and in looking for a place to sleep noticed that the door of a certain building was invitingly ajar and so without hesitation he passed through the door, hardly realizing what he was about and was soon snoozing in dreamland.

Shortly before daylight he awoke and gazing upward was surprised to see a row of golden lights glistening in the moonlight while on his left side there appeared a beautiful lake surrounded by marble pillars. Staring downward, he perceived cushions and more cushions and still more cushions, but before he had time to indulge in any more gazing a bearded man strode into his presence, whereupon the former in a weak frightened voice asked "Is this—is this Heaven?" "No" the bearded one replied with a laugh "This is not Heaven, but the interior of the Methodist church, instead"

Sunday Night Cinema

Last Sunday night at the Congl church the film "God's Friend" was shown to a large and appreciative audience. This picture is pronounced by those who saw it as one of the finest yet shown. Music was furnished by an orchestra composed of Clark Pierce, Fay Stevens, Howard Haskell, Edith Westcott and Arthur Holcomb. Two duets were sung "Abide with Me" and "Rock of Ages" by Mrs. Hunt and Mrs. Arthur Holcomb. Rev. Hunt is giving the people of this village some of the best films obtainable and they must realize that the cost is considerable, therefore it would be greatly appreciated if a better contribution was rendered. Surely no one wants to avoid the responsibility of helping the good cause along.

Sued for $5,000 Damages

Editor George A. Emerich of Pittsford is now in the lime light to the tune of $5,000 as suit for libel has been brought by Charles Teachout of the same place. We understand that Brother Emerich has refused to retract his statement which he made some time ago in regard to the character and social standing of Mr. Teachout who is a deputy sheriff and whose duty it is to arrest all citizens who refuse to pay their dog-goned dog tax.

It is claimed there are other characteristics mixed in the deal and there is no reason to believe the case will be settled soon.

K. K. K. propaganda and religious angles begin to shape themselves and it bespeaks considerable litigation.

FOR DAIRY COWS
THE LARROWE MILLING CO. DETROIT, MICH. U.S.A.

Did you ever stop to think that what you get in the milk pail you must first put into the feed box?

When production falls off it's easy to blame the cow. But she isn't a magician. She can't make something out of nothing.

A good cow, rightly fed, will pay for herself over and over, year in and year out.

But no cow, wrongly fed, will produce milk profitably for any length of time.

That's why it pays to feed Larro. Larro will produce more profit, dollar for dollar, than any other feed, however little you pay for it.

We can prove this by the actual experience of other dairymen, or by a test with your own cows.

Lad's Keen Eye for Fires

Charlie Williams, a twelve-year-old lad of Salida, Colo., has again distinguished himself in fighting forest fires.

In the summer of 1923 Charlie discovered a fire caused by a passing train on the Cochetopa National forest. His prompt work in notifying the forest service officers and his personal aid on the fire line brought forth a strong commendation from the late Henry C. Wallace, secretary of agriculture.

Recently Charlie was instrumental in checking another fire that had started in a dense stand of pine trees. His work was again commended by department officials.

Outstanding Features of the President's Message—More Economy Urged.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE'S message to congress, which resumed its work on December 1, is characteristic of the man. It calls for greater economy in government expenditures; recommends the further reduction of taxes, but not until after the close of the present year when it will be seen whether congress has kept within the budget; holds out the hope that his agricultural commission will be able to submit in time for action at this session some legislative remedies for the difficulties of the American farmer; voices emphatically the administration's disapproval of the pending security protocol of the League of Nations which would permit Japan or any other nation to attack the United States because of immigration restrictions; and says his own plans for a disarmament conference must await the outcome of the league's proposal to hold such a conference in connection with the agreement on the protocol. In this connection he observes that we shall have nothing to do with the league's conference so long as the adoption of that protocol is contemplated.

In discussing naval policies the President says our aim always should be the maintenance of the navy at the strength allowed by the Washington agreement, but that we should not engage in competitive building. In this section of the message Japan is informed that her protests against our fleet maneuvers in the vicinity of Hawaii next spring will be entirely ignored. But the President adds:

"I want the armed forces of America to be considered by all peoples not as enemies but as friends, as the contribution which is made by this country for the maintenance of the peace and security of the world."

American membership in the world court, with reservations, is again recommended, but the message says the country is not disposed to join the League of Nations. The war debts owed us by foreign nations, it declares, should be paid, the debtors being granted reasonable terms.

Concerning the disposition of Muscle Shoals the President says:

"I should favor a sale of this property, or long-time lease, under rigid guaranties of commercial nitrogen production at reasonable prices for agricultural use. There would be a surplus of power for many years over any possibility of its application to a developing manufacture of nitrogen. It may be found advantageous to dispose of the right to surplus power separately with such reservations as will allow its gradual withdrawal and application to nitrogen manufacture."

The interstate commerce commission, declares the message, should be empowered to apply pressure eventually on the railroads to bring about consolidation of the roads into a few great systems. The machinery for settling railroad labor disputes can be improved, but the requirements of the situation would be ignored if the public be deprived of a voice to avert a suspension of transportation by strikes.

Leaders in congress, both Republican and Democratic, approved the suggestion of the President that further reduction of taxes should be postponed until after the end of this fiscal year. His statement that surtaxes should then be substantially reduced was concurred in by Representative Green of Iowa, chairman of the ways and means committee. This is significant, for Mr. Green was one of the Republicans who opposed surtax reduction in the last session. It may be congress as a whole will yet admit the wisdom and practicability of the Mellon tax plan.

President Coolidge did not present his message in person. Instead it was read by the clerks of the senate and house, as was long the custom before President Wilson's time.

BEFORE sending in his regular message, the President transmitted to congress the annual message, with comments thereon. The budget figures show an estimated surplus for the fiscal year 1925 of $67,884,489 and for the fiscal year 1926 of $373,743,714. The estimates appear to show the possibility of a tax reduction of considerably more than $300,000,000 annually, effective in the next fiscal year, provided no new expenditures are incurred.

The estimates provide for more than $109,000,000 for federal aid to states prescribed by law. Mr. Coolidge comments:

"I am convinced that the broadening of this field of activity is detrimental both to federal and state governments. Efficiency of federal operations is impaired as their scope is unduly enlarged. Efficiency of state governments is impaired as they relinquish and turn over to the federal government responsibilities which are rightfully theirs. I am opposed to any expansion of these subsidies. My conviction is they can be curtailed with benefit to both the federal and state governments."

SECRETARY OF WAR WEEK'S annual report was even more dismal, from the viewpoint of national defense, than that of the secretary of the navy. It shows that the United States is unprepared to repel invasion, not only of its outposts but even of the mainland. It reveals that the regular army is deficient in strength, provision for training of the citizen army is rudimentary, the air force is primitive and its planes obsolescent, and the defenses of the Panama canal, the Hawaiian islands, and the coasts of continental United States are wholly inadequate.

POSTMASTER GENERAL NEW submitted to the senate an expert analysis of the costs of operating the postal service, in compliance with a resolution calling for information bearing on the proposed increase of salaries of postal employees. The rereport showed that a net loss of nearly $40,000,000 was sustained by the government in this service during 1923. More than one half of the excess of gross expenditures over receipts was found to be chargeable against second-class mail, including newspapers and magazines. Only first-class mail and postal savings were operated at a profit.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE and Mrs. Coolidge, traveling in an ordinary sleeper, made a flying visit to Chicago to attend the International Live Stock exposition. They were in the city only about 12 hours, in which time the President, besides viewing the fine stock, made two brief addresses at a luncheon and a dinner. Mrs. Coolidge was entertained by prominent Chicago women, but accompanied her husband to the stock yards for the exposition.

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY MELLON announces an issue of 20 to 30-year 4 per cent government bonds. The treasury offers $200,000,000 in the long-term securities, but will allot additional bonds to the amount that third Liberty bonds (4¼s), treasury notes of series A-1925, and certificates of indebtedness maturing March, 1925, are offered in payment. While the bonds are exempt from normal income taxation, only $5,000 face amount are exempt from the graduated additional income tax, commonly known as surtaxes, and excess profits and war profits taxes. The bonds are subject to estate and inheritance taxes. They are exempt from state and local taxation.

IF THE recommendations of the President and the desires of many leading congressmen are followed, the income tax publicity clause in the tax law will be repealed. Meanwhile the test cases are going against the government. In Kansas City Federal Judge Reeves quashed the indictments against the editor and managing editor of the Kansas City Journal-Post, holding that the act, as construed by the government in prohibiting the publication of tax lists by newspapers, was in violation of the first amendment to the Constitution, which provides for freedom of the press.

PLUTARCO CALLES was inaugurated President of Mexico, and next day he received Samuel Gompers and a large number of delegates from the American Federation of Labor who journeyed to Mexico City to attend the ceremony. One result of this visit, according to prominent Mexican politicians, will be to give a death blow to socialism and radicalism in that country. The radical leaders there have been creating a lot of trouble, the Russian minister doing his share, but they are now entirely discredited and organized labor in Mexico is said to be determined to rid itself of the Communists.

ESTHONIA'S government, which recently suppressed an attempt to seize Reval by Communists sent from Russia, is trying and executing the Reds as fast as the field courts can work. The plotters expected to be supported by the workers, but the latter proved loyal and helped to rout the Reds. To handle the situation more effectually, General Laidoner was made military dictator. Investigation of the affair compromises the local Soviet delegation seriously.

The Esthonian government received official assurances from Latvia and Poland that it would be supported by troops, if necessary, to combat Bolshevik aggressions. Both Latvia and Poland are increasing their garrisons along the Russian frontier. The Finnish government, the most conservative in northeastern Europe, is ready to offer help to Esthonia, should the Bolsheviks take the offensive.

PREMIER ZIWAR PASHA and the Egyptian government have yielded to all Great Britain's demands consequent on the murder of Sirdar Stack and Lord Allenby's forces have suppressed the mutiny of troops in the Sudan. So, for the present, the commotion in the land of the Nile is over. It is believed the stern measures taken by the British have paralyzed the group of malcontents in Cairo known as the "murder gang."

LEO KORETZ, the clever swindler who took about $2,000,000 from his friends in Chicago months ago and then fled, and who was discovered recently in Nova Scotia, was brought back home, pleaded guilty and received a prison sentence. He seems to have spent all the money he obtained and his victims, none of them poor, appear not to be vindictive.

SOVIET Russia has gone back to "wetness". The council of people's commissars has issued a decree permitting the manufacture and sale of liquors and cognac up to a strength of 30 per cent alcohol, which is only 5 per cent below the pre-war strength. This step is taken to increase the public revenues and to stop the illicit sale of alcohol.

CITIZENS of Peking were much worried by the withdrawal of Marshal Chang's forces and the gradual entry into the city of the troops of General Feng. It was believed Chang retired to avoid an armed conflict with the "Christian general." Wu Pei-fu, still busy toward the south, is reported to have blown up the Hankow-Peking railway bridge over the Yellow river, the longest bridge in China.

LEONID KRASSIN, the first ambassador of soviet Russia to France, arrived in Paris to take up his duties, and was given a noisy welcome by 5,000 Communists. Red flags were displayed and fiery speeches made and the "Internationale" was sung. One Communist deputy said: "The world revolution has at last reached Paris." The radicals in Paris had yet another opportunity for demonstration the other day, when the ashes of Jean Jaures, the slain Socialist leader, were transferred to the Pantheon.

THE Federal Council of Churches met in Atlanta, Ga., for its quadrennial convention, with Dr. Robert E. Speer of New York presiding. The report of the general secretary said there has been an increasing movement on the part of the churches to work together and to do the things which they cannot accomplish working alone. The spiritual significance of the work of the federal council was stressed.

Portuguese Capital Is Victim of "Red Terror"

Lisbon.—Lisbon has been the scene of so many bomb outrages during the last two months that the ravages are altering the appearance of the central part of the city. In the principal streets there are ruined shops and blackened piles of stone marking the scene of each explosion, while neighboring buildings show shattered windows and cracked walls.

It is all the work of Communists, and just at present the strikes of barbers and waiters afford them an excuse for this destruction.

The explosions occur almost nightly, and cafes, hotels and barber shops are the chief sufferers. Dynamite and nitroglycerin are used. The bombs are set off virtually under the eyes of the police. The criminals are seldom caught. Arrests by the police have brought retaliation in the form of assassination, and as a result the officers of the law are apathetic.

The activity of these agitators does not end with bomb explosions. To them is attributed by the public a recent series of railroad accidents, including a derailment in which there were 40 casualties.

In spite of the fact that a Lisbon crowd nearly lynched two alleged Communists the other day, arrested for exploding a bomb, the people of this city have grown to accept these outrages. There are places where it rains every day, they say, others where thunderstorms are frequent; in Lisbon there are daily bomb outrages.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Ypsilanti—The recent business of the local postoffice has increased 100 per cent over the average for the last 10 years, according to statements by Fred Cain, assistant postmaster, at a meeting of the local Rotary club.

His attendants say he has progressed favorably, but it is unlikely that he will be able to leave his sick bed for at least a month.

East Lansing—Michigan Agricultural College seed experts claim to have established a new world's record by sprouting seeds more than 150 years old. The seeds were dug from a peat bed in Manchuria. They apparently came from Manchurian water lily plants that bloomed between 150 and 400 years ago, and then were buried in the peat.

Grand Rapids—Opposition to promiscuous cutting of young evergreen trees for holiday use has been voiced by the Grand Rapids chapter of the Izaac Walton league. All members have been urged to discourage use of natural grown Christmas trees if any possibility exists that the cutting of such trees means depletion of forest growth.

Bad Axe—The safe which was practically wrecked by burglars when they robbed the postoffice here, has been opened by mechanics and postal officials and $20 000 in stamps and $1,500 in cash were found intact. The burglars used an acetylene torch to open the outer door but their efforts to open the inner compartment with the torch clogged up the mechanism of the safe.

Sangren, of the faculty of Western State Normal School, in collaboration with Dr. Clifford Woody, head of the research department of the school of education at the University of Michigan. The test is worked out to measure the child's ability to grasp word meaning and fact material, his rate of reading and comprehension of the total meaning

Permanent roads are a good investment —not an expense

The High Cost of Postponing Permanent Highway Building

Poor motor roads stifle industry and agriculture; waste huge sums annually in high maintenance costs, and greatly increase gasoline, tire and repair bills.

There is not a state, not a county, not a community, that isn't paying a heavy price for having too few permanent roads.

There are still many sections of the country—even whole states—that are trying to operate twentieth century traffic over nineteenth century roads.

This is costing millions of dollars every year, and will keep on costing millions until we have well developed permanent highway systems everywhere.

Even what we often call the more progressive communities are far behind the demands of modern highway traffic with its 16,000,000 motor vehicles.

From the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Canada to Mexico, we need more Concrete roads—the roads for twentieth century traffic.

Your highway officials want to be of the greatest possible service to you. Get behind them with ways and means that will provide more Concrete roads and streets. Such an investment will pay you big dividends year after year.

Evil Influence of Hope Diamond Again?

Again the sinister tentacles of ill luck have clutched within their grasp the former May Yohe, noted actress and once owner of the world-famous "blue diamond," better known as the Hope diamond.

Early the other day fire, thought to be of an incendiary origin, destroyed the Blue Diamond inn at Marlow, N. H., owned by May Yohe and her husband, Capt. John Smuts. The snug little wayside house, one of the oldest properties in the town, was purchased by the adventurous music-hall star about a year ago and made over into a summer home and tea room.

Villagers of the little town who had only a gew hours before cast their 125 votes for President were unaware of the fire until a passing motorist stopped and roused them to action.

Ever since May Yohe has been associated with the famous gem one misfortune after another has followed and, as in the case of her accident in New York city two years ago, the baleful influence of the gem is blamed.

STRENGTH IN RESERVE

Nation's Financial Resources Mobilized for General Good When Need Comes.

There are more than thirty thousand banks in the United States, largely owned by residents of the cities, towns and villages in which they operate. They receive deposits of coin, currency or credits for the current use of business and for safekeeping, and they loan out these funds at interest to proper and profitable business enterprises, agricultural, industrial or commercial, always bearing in mind the necessity of having on hand, or quickly available, sufficient funds to meet the demands of such customers as desire to make withdrawals.

To meet the demands of such customers and others upon the funds in their care bankers must maintain reserves—in their vaults, on deposit with other banks, invested in securities which command a ready market, or it may be in the form of call loans, payment of which they can demand at will.

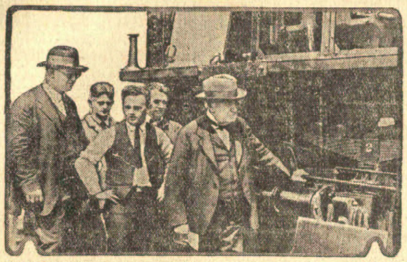
Before the establishment of the Federal Reserve System—in 1907, in 1896, in 1873 and many times before—the banks of the nation were unable to assist each other when panic threatened. There was no provision for effective leadership, and co-operative action was out of the question. Bank reserves, carried with other banks which were no less embarrassed, were least available when they were needed most.

Every country bank had reserves in one or more of the larger cities in its section as well as in the great centers of population, and since the correspondent banks paid interest on such deposits they were compelled to loan them out, usually at call. Whenever panic or the growing fear of it led any bank to draw upon its reserves—and panic usually led every bank to do so—the correspondent, in order to meet such demands, was compelled to withdraw the money from active service and the thousands of such withdrawals, aggregating many millions of dollars, only made the general situation worse by restricting essential business operations and in many cases compelling the sale of securities, perhaps at grievous loss.

The direct result in more than one instance was a complete breakdown of the country's banking machinery and a prolonged period of resultant depression in industry and commerce.

The great achievement of the Federal Reserve System has been the massing of the nation's monetary armies. By this means it has rendered financial panic impossible in America and has eliminated the worst features of business depression.

"Electricity Transportation of Future," Declares Edison



CHICAGO.—"The white coal age is at hand." This is the statement made by Thomas Alva Edison after inspecting the giant electric locomotive of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad which has just completed a three-months' tour of thirty-nine American cities.

"This is the transportation of the future," the Wizard of Menlo Park declared as he patted the side of the modern colossus of the rails. "It is an indication of what is being done, and what can be done with the marvel of white coal. Some day not only railroad trains but every automotive vehicle—trucks and passenger cars, too—will be propelled by electricity. Its powers and uses are still but little known."

Mr. Edison was one of the 400,000 enthusiastic visitors who were shown through and initiated into the mysteries of the electric locomotive on its demonstration tour. Four expert technicians were stationed at different locations inside its huge body, and the only question which baffled them was the query of a small boy, who demanded to know the exact number of nuts and bolts used in its construction.

The locomotive chosen for the tour was one which already had seen 300,000 miles of mountain running in the Cascade Range. Only once during the tour did it move under its own power after leaving its own lines, and it had to submit to the ignominy of being towed by steam locomotives, any of which it could easily vanquish in a tug-of-war. At Erie, Pa., the electrical giant was given opportunity to prove its strength in just such a test. Here the East Erie Commercial railroad maintains an electrical test track, and to this stretch a powerful steam locomotive was brought, puffing and fretting at the challenge. But the result was as always: the "Milwaukee's" white coal-eater pulled the steam mogul backward.

"What does a fireman do on one of these locomotives?" This, according to the experts, was probably the most frequent question. It was pointed out that his job has become much simpler—a little oiling now and then, with most of his attention directed toward the oil burners which heat the water and steam for the comfort of passengers.

Speeds of 60 to 65 miles an hour are not unusual, it was explained. One of its greatest feats is the drawing of a 1,000-ton train up a 2 per cent grade at a speed of 25 miles an hour, whereas with steam power, the expert said, the same grade requires two locomotives in summer and three in winter, with a maximum speed under such conditions of 15 miles an hour.

The average electric locomotive costs $200,000, and requires between 19 and 21 months to design and build, but with quantity production officials said, this time could be cut down to 15 days. Fifty years' service is not too much to expect from an electric locomotive, although, it was said, nobody knows just how long one will last. The oldest one in service belongs to the General Electric Company, which built it thirty years ago.

Mountain waterfalls in the West supply the power which generates the electricity. One interesting fact brought out was the system of electrical braking. Going down-grade through mountain country, the "Milwaukee" locomotives use little or no power at all, but on the contrary a unique regenerative system creates new power and supplies it to the line. The final effect is that two electrical trains going down hill generate enough power to pull one train up hill.

Adams Township is Diseased

Dr. W. H. Beck of the United States Department of Agriculture and O. J. Weistner, poultry extension specialist of the Michigan Agricultural College, have already commenced operations in Adams township to cull the poulry and tattoo the hogs so that packers at Chicago and Buffalo who buy the product of this county can tell just where the tuberculosed stock comes from. Hogs coming from this county to the packers are found to be 22 per cent tuberculosed and an effort is being made to get the average much lower. Ten per cent premium is offered by the packers for stock shipped that is reasonably free from tuberculosis and a determined effort is being made to get under that head.

It is claimed by experts that chickens are responsible for the spreading of tuberculosis in hogs, and the specialists also desire to raise the standard of poultry flocks in the county, and to this end the culling process will be carried on. In flocks where the culls are taken away, the laying average is much higher and there is every reason to want it done.

DECEMBER 1.

Trust In The Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding.—Proverbs 3:5.

The collection of taxes for Adams township will begin in a few days. The Advocate has just finished the tax receipts and we do not remember of ever having seen one so large. The entire receipt including both stubs measures 27 inches in length and contains 17 different and distinct taxes to be paid this year. We are publishing this so as to gradually accustom the public to the shock but we expect when the actual amount is known, there will be several sudden deaths.

By defeating Albion College last week 26 to 5 the Western State Normal football team of Kalamazoo closed its season regarded as one of the most powerful normal college events in the Middle West The team has previously defeated Bowling Green, Kentucky, and Oshkosh, Wisconsin, teachers college champions of their states 11 to 0 and 23 to 6, respectively, and the victory over Albion clinched its claim to title to Michigan. Albion having defeated both MtPleasant and Ypsilanti Normals. Kalamazoo Normal was coached this year by Earl Martineau, famous all American half back of Minnesota.

Hillsdale county has 291.5 miles of improved roads—county roads 202 miles and trunk lines 89.5 according to the report of the county highway commissioners. The cost of the upkeep per mile of the trunk or state road for the year ending October 1 was $222.72, the county roads costing $162.13, the difference seems to be in the number of vehicles passing over the road. Last July the county commissioners began a count of the vehicles passing over the roads in order to determine the ones that quickly deteriorates the road beds and to determine the best kind of construction for traffic.

Michigan Has a Big Program of Paving For 1925

We are promised a pavement on M-23 next year clear through to the Indiana line and if this program is carried out there won't be much travel down through that section next summer although the paving nowadays is a short operation compared to what it was five years ago. The great cencrete pourers used on this work build like lightning. Groesbeck has his program worked out for 1925 roads employing convict labor, and it is not going to cost the state of Michigan one-half so much as by the old graft system of letting the contract. Added to the road system is the great interstate electric companies reaching out and grabbing every available water power so that in a period of five years there won't be a cross roads store, hamlet or residence on a farm in this whole state which cannot hook on to the electric lines and enjoy the conveniences formerly thought only possible to city dwellers. When this program is complete you can look for an exodus to the country of millions of shut-ins, men and women who never before in their existence breathed the free air of miles of open country, swept clean scrubbed and garnished by acres of lakes and rivers. The whole business means the emancipation of the city dweller and better conditions for all of us. Keeping pace with it is the annual expenditure in dollars and cents of the nation at large. In 1893 the American people spent $1,000 perminute for candy and ice cream or $1,700,000 per day and municipal taxes are going to mount up the same way. The only difficulty which this community will have to cope with will be the expense of taxes for public improvements. The question naturally arises will property stand such a stiff taxation? If it will not then how will we come out? This is the one gloomy feature of every day life At present there is no relief in sight for the tremendous taxation and the farms in many communities must of necessity pass into the hands of a few money loaners and banks which will cause a crisis similar to what England is up against—viz a control of the rural communities by the moneyed class.

Another County Gets Dairy Alfalfa Drive

Oakland county is to have a special Dairy Alfalfa campaign from Dec. 15 to 19, according to announcement made here by M. A. C. extension men this week. It will be the ninth county in the state to schedule to campaign work this year.

Two teams of specialists from the college will hold 30 meetings in the county during the week, increased alfalfa acreages and better dairy practices being the aims of the drive. The local farm bureau is handling detailed arrangements of the itinerary.

Seven Counties Have Poultry School Work

Special two day poultry schools planned to consider production and disease control problems, have been scheduled in seven Michigan counties by the M. A. C. for the month of December.

J. A. Hannah, specialist from the college poultry department, and Dr. H. J. Stafseth, of the M. A. C. veterinary division, will conduct the work of schools, which will follow regular "classroom" hours and schedules. Mr. Hannah will discuss culling, poultry house construction, incubation, brooding and feeding problems; while Dr. Stafseth is scheduled to take up various disease control questions of interest to the poultry raiser.

That the schools will be continued in many other sections of the state is indicated by college extension authorities. Any section which will sign up at least 40 poultry raisers to attend the school is eligible for the schedule.

The counties listed in the announced itinerary are as follows: Menominee, Stephenson Dec, 8 9 Gogebic, Ironwood Dec. 5 6 Delta Escanba Dec. 8 9 Muskegon, Muskegon Dec. 12 13; Allegan, Allegan Dec, 16 17; Washtenaw, Ypsilanti Dec. 19 20; and Shiawassee, Owosso, Dec. 22 23.

The Peppermint Industry

Almost three fourths of all the mint oil produced in the United States and practically half of the entire world's output is produced in about a score of counties in Northern Indiana and Southern Michigan, according to a statement issued by the Sears Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. The muck soils in this part of the state and an especially favorable climate make the production of this crop particularly profitable.

Non acid fields, plowed in the fall or early spring, disced, dragged and harrowed, produce the best crops and the judicious application of fertilizer for soil deficiencies is generally profitable. It is very essential that all fields be kept free of weeds because these, beside interfering with the growth of the mint, also result in an inferior quality of oil when distilled with the mint.

Following the harvesting and curing, in which the process is very similar to that of hay making, the mint still is brought into operation and the mint hay put through the process of separating the mint oil from the water. The yield of oil differs with the season and the field, but the average annual yield is about forty pounds during the life of the field. After the distillation of the hay it can again be cured andused for feed in value of which it equals timothy but is considerably less in money value.

The value of mint will flucfuate greatly but two dollars per pound is the average generally obtained. It is principally used in the flavoring of candy, chewing gum and cosmetics, although a considerable quantity is used for medical purposes, the Foundation statement concludes.

PROBATE ORDER

STATE OF MICHIGAN The Probate court for the county of Hillsdale. At a session of said Court, held at the Probate Office in the City of Hillsdale in said County, on the 20, day of November A. D. 1924.

Present Hon. Arthur L. Guernsey. Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of George Mayo, Incompetent, Giles Stevens Guardian, having filed in said court his final administration account, and his petition praying for the allowance thereof and for the assignment and distribution of the residue of said estate, the said ward being now deceased.

WORK OF ORGANIZED BANKING TO PROMOTE BETTER FARMING

By D. H. OTIS

Agricultural Director American Bankers Association.

D. H. Otis

The Agricultural Commission of the American Bankers Association has adopted and encourages the following general projects in its national program:

1. Boys and girls club work.
2. Diversified farming.
3. Increased appropriations for agricultural research.

With the state bankers' associations, the agricultural colleges and hosts of farmers' organizations uniting in all parts of the country, the Commission has held conferences in forty-seven states. The different individual projects approved number 195. Plans are now under way for follow-up work in making these programs effective.

These banker-farmer conferences have resulted not only in definite programs, but they have been the means of greatly increasing interest on the part of bankers. At the beginning there were a number of states that had no agricultural committees. Others were inactive. We now have agricultural committees for each state with the exception of two, and these have promised to appoint committees soon.

Banker Influence

The attitude of the bankers is not that of attempting to tell the farmers how to farm, but rather to aid in bringing about conditions that will help the farmer to help himself. The farmer who produces, the agricultural college that is attempting to improve the quality of farm products, and the banker who furnishes the capital are endeavoring to put their heads together and perform team work. A representative of one of the colleges of agriculture recently made the statement that the bankers could do more than the colleges for the advancement of agriculture. The banker is in position to influence the type of agriculture practiced by the farmer patrons. A county agent comes in contact with only 15 to 20 per cent of the farmers of his county, while the bankers come in contact with at least 75 per cent.

In some localities farmers seem to be prejudiced against bankers, due largely to misunderstanding. There is no better way for relieving this strained relationship than by getting the banker and farmer pulling together for their mutual interests and for the community.

If agriculture is to develop it is necessary to maintain on the soil men and women who will put as much intelligence into their business as is put into other lines of business. It is hard to change the attitude of mind of an old farmer. The great hope is in developing boys and girls into men and women who will be interested in improving the conditions on our farms. Out of forty-seven programs adopted at the banker-farmer conferences, thirty-six included boys' and girls' club work as one of their leading projects.

Farm Accounting

A large number of bankers are recognizing the importance of inventories, financial statements and farm accounts and are encouraging the keeping of records among their farmer patrons. Not a few insist on a financial statement from the farmer before making a loan, just as is required of other business men. Such a statement not only acquaints the banker with the financial status of the farmer but also brings the farmer face to face with conditions on his farm and calls attention to opportunities for improvement.

In many states county bankers' associations are being organized with agricultural committees. In New Jersey every county is thus organized. Ohio has a representative of the agricultural committee in every county in the state. Wisconsin has added thirteen agricultural committees to its county organizations. In Arkansas educational trains have been run in cooperation with the railroads, the College of Agriculture, and others for stimulating interests in better farming methods. In Oregon the Bankers Association employs a field secretary to devote his entire time to carrying on educational and agricultural programs. In Kentucky special plans have been developed for coordinating the various organizations interested in agricultural development. Key men, bankers, have been appointed in sixty-five counties. An annual income of $6,000 is provided and field secretary employed.

It will be seen that the efforts of the Agricultural Commission and the committees of the various states, in cooperation with the colleges of agriculture, have been to formulate workable programs. The field for work appears unlimited. The spirit of the bankers and the colleges is superb and effective results will be accomplished.

WHY BANKS?

LESSON XII

By J. H. PUELICHER, Chairman
Public Education Commission, American Bankers Association

What is a Trust Company? Technically defined it is a bank that specializes in investment and fiduciary services in addition to general banking services. Humanly speaking, it is what its name implies—a place of trust.

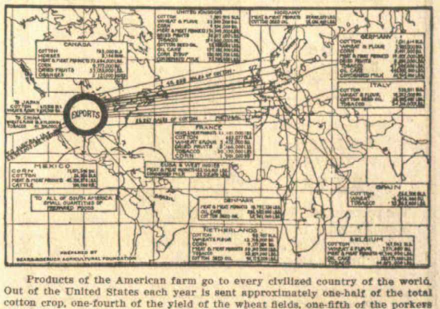
J. H. Puelicher

INVESTMENT—lending money for income or profit to business and governments to "carry on." Such lending is often done through the purchase by investors of bonds selected by a bank or a trust company as safe and desirable.

FIDUCIARY—held in trust and confidence. For example, a trustee holds a man's estate for the benefit of his widow or children, cares for it faithfully, invests it prudently and uses it for their welfare in accordance with his wishes.

TRUST COMPANIES are able to fulfill these functions because of their experience in investments, because of their trained officers, and because of their continuous existence while an individual often knows nothing of investments, usually lacks experience and training, and may die during the life of the trust.

Where U. S. Farm Products Go



Products of the American farm go to every civilized country of the world. Out of the United States each year is sent approximately one-half of the total cotton crop, one-fourth of the yield of the wheat fields, one-fifth of the porkers and huge quantities of corn and tobacco, dried fruits and other products of field and feed lot.

The accompanying chart, prepared by the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, shows where the principal exports go.

In the United Kingdom more of America's farm exports are consumed than in any other nation. The United Kingdom uses more American cotton than any other country, her annual consumption averaging around 1,580,916 bales. Germany is in the market for almost as much cotton, using 1,011,614 pounds last year. The United Kingdom is the first market for American wheat and flour, tobacco, corn sirup and condensed milk. She also takes large quantities of dried fruits, oil cake, meat, meat products and corn.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

Join A Minority

So today the hope of the world lies in youth lining up with the minority. determined to bring about transforming changes in the world. There are three great issues in our life today, on which we must either take our stand with a contented, unthinking majority, or with an ardent, impassioned minority.

The first is the issue of God against materialism. Shall we take our stand with the minority who believe in and follow a spiritual ideal of life, or with the coarse careless and overfed majority who find the whole of life in the material gratification of the senses? Shall we care more about comfort than about justice? Shall we care more about the development of our stomachs or of our minds? Shall civilization mean to us the multiplication of pleasures and conveniences or shall it mean the democratic brotherhood in which increasingly all men shall come into their human rights?

The second great issue that of Christian industry against an old order. More and more are people coming to realize that a large part of our industrial system today is frankly pagan, or at best semi pagan. It is founded on the old predatory ideal of every man capturing for himself all the benefits he can make, with little regard for the social responsibility of industry. There is a minority now a small one to be sure, but an active one which seeks nothing less than the reorganization of our industrial system on the basis of service and brotherhood rather than benefits and autocracy.

Will you join that minority and throw the force of your life into what, please God, will be the great Christian movement of our time?

The third great issue is that of a warless world against one filled with war. This is a commanding issue of our time. How deeply have we felt it personally? Are we content to do nothing until it is too late and then wring our hands helplessly and say, "Isn't war terrible!"

Are we willing to join the minority which is ready to sacrifice its ancient prejudices and partisanships and sacrifice even its provincial, nationalistic egotism which masqueraded under the name of conventional patriotism?

Only as we do this shall we take our place among those who are shaping the movements which will dominate the future days.—Classmate.

Resolutions Adopted By The Jubilee Convention

PREAMBLE

We, the members of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, assembled to celebrate and hallow the jubilee anniversary of the organization, reverently declare anew our allegiance to God—"Our help in ages past, our hope in years to come"—and reconsecrate ourselves, under his leadership, to the greater task ahead."

TOTAL ABSTINENCE

In our first half century, while the liquor traffic was entrenched in law, our leaders stressed total abstinence. Now that the liquor traffic has no legal standing we will emphasize the fact that the practice of total abstinence is the observance of law.

LAW ENFORCEMENT

We call to the attention of all public officials that their oath of office entails upon them the enforcement of the Eigtheenth Amendment as well as other laws and pledge them our support in all efforts to this end.

We urge heavier penalties and more stringent enforcement of the Volstead Act as the most effective method of dealing with violations of prohibition laws.

CITIZENSHIP

Realizing the sacred duty of citizenship and the necessity for its manifestation by all citizens during the entire year, we urge that the members of our organization continue to study the structure of government, the duties of citizens and their relation to law enforcement to the end that they may become in very truth part of the government.

YOUNG PEOPLE

Whereas the retention of the Prohibition Law and the future of the nation depend upon the youth of today we urge special effort to enlist and train the young people and children.

EDUCATION

For the better safeguarding of youth by education, we urge textbook authors and publishers to include in school-texts on health not only accurate but adequate information as to the nature and effects of alcohol, tobacco and all other habit forming drugs. We ask that state and local school courses of study include a more adeqnate proportion of specific and graded topics on these subjects to guide teachers in the essential facts to be taught.

We must emphasize educational work among Negroes, promoting in every possible way their understanding and appreciation of our laws and institutions.

Michigan Produces Perfect Specimen

Coe Emens Jr., of Prattville the prize winner of Michigan was adjudged the best and most perfect specimen of the human family. He is 17 years of age and scored 99.4 per cent at the children's contest at Chicago International Live Stock Show. A few years ago it was the much-touted theory that live stock must be bred up to the standard if it should be a winner, and the science has been extended to the human family. We are glad to note that prizes are being offered for the most perfect measurements and tremendously pleased that old Tuebor Peninsulatim Michigan has the honor of being the birthplace of the best proportioned young man in the United States. It has been the theme for generations—and will continue to be our pride that though we specialize in fruits and the lowly spud, we have yet another product which stands preeminent in the building of a commonwealth — sturdy young manhood that makes for better citizenship.

Its too bad our womanhood fell short of the goal and the plum had to go to Mississippi, whose daughter Inez Harden, carried off the prize. It is more than likely that high heels, rouge, cigarets and late hours have robbed our girls of a certain amount of their womanhood

We know very little of Emens' specifications but we'll wager he never smoked a "coffin tack" that he naver drank any "moonshine" that he never made a practice of frequenting the pool rooms and poisoning his mind with foul stories, and his lungs with second hand tobacco fumes, that he never went to a dancing party and chased the fleeting hours with tinkling feet until 2:00 a. m. dancing bunny hugs foxy trots with a girl whose dress was abbreviated above and below, then spent the remaining hours until morning in the car, that he never consorted with the bawdy young thing who calls herself a "flapper," and carries germs in her system that might damn a young man for eternity, that he may have indulged in a reasonable amount of athletics including Dad's woodpile, without being a "fiend" and rupturing his heart,—and yet after all—it's funny how he got there, aint it boys?

Johnson Discusses the Housing Situation

Grand Rapids Dec. 8, 1924

Editor of the Advocate:—
North Adams

Dear Sir: Today I got $10,000 I didn't earn. So others will have to earn $10.000 they will not get.

Twelve years ago in the village of Clawson, Michigan a corner lot sold for $2500. Then Ford workers and others settled around that corner, increasing its land value. Eight years ago I bought that corner for $8,500 and moved an old building on to it. This I rented to a druggist who has paid the expense of my holding that corner ever since. Then still others moved to that corner increasing the land value still more. To-day I sold the property to the druggist for $20,000 That lot as a lot, is not worth a dollar more than when I bought it, but the people who live around give it value. I sold the druggist the people, not the lot The man I bought it of profited $6,000 and my rake-off was $10,000 so that the druggist has 16 thousand iuvested that we got and he will have to charge it up on things he sells. Ford thought the druggist was overcharging, so he put in a stock of drugs to sell to his workers. He does not see what increasing land values are doing to his workers. If tomorrow it should be announced that Ford were again to increase the wages of his men, land values would jump up still more and take it away from them. Ford cannot see the joke.

The lot I sold is about 14 miles out of Detroit. Now look at the increased land values in Detroit. Say they are only one billion dollars; this means that employed capital and labor in Detroit will have to earn at least one million a week that it will not get. Increased land values are paid for in interest and higher rents and charged up whether you buy prunes, congh syrup or get a tooth pulled. Manufacturers associations and labor organizations are still cave men. They want to take something away from one another and as yet haven't one bit of economic sense. They are so near sighted that they do not realize that increasing land values are getting a big part of their earnings

Single tax would untax improvements created by unemployed capital and labor and instead tax vacant lots the same as lots in use.

It would not untax improvements on a lot but would base its value on the number of people around that lot. That is called location value and would make holding idle lots unprofiable and throw them on the market. If we were operating under single tax, that druggist could probably have bought that corner for $2000 instead of $20,000 and workers could buy a lot for $50 instead of $1500. Increased land values not only increase the price of lots but the cost is added to everything we buy

Today it takes at least $7,000 to buy a humble home and furnishings. What chance is there for young people of marriageable age? We can build a church on every corner but unless we elders learn to look through the eyes of youth and recognize their predicament, churches and all will go to the devil.

We older folks have yet to learn that it takes backbone to be religious and face sin in its den. We claim to believe that God made man in his image. Yet birds have the privilege of building a nest in any place not in use while man has to pay tribute to land speculators. Let's stop whining. Is it not sacrilegious for intelligent men and women to pray "Thy Kingdom Come, Thy Will Be Done on as it is in Heaven" and then nto know what our present system of taxation is doing to us? We might as well pray for ice cream sodas in hell."

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON BEING A SMALL INVESTOR

"It seems to me, Aunt Emmy," said Jane, "that it is rather silly for us to be talking about investments when all we can save is about $500 a year after all our expenses and life insurance are paid."

"You're wrong there. If you save $500 a year you are doing very well indeed, and remember that the insurance you speak of is in the nature of an investment itself."

"Well, I know, Aunty, but somehow investments always seem to mean dealing in lots of money, thousands and thousands of dollars. There certainly can't be many good securities which people with so little money as we have could buy."

"Indeed, there are a number of good investments for the small investor," said Aunt Emmy. "Even if you could only set aside five or ten dollars a month you can be sure of one investment that you can safely make on your own responsibility and that is putting your money in a savings bank, the safest and most conservative way of making it work for you. Even though the interest will be moderate, you will feel safe. Then there are other securities you can buy, but don't buy any before getting sound advice from some trust company or bank. These investments are real estate mortgages, industrial corporation securities, public utility corporation securities, government securities—any one of these securities may be bought on the installment plan. You may pay as little as five dollars a month for them or as much as you want to invest.

"Of course you can never be actually positive that an investment will turn out well. Human affairs are uncertain at best. When you invest money, what you really do is entrust your money to business men to use in a paying business. If your bank gives a good account of the corporation whose securities you desire to buy you are comparatively safe. But never use a cent of your capital for speculation. No matter who comes to you and tells you that a certain stock is going up, that it is a sure thing, don't speculate on it. Speculating in stocks is not for our kind. You'd never believe it but

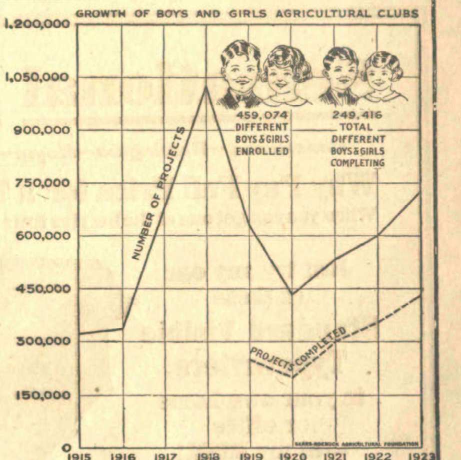
Junior Farmers Need Club Leaders



That club leadership must be increased properly to train the boys and girls of the nation who decide to remain on farms and become the bulwark of American agriculture is shown in a survey of the club work of the junior farmers just completed by Benjamin H. Darrow, director of the boys' and girls' club work of the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation.

According to the report of the Foundation, based on a count by the Department of Agriculture, 722,408 projects were begun in 1923 by 459,074 boys and girls, a number which is less than 6 per cent of the farm youth of the nation of club age. Of these projects 429,746 were completed by 249,416 club members. Girls completing their work outnumber the boys three to two, there being 150,194 girls and 99,222 boys. The report also indicates that 55.6 per cent of the enrolled girls finished their projects, while only 52.9 per cent of the boys completed theirs. The high point reached in 1918, as shown by the accompanying chart, was due to the expansion of club work in connection with the slogan of the day: "Food will win the war." After the crisis was over there was retrenchment and club work suffered.

"Many of the 8,000,000 boys and girls engaged in club work hope to leave the farm," said Darrow, "but 80 per cent of them will remain in the country, experience has shown. All who stay on the farm should have the benefit of the inspiration and training club work affords. If we are to provide this for the junior farmers of the nation, we must rapidly increase the number of county club leaders."

"So that we finally have these facts to go on," Ryan summarized. "You and your father quarrel about your relationship with this lady, your father strikes you, and you threaten to kill him. You leave the house in anger, and—I beg your pardon?"

"I say that what I said could not be construed into a threat to kill him," Gibbs protested.

"You mean that you phrased it. 'I'll kill you if you say that again'?"

"Yes. I—I don't think that is quite the same thing. One might be a threat, Mr. Ryan, and the other more of a—well, more of a boast, or of a—a silencer that should prove effective," George interposed mildly.

"I see," Ryan said dryly. "Well!" he resumed, after a pause, "you leave the house in anger, and on foot. A few hours later, presumably between the hours of nine and ten o'clock, somebody familiar with this house enters the room your father is sitting in; does not alarm him enough to cause him to leave his seat; goes to the table-drawer where he keeps his pistol; takes it out, and deliberately kills him. Afterward throwing the pistol into a basket seventeen feet away. We've cross-questioned the maids, but you can easily see that no servant could do that without instantly alarming him. More than that, he disliked their coming and going, and would have questioned any one who came in. We know that pistol was in the drawer, because your wife saw it there, as late as yesterday morning, in the hands of the girl, Lizzie. Lizzie was talking with your wife at her fire until after ten o'clock, undresses and goes to bed, opening the communicating door between the bathroom and bedrooms—you know what they were talking of, and why that girl had nothing in her mind last night but her own happiness! Mrs. Josselyn then sits on by the fire, sees that Lizzie is asleep, goes to bed herself, and sleeps until you awaken her, in what she describes as an excited condition, at two o'clock. Those facts we have. Now perhaps you'll tell us just where you were last night between the hours of eleven minutes past six and two o'clock."

"I'll tell you as well as I can," Gibbs said simply. "I went first to the club where I sat in the little smoking room for a long time—more than an hour. Gettling, the steward there, came and touched me on the arm, and said that it was nearly eight o'clock, and asked me to dine."

"You had had nothing to eat?"

"Nothing."

"Nor to drink?"

"Yes, I had had a whisky-and-soda when I went in, and then later another."

"Ah! And did you drink with you dinner? Go on, please, just as the events transpired."

"I had two cocktails before my dinner; I was still upset from the talk with my father—"

"The quarrel?"

"The quarrel, yes. I didn't eat—much. I may have eaten something, but I am not sure. I went out—"

"What time was this?"

"Nine o'clock, I should say. Gettling would remember that, because he followed me out to ask me something about the hunt breakfast on Thanksgiving."

"Will you get hold of him?" Ryan asked one of his men in an undertone. There was a moment's interruption and murmuring. Then Ryan said: "Excuse me. Will you go on?"

"After that I started walking, without thinking much where I was going," Gibbs said. "It was dark, but not very cold. I walked a long way, and then I saw the lights of the 'Wayside Inn.' We'd been there before, last summer. I went up on the porch, and stood there, looking in."

"Why didn't you go straight in, Mr. Josselyn?"

"I don't know. I think I wasn't sure that I wanted to go in."

"You walk—what is it—something more than eight miles, in the dark," commented the district attorney, "and then you vacillate about going in?"

"I remember thinking that I was hungry," Gibbs went on. "But they were dancing in there, and I didn't feel much like getting into a dance."

"But you did go in?"

"No. I didn't. While I was standing there I recognized—I recognized—friends—at a little table right near the window—"

"Friends? Who were these friends, Mr. Josselyn?"

"That I'd rather not say, really," Gibbs said, in his old autocratic manner.

"We've had Lillian's story, Gibbs," George said, in a low tone. Gibbs gave him a quick, startled look; the blood mounted to his face.

"You saw Mrs. Josselyn and her lover, eh?" said Ryan.

George saw the muscles of Gibbs' jaw suddenly tighten.

"I object to that term," he said quietly.

"We needn't mince words," Ryan said sharply, his eyes narrowing. "Go on with your story. You went into the bar?"

"I did not go in at all," Gibbs reiterated.

"But somebody saw you there?"

"Not that I know of."

"And nobody saw you on your way there?"

"Not that I know of."

"You turned around, and walked back?"

"I turned around, and walked back."

"Reaching home—"

"Reaching home at about one o'clock, I think. I sat by the fire in my wife's bedroom for awhile, and she woke me up. We had a short conversation, and I told her that I proposed to leave my father's house the next morning. Then I went to bed."

"One moment, Mr. Josselyn. On that walk back—a long walk, you know, for a man alone in the dark, you must have passed through several villages. Didn't it occur to you to stop somewhere else for food?"

"I don't remember thinking of food."

"Yet you thought of food when you reached the 'Wayside Inn'?"

Gibbs was silent.

"How do you account for the fact that you did that?"

"I changed my mind, I suppose."

"Exactly. You changed your mind. But do you know what caused you to change your mind?"

Again Gibbs did not speak.

"I could believe that to a man in your excited condition the mere sight of the woman he loved dining there with another man might cause a decided change of mind," the district attorney said, thoughtfully, making a series of hard little marks with his pencil on the blotter before him, and finally raising his head to look Gibbs straight in the eyes. "But I wish, for your own sake, Mr. Josselyn, that you could find some one to confirm this rather extraordinary story. Eight miles," he added, musingly; "well, a man in condition might walk that far, and decide not to eat anything, and walk back—I used to walk once myself, a good deal. But—" He pursed his lips and elevated his eyebrows with the shadow of a shrug. "One more thing," he asked, in a dead silence. "You did not tell your wife last night what you had seen?"

"That I had seen my father's wife dining with Pepper? No."

"Why didn't you tell her, Mr. Josselyn?"

"Why—it did not occur to me to do so. I never have discussed the matter with her."

"Tell me just what you mean by 'the matter'?"

"The—the—anything that concerned my stepmother, I suppose."

"You quarrel with your father, threaten to kill him, leave his house, over this very man, and then do not consider this fresh evidence of Mrs. Thomas Josselyn's relationship with Pepper of sufficient importance to tell your wife? Didn't it occur to you that here was an absolute refutation of your father's suspicions; suspicions that you knew were shared by your wife?"

"No, I don't remember thinking that," Gibbs asserted doggedly.

"You didn't say to yourself: 'Here is an excuse for me—and more than an excuse!' You didn't say 'my dear, to show you how innocent I am in this whole affair, Lillian—or whatever you call her—and Pepper were dining together this very evening!'"

"I have told you that I did not mention it to my wife," Gibbs answered.

"I should like to call your attention to the fact that Mr. Josselyn was unwilling to bring his stepmother's name into this discussion a few minutes ago," George said quietly. "That would seem to me to indicate that there had been no prearrangement between them."

"Exactly," Ryan said, with a sharp look. "Thank you—I think that is all. Oh, one moment. When you came home from this walk, you approached the house by the rear road, crossed the field of the adjoining property, entered the gate on the tennis court, and so came around the west face of the house, to the front door?"

"Yes, sir."

"So that, by a really circuitous route, you did not pass the lighted study window?"

"Accidentally, I did just that."

"Accidentally, of course. Thank you, Mr. Josselyn."

Again there was the little stir of men changing position. Gibbs and George went to the desk.

"I will make it my business to look up those matters you called to my attention, Mr. Ryan," George said, in a business-like tone. "I'll see Mr. Josselyn's man of business—find out if there was anything irregular, any dispute there. There was one point I would like to make before we end this investigation: is it possible that Mr. Josselyn fell asleep in his chair, and was shot in that state?"

The district attorney nodded thoughtfully. He had scored steadily, throughout the long day, but he was rasped by the conviction that Gibbs despised him.

"I will speak to Corrigan about it. That would be an important point, of course." He glanced at the coroner, who had risen, and was standing beside him.

"Doctor Cutter spoke of that," the man said. "But it is impossible. When we found the body the head was sunk forward, exactly like a man asleep. But the bullet could not have entered the body as it did enter it while it was in that position. Mr. Josselyn was sitting erect when the shot was fired, and his assassin must have engaged him in conversation, holding his own hand, with the revolver in it, barely above the level of the table."

"I see," George said. He and Ryan fell into a low-toned conversation at one of the windows. All over the room there was the rustle preceding departure. A deputy, a kind-faced man of large build, would remain in the house; the others would return in the morning.

CHAPTER XIV

After the quiet funeral, when the Josselyn family had run the gauntlet of a hundred reporters and photographers, and were back in the "Villino dell' Orto" again, Joe came upstairs to find his sister. It was two o'clock and a low table had been drawn before the fire and spread with tea-things.

"Come in, Joe," his sister said, when he knocked. "And will you have some tea?" she added, with a shadow of her old smile. "I know you didn't have any lunch, like the rest of us."

"How do you feel, dear?" he asked, taking the offered cup.

"Oh—fine!" She blinked back the too-ready tears, and controlled the trembling of her mouth. "T-t-tiring day!" she added, unsteadily.

"Awful day. Listen, Sis," Joe's tone suddenly changed and became firm, "I want to talk to you about something! Where's Gibbs? Has he had anything to eat?"

"Why, it was for Gibbs that I asked them to bring this up," Ellen answered. "But before it came George had called him away. There's so much to attend to—so many different things. Joe, did you hear anything more about the Bridgeport position?"

"Well, that's what I meant to speak to you about, Ellen. I had a letter from this fellow Mainwaring, yesterday. They'll give it to me. In fact, they wanted me today; but of course I couldn't go. I can't get there until tomorrow morning."

"You are going, then, Joe?"

"I think so." He sighed, rubbed his hair boyishly with his hand. "I saw Harriet," he added suddenly, "and I think she's satisfied to have it this way. Mr. Lathrop was a king about it, and he said that I should stay where I am. But I got this job through him, you know, and I didn't feel comfortable keeping it now—when I've been a disappointment and a trouble to you all. So I'll go to Bridgeport."

Ellen looked with pity at the clouded face; Joe seemed so young, so much a boy to face these grave realities.

"So you go to Bridgeport?"

"Yes," he said, rousing himself from his brooding. "And, Ellen, I think Lizzie and I will be married, and she'll go with me."

"Married!" she echoed. "But when, Joe?"

"Well—" He hesitated. "Tonight, I think."

"Tonight!"

"I guess so."

"But, dearest boy! Don't you have to have a license and things?"

"I've got them. Her mother and father will be there, and Aunt Elsie. That's all."

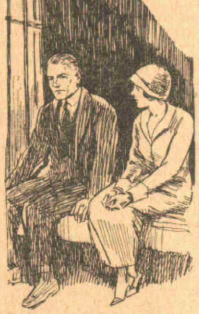
"But Joe—so quickly!" Ellen mused. "After all, perhaps it's the wisest thing," she conceded. "I'll try tomorrow to get someone else for Tommy."

"I was going to speak to you about that, Sis. Why can't we take Tommy? You'll have your hands full—"

She turned deathly white, and leaned back in her chair with closed eyes.

"I don't mean that!" he exclaimed, quickly. "Ah, pull yourself together, dear old girl!"

Ellen nervous, got to her feet; she began to walk about the room, wringing her hands, and pressing her locked fingers against her lips like a person in pain.



Empty as They Were, These Hours at the Jail Were Ellen's Life.

"Oh, I know what you've all been waiting for—these days!" she said, in her whisper of anguish. "I've seen it in George's face—I know why you want to take Tommy away from it all! I know that Gibbs has expected it; we've been together for three days now, Joe, we've sat for hours, with my hand in his—not saying a word."

She came back to the fireplace. Joe had risen, too, and was watching her with a distressed face. She laid her hands on his shoulders, and looked with wild appeal into his eyes.

"Joe!" she faltered, almost inaudibly, "I lie awake at night, racking my brains — and there's nobody else! They can't find anybody else! But, Joe, if he did do it—if his father, in that cool, smiling way of his—"

"Look here, Ellen!" Joe said bluntly, "I'm surprised at you. Gibbs is going to depend on you now as he never did in his life before, and here you are skipping your meals, lying awake nights, and getting hysterical! My G—d, Sis, you'll do him much more harm than good this way."

"Yes, I know!" Ellen said quickly. "But, Joe, she added, "I keep thinking that that Ryan will ask me—ask me outright what I think, and what can I say? I can't—"

"Now, listen, Ellen," he interrupted firmly. "In the first place, he never will ask you what you think. He'll simply ask you what you did, or said, or heard said; he may not put you on the stand at all. Now just calm down Take things easy. And you let us have Tommy. Lizzie adores the kid—we both do. And he'll be out of the way of the whole thing. Get me?"

"I get you!" she smiled, a little sadly, as she returned his kiss. "And you may be married tonight?"

"Will be!"

"It seems so strange, Joe." She went with him to the door of her room. "Not what I thought my little brother's wedding day would be!" she said.

"Nor I," he answered gravely. She thought he looked all a boy as he walked away, and turned at the stairhead to wave his hand to her.

A few minutes later Gibbs came up, and Ellen lighted the flame under the spirit-lamp, and made him fresh tea. He looked tired and ill, but he smiled at her gratefully as she gave him the smoking cup.

There was a knock at the door, but he did not seem to hear it. He had dropped his handsome head against the chair-back, and closed his dark, shadow-rimmed eyes. "It will seem good to get out of this, and get the little scout again, and go off out of the range of newspapers and cameras, won't it?" he asked. "I was thinking we might take the roadster and go South—Florida, maybe, or Atlanta."

Ellen's color rushed up, the vision of escape from all this horror had set her blood to dancing. The open road again, Gibbs and Tommy, meals here and there and everywhere—

Another knock at the door. Gibbs heard this one, and turned questioning eyes toward it.

"Stay where you are!" Ellen commanded. She went to the door. Gibbs heard one whispered word of protest and horror, and got to his feet, the color draining from his face. He saw George's grave face, and another face or two in the background. In the foreground, their eyes sweeping the room quickly, were two blue-coated officers.

CHAPTER XV

The trial of Thomas Gibbs Josselyn for the murder of his father was naturally the journalistic tidbit of the day. The social standing of the family, the mystery surrounding the murder, the odd relationship of the man and the two women, all these things were incalculably valuable to city editors everywhere.

Presently the will of the murdered man was filed, and caused its own sensation. After the bequests to servants and charities, and the gifts to old friends, the widow was to have her handsome allowance, payable unless she remarried, throughout her life, besides her country home at Wheatley Hills, and all it contained. To the son certain books and specified silver and jewels were bequeathed, and a moderate sum was to be held in trust for the little grandson.

All the rest went to the daughter-in-law. More than that, should Lillian remarry, she was to be given a lump sum, the remainder of her fortune to revert to Ellen. Ellen heard it all vaguely: she was not thinking of money in these days. She did not read the papers that shrieked between the two oceans that old Thomas Josselyn had trusted her above his wife or his son.

The trial was set for the first week of the new year, and to Gibbs and to Ellen as well, much as she had dreaded it, it came as a relief. She had visited him every day, in his cell at the Mineola jail, and what those visits had cost her, only Ellen knew.

Every day she must nerve herself afresh to enter into the stale, cold air, and must pass the clanking doors and the watching eyes. She must nerve herself afresh for the sight of him, thin, despondent, dishonored. She must breathe the suffocating moral atmosphere that surrounds the offenders, the human who is felt by other humans to be dangerous. She must talk to him, and yet not talk of the hideous cloud that pressed so close over him, and the hideous weight on their hearts that made them both afraid they would go mad.

She kept him supplied with books, and sometimes made him read aloud to her. George was often with him, full of confidence and courage.

Empty as they were, these hours at the jail were Ellen's life. Otherwise she was hardly conscious that she lived at all. She sat by the fire with her aunt, in the evening, talking with the busy, kindly woman and the old captain, but not knowing what she said. She wrote her nightly letter to Joe or Lizzie, with a scalloped kiss for the boy, and went early to bed. She rose early, and joined the old people at breakfast. Then she aired her room, and made her bed, and by that time the little closed car was at the door, with Torrens at the wheel. Closely veiled, although she was really indifferent to staring eyes and snapping cameras, she slipped into the car and was on her way to Gibbs.

Heroic Struggle for Education He Coveted

The story is told of Kamba, a full-blooded African of the Ndau tribe, who has progressed from absolute illiteracy to a Columbia university degree. The first printing that he ever saw was on a pack of playing cards that came from the coast, and by studying these he taught himself the figures from one to ten. Later he went South to work, and an American missionary there who taught native boys in spite of the opposition of the Portuguese whose policy is to keep the people ignorant, took him into his home as a house boy.

There the idea of that cultivated missionary, and especially his wife, going to live in that fever-stricken area for the sake of the black boys, gave him a new vision. He knew they must have some secret that made them different from all other white people he had ever seen.

When the American missionary left for home, he told his boys of a mission in Rhodesia, and Kamba walked 250 miles to reach there. His capacity and ambition for more education led the missionary to secure work for the boy by which he earned enough to go to Hampton institute, Virginia.

Earning his living all the time, he took a course of carpentry, and then went to Columbia, where he secured the coveted education. His whole ideal in seeking this education has been to go back and develop his own people, but not necessarily on western lines.

Doubtful Compliment

"The right kind of man appreciates a compliment from his wife." "Well," said Mr. Bibbles, thoughtfully, "that depends on the circumstances. Somehow I don't feel a rosy glow of satisfaction stealing over me after I have related a carefully connected story to explain my absence from the domestic hearth, and the wife tells me with a cynical smile that I'm 'truly gifted.'"

Second, because it is hard to find better cocoa, regardless of cost. Always ask for Monarch if you prefer Dutch Process Cocoa—for Farm House if you like the American Process better.

Bobbed Hair Not New Idea

Bobbed hair is ancient, according to discoveries made in the little town of Wymington, Northamptonshire, England. The restoration of the parish church there has revealed a painting depicting women with their hair bobbed in the style of 1924. Hidden under a coating of thin plaster were discovered wall paintings representing the resurrection and the judgment. The plaster has now been carefully removed to show the decorations. Most of the figures in the paintings are women. Some have their hair falling about the shoulders, but the artist has given the majority short hair, cut exactly in the manner of the modern girl's coiffure. The vicar believes the paintings are the same age as the church, which was built in 1350.

Prof H. L. Ewbank of the department of Public speaking at Albion college delivered an instructive address at the Methodist church Saturday evening. The Professor made several interesting statements one being to the effect that the young folks of today were as good as those of past generations naturally. This is a big subject and the Professor like many other public speakers, neglected to offer evidence to prove the truth of his assertions. On the other side of the question is Margaret Senger who published a report some time ago in which she charged that nearly 90 percent of American boys were immoral. The Government came along and put the lid upon Mrs. Senger's publication but later the government reversed its decision. More than one boy lost his best girl because of Mrs. Sangers revelations. On the other hand boys use less liquor than formerly yet the Jackson patriot says that city boys in large numbers are becoming victims of the drug habit. Along about this time, Julia Lathrop head of the childrens bureau in Washington steps up with the assertion that the girls of today are not as good as those of 20 years ago and before Miss Lathrop gets through speaking, Dr. Vaughn, one of the world's leading medical authorities and for 40 years head of the medical dep't of the university of Michigan rises o agree with Miss Lathrop but the university girls got spunky and the Doctor revised his statements to some extent all of which proves to us that the best minds of the country are hopelessly disagreed on questions of importance to the public which we presume is one of the penalties we pay for higher education.

Death of Mrs. Randall

Mrs. Emily Randall, mother of Charles and Arthur Randall of Adrian, died at the home of Charles in Adrian, the latter part of last week, after having been an invalid for a number of years although she was confined to the bed only about one week previous to her death. She was 79 years of age and the end came as the result of a general breaking down.

While her son, Arthur, was the editor of this paper, she often visited in this village and was highly respected.

She was born in New York state August 26th. 1846, coming to Adrian shortly before her marriage which occurred in 1863 to Timothy Randall of that city, who died many years ago. She was a lifelong member of the Methodist church and leaves to mourn two sons, Arthur and Charles both of Adrian, and one granddaughter, Ruth Elise.

Funeral services were conducted at Charles' home on Toledo street Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, Rev. Gearhart, assisted by Rev. Freeman, officiating, and she was laid to rest in Oakwood cemetery.

The village of Reading will vote on December 19th on the proposition whether to grant a franchise to the Suthern Light and Power Co. to operate an electric distribution system of lines in that village.

Death of Mrs. Clara Noyes

Clara Noyes, widow of the late Franklin Noyes, for many years a practicing physician in this village, passed to her long rest. on Sunday evening at the home of her son in Albion at 403 North Superior sireet, after an illness extending over more than a year. She was born in September 1843 in New York state, and came to Michigan with her parents at an early age. All her life until going to Albion, she has resided in North Adams where she came with her husband after his grad date. His practice here covered many years.

To Dr. and Mrs. Noyes were born two sons, Charles, who has passed to the beyond and Willard who survives.

Mrs. Noyes' parents came to Tipton where they resided when she met her husband who had not at that time began the study of medicine. After he left AnnArbor he went to the Cleveland Medical school. For 25 years they resided on the farm opposite the Grubby Knoll school house. In the meantime he had begun conducting singing schools in the community and many pleasant affairs of this kind were held. Later he became director of the Methodist choir, a position which he filled very satistactorily until failing health compelled him to give it up. Mrs. Noyes was a worthy helpmeet and sympathized deeply with the sick and ailing.

Deceased was 81 years of age and leaves to mourn besides the son, Willard, two half-sisters and a half-brother with a number of more distant kin.

Funeral services were conducted from the home of her son in Albion at one o'clock p. m, Tuesday, December 9th, and interment took place in the local cemetery north of town where a short service was conducted at the grave by Rev. Hutton of the Methodist church.

He asked the young man if he had ever attended Sunday school to which the young man replied "No" "Well" said the Judge "If you had, you wouldn't have been here. I have sentenced 2500 men and not one of them ever attended Sunday school." And Mr. Mohr said that of 900 prisoners incarcerated in Jackson prison only four ever attended Sunday school.

An Explanation

Owing to the exceedingly poor electric service this week and especially Thursday evening we are unable to issue the paper on time We are delayed on account of no lights. We hope the lines will be repaired at once. Complaints to the Southern Power Co. at Hudson have been made but undoubtedly the trouble was at this end of the line. The condition of the lights will cause considerable discomfort and more or less damage to the business places.

Merry Christmas to All

Christmas Time

By THOMAS A. CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

OF ALL the illusions of childhood, I gave up with most reluctance those that clustered around Christmas.

The old saint who climbed down the chimney into the fireplace in our sitting room and filled our stockings on Christmas Eve was as real to me as Moses or George Washington or my grandfather or any other person of whom I had heard but whom I had never personally met. He is to me real today when I am in reminiscent moods, perhaps because I have always wanted him to be real. Long after I recognized all the subterfuges which were being practiced on me as a child at Christmas time, I never admitted them even to myself, for I was quite willing to submit to the deceptions; I was made happy by all the ceremonies and surprises.

I have never in all my life been away from home at Christmas time; I hope I never shall be. Christmas joys are for me the most delightful; Christmas memories, the most precious. Everything about our holiday preparations at home was of the simplest character, but the season was full of possibilities and surprises. The dinner lacked the conventional roast turkey. Instead there was a roast goose or a huge joint of roast beef (following the English custom with which my mother was familiar) with suet dumplings and gravy. There was always, too, a loaf of spiced bread and plum pudding with a delightful sauce of drawn butter, and there was mince pie followed with nuts and raisins and other goodies.

Just as "home" always suggests to me sugar cookies, hot from the oven, with mother warning me not to eat so many as to make myself sick, so Christmas invariably brings to my mind the thought of raisins. They were in the spiced bread which mother made, the plum pudding was congested with them, I found them always on Christmas morning in my stocking with other good things to eat, and there was regularly on Christmas day a dish of them on the table to be eaten after dinner. It was not altogether what we had to eat that gave Christmas such a high place in my regard, though that helped materially, no doubt. It was the mystery, the anticipation, the preparation and the surprise of it all; the gathering together of all the family, the games, the roaring fire in the fireplace, and the general hilarity and good will prevailing that made Christmas for me the best loved of all the holidays of the entire year.

"We are rather outgrowing Christmas," a friend said to me a few days ago. "I don't believe it is ever going to be for any one again just as it used to be."

I suppose not; though there are some events connected with the celebration of Christmas, there is the real Christmas which I am sure I shall never outgrow. If I should hang up my stocking by the fireplace now, I feel just as sure as I ever did that old Saint Nick would get in some way before morning and fill it as he used to do when I was a child. My faith in Christmas has never waned, and my need for it. I practice economy badly at any time, but with the greatest difficulty at Christmas time, and especially since the prices of my own particular varieties of frankincense and myrrh have been so affected by the economic conditions. It is what is in our hearts that makes Christmas real. The song of the angels is in the air if the Christmas spirit is in our hearts, Christmas is as great a reality as it ever was, if we will make it so, and for us all the angels are again proclaiming as they did that night in Palestine, centuries ago, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

I shall hang up my stocking at Christmas Eve, there will be raisins in it in the morning. I have faith that the old Christmas joys will be mine once more.

CHRISTMAS EVE

THE CHRISTIAN REGISTER

I LIKE to think that every house
  Is full of cheer tonight;
That everywhere—on every hearth—
  Warm fires are burning bright.
God give our homes the gift of cheer,
  For no one ought to grieve
On such a happy night as this—
  On Christmas eve!

I like to think that every heart
  Is full of love tonight,
And free of every ancient grudge
  That shuts it from the light!
God give our hearts the gift of love,
  For no one ought to grieve
On such a happy day as this—
  On Christmas eve!

A Load of Christmas

By Frank Herbert Sweet

(©, 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

HOLCOMB did things in a peculiar way—a peculiarly nice way, though. It affected his Christmas gifts, his business, even his friendships. But then he was a bachelor of fifty. Then, too, everybody loved him, which is a very peculiar thing about a successful business man with competition, you'll admit.

This year Holcomb was very busy, and his Christmas gifts—general gifts, you know—hadn't even occurred to him until two days before the day.

He was passing through a new street between a restaurant and his office, when he saw a small shop with windows crammed with toys—nothing but toys. At this season, nearly the middle of the afternoon, a toy shop ought to be crowded with customers. This shop was closed. On the steps stood a small, anxious looking man, and a big one dangling a large key. It looked like a store key.

Seemed peculiar. So Holcomb went to the steps.

"Like to look at the toys," he began.

"Can't now," boomed the big man. "This chap can't pay a bill, so I've taken it. Auction day after tomorrow. I'm sheriff."

"Meaning," said Holcomb, "that if the bill is paid, the store belongs to this man again? How much?"

"Of course—and $200."

"What's it all worth?" to the little man.

"About $50 if sold at auction," dejectedly. "I picked a bum street. No business."

"What did you pay or agree to pay?"

"$500."

"What will you sell for?"

"Can't sell until—" nodding toward the sheriff.

Holcomb counted out $200, and passed it to the sheriff.

"Good-by," he said. "Now what do you ask?" to the small man.

"I'd rather like $300, but will be glad to accept half that."

Holcomb counted out the $300.

"Give me the key," to the sheriff. "Thank you. Now where can I find two men to move the toys?"

"I'll be one," beamed the man out of business. "I know about toys. And I can get another man from the next building."

"Do so, and I'll bring round my car from the next corner."

Inside of an hour the shop was emptied and the limousine filled. Then Holcomb took the most country of all the country roads, stopping at every house that showed signs of children.

"Hello-o," he would call to any small boy or girl he happened to see; "got some stuff for your house. Please take it in for me. I'm in a hurry. Give you a quarter."

He had provided a pocket heavy with loose quarters.

There were about three hours of daylight. When the daylight was gone the car was empty. He was glad of the darkness, for he had to go back by the same road.

REFLECTORS

IF WE could reflect the spirit of Christmas cheer half as brilliantly as a piece of tin will reflect the rays from a lamp, we should help to light the world to an amazing degree.

Who can hold out against a smiling face that radiates fun and kindliness? Who is cold enough to resist the melting warmth of real friendliness?

Let's pretend, this Christmas, that we are very bright, and imitate the modest tin reflector of the lamp of unquenchable good-fellowship! — Martha Banning Thomas.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

British Stand Checks the Funding of Debts to U. S. —Germany's Elections.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

NEGOTIATIONS for the funding of war debts owed the United States by foreign nations may be checked entirely by the position taken last week by Great Britain as represented by Winston Churchill, chancellor of the exchequer. Discussions between Secretary of the Treasury Mellon and Ambassador Jusserand relative to funding the French debt aroused the fear in England that France would be granted more favorable terms than were given to Great Britain. Mr. Churchill, explaining his government's position to the house of commons, said Britain would insist on equal treatment with any other nation in this matter,and he added: "It is essential that any payment by our debtors in Europe to the United States should be accompanied by a simultaneous and proportionate payment to us."

Speaking for the Liberals, Sir John Simon called England's position "intolerable" and said: "Our allies owe us some £3,000,000,000, involving a yearly interest on the debt of £130,000,000. We are paying our debt to America, but none of our allies dreams of paying us anything." Washington officials declared positively that there was no reason to expect a reopening of the funding agreement with Great Britain, a request for an understanding to that end having already been flatly refused.

Another controversy arose when Austen Chamberlain, British foreign secretary, notified Secretary Hughes that, in the view of his government, the United States was not entitled to collect war damage claims against Germany out of what the reparations commission receives from Germany through the Dawes plan. France, Italy and Belgium have agreed to support the American claim to the right to share in the reparations. Great Britain holds that America has no such right at all, having made a separate treaty with Germany. The point is made that the United States should follow the example of the allies by using the sequestered German property within its borders to meet the claims of its citizens against Germany. Washington forwarded an answer to England which, while expressing the belief that the matter could be settled amicably, firmly rejected the British position and insisted on America's right to receive payment for war damages out of the reparations funds. Unless the question is settled previously, it will come up when the allied finance ministers meet in Paris next month to decide upon the distribution of German payments.

GERMANY'S continued support of the Dawes plan was fairly well assured by the result of the reichstag elections. The three republican parties—Social Democrats, Catholics and Democrats—have 230 seats, which is just a few short of a majority. The three monarchist parties have 170 seats. The balance of power is thus held by hitherto weak groups, like the Bavarian Peoples' and Peasants' parties. Doctor Dernberg is quoted as saying the elections show that "a majority of the Germans are for the honest carrying out of the pledges of the Dawes plan, and, moreover, for honest co-operation in the international affairs leading to peace and reconciliation. Germany at present is negotiating for entry to the League of Nations and other international relations. The elections show that the people favor this program and oppose the extremists' efforts to break it.

"I believe a coalition of the middle parties will result. The Democrats are ready to quit co-operating with the People's party, which stands with the reactionaries. The three republican parties will be able, with the aid of two of the small parties, to form a republican government. Once this is begun it is possible that the People's party will be eager to join, because the People's party wants a place in the government, no matter what its political complexion."

For the present the People's party has refused to go into a coalition which would include the Socialists, so, according to dispatches from Berlin, the cabinet headed by Chancellor Marx has decided to resign. The outcome may be the formation of a bourgeois ministry to include the Nationalists, whose opponents wish to maneuver them into an impossible situation.

Baron Ago von Maltzan, secretary of state of the German foreign office, has been appointed ambassador to Washington to succeed Herr Wiedfeldt, who has resigned. Baron Maltzan is credited with possessing great diplomatic ability. He was chiefly responsible for the treaty of Rapallo between Germany and Russia which caused such a sensation during the Genoa conference of the great powers.

THE League of Nations council opened in Rome what might have been an important meeting had it not been found necessary or advisable to yield to the demands of the British. Austen Chamberlain told the council the Baldwin cabinet needed more time to examine the security and arbitration protocol and insisted that consideration of it be postponed until March, which was agreed to. A delegation from Egypt urged that the council take cognizance of the protest of the Egyptian parliament against the recent "wanton British attack," but here again British influence prevailed and the league secretariat announced it could not recognize the protest because it did not come from the Egyptian government.

Mr. Chamberlain had long conversations with Premiers Herriot and Mussolini, and afterward intimated that great progress had been made toward a complete accord of Great Britain, France and Italy on vital questions. Among other things, it was agreed that Britain should remain in the Rhineland, retiring from the Cologne bridgehead in January but occupying some other region, probably that of Coblenz which was held by the Americans after the armistice. They also discussed the problem of North Africa, with what result is not known.

FRANCE, as well as some other central European countries, has been making a campaign against the Reds within her borders because of their attempts to incite revolution and murder, and many of them have been arrested and deported. Premier Herriot was subjected to bitter attacks for his course, but defended himself skillfully and won a vote of confidence of 300 to 29 in the chamber of deputies.

Over here in the United States the communists received a jolt when the Michigan Supreme court upheld the conviction of Charles E. Ruthenberg for violation of the state syndicalism law. It is presumed that as a result W. Z. Foster, in whose case the jury disagreed, will be retried and that Benjamin Gitlow, Rose Pastor Stokes and others who were indicted will be brought to trial.

MUSCLE SHOALS was by agreement the subject before the senate until disposed of, and it gave rise to some lively debates. The Underwood bill was up for action, and despite warm opposition it appeared likely to pass. Senator McKellar of Tennessee declared it was drawn in the interest of the Alabama Power company and that its terms would be even less favorable to the government than a bid made by that concern. The Republican steering committee of the senate agreed that controversial measures such as the world court membership proposal and repeal of the income tax publicity clause shall be omitted from the legislative program for the present session.

The senate on Thursday passed the cruiser and battleship rehabilitation bill which the house passed last session. It carries about $140,000,000 for construction and alteration and, although there is no provision for gun elevation, it will bring the navy almost up to the 5-5-3 ratio, according to Representative Britten.

The house was busy with the annual supply bills and quickly disposed of the appropriation measure for the Interior department, which carries a total of $238,000,000. Western Republicans and Southern Democrats prevented the elimination of an amendment for continuance of 39 land offices in Western and Southern states. The agricultural appropriation bill was then taken up and seemed to meet with little opposition in any of its parts. Among its items is one of $80,000,000 for road construction.

SUPPLEMENTING the gloomy reports of the secretaries of war and the navy is the annual report of the advisory committee for aeronautics which President Coolidge transmitted to congress. It gives a startling picture of what might happen to this country in time of war because of our deficiency in aircraft. Here is an extract:

"No one can foretell at this time what the use of aircraft will be in future wars, not even in the next war. It is safe to say that there will be individual and group fighting in the air; there will be aircraft attacking troops on the ground both with bombs dropped from great heights and with machine guns mounted on low-flying aircraft protected by armor from ordinary rifle bullets; there will be bombing of large centers, and routes of communication and transportation.

"And it has been proposed that aircraft be used to drop poisonous gases, not only on the enemy troops, but also behind the lines and in the centers of population, to the same extent that long-distance bombing will be carried on. The bombs carried may not be limited to explosives and poisonous gases, but may possibly be loaded with germs to spread disease and pestilence.

"Without limitations on the uses of aircraft in warfare, a nation fighting with its back to the wall cannot be expected to omit to use desperate means to stave off defeat."

TWO immense gifts to the American public for educational and charitable purposes were announced last week. James B. Duke, tobacco and power magnate, created a trust fund embracing properties worth at least $40,000,000, to be increased later to $80,000,000, for education, church and hospital work in North and South Carolina. The trustees are instructed to spend part of this in creating a university to be known as Duke university, provided Trinity college at Durham will not consent to change its name to Duke, which it probably will not do.

The other benefactor is George Eastman, head of the Eastman Kodak company of Rochester, N. Y. He announces new gifts of $12,500,000 to Massachusetts Institute of Technology, University of Rochester, Hampton institute and Tuskegee institute. This brings Mr. Eastman's known benefactions up to $58,602,900, of which nearly $24,000,000 has been given to the University of Rochester. Explaining the donations of $1,000,000 each to Hampton and Tuskegee, he says:

"Almost the entire attention of educators has been devoted thus far to the white race, but we have more than 10 per cent negro population in the United States, most of whom are densely ignorant. The only hope of the negro race and the settlement of the negro problem is through proper education of the Hampton-Tuskegee type."

SAMUEL GOMPERS, who went to Mexico City for the Pan-American Federation of Labor convention and was elected its president, was taken seriously ill there and was placed on a train and hurried homeward. At the time this was written there was small hope for his recovery. He had been in very poor health for some time, and it was believed the altitude of Mexico City affected his heart.

August Belmont, known throughout the world as a financier and a sportsman, died rather suddenly in his New York residence at the age of seventy-one years. Mr. Belmont financed the first New York subway and was the chief figure in the building of the Cape Cod canal. For a great many years he was one of the leaders in American thoroughbred racing.

Another notable man who passed away during the week was Mahlon Pitney, former associate justice of the United States Supreme court. About eighteen months ago he was forced to retire by two strokes of paralysis, and he never recovered from them.

Oldest Maya Culture Revealed in Yucatan

Berkeley, Cal.—The Maya tribes of Mexico probably had the oldest civilization in the world and evolved the first system of mathematics, according to Prof. A. L. Krober of the University of California, department of anthropology, who has just returned from making some excavations in Yucatan.

Professor Krober said the Maya civilization dated back at least 2,000 years before the time of mathematical calculation as used now was first established in India in the Fifth century. Some scientists estimate, he added, that the Mayas flourished as far back as 5,000 years before the Fifth century.

"As the Greeks preceded the Romans with a high standard of civilization, so the Mayas preceded the Aztecs in Mexico," he continued. "Buried pottery and ruins of cities recently discovered show a high state of civilization, between 200 and 600 A. D., by a race known as the Mayas, which was copied later by the Aztecs.

"The Mayas in Yucatan achieved higher things in art and literature as well as in science. They were the inventors. The Toltecs immediately preceded the Aztecs and doubtless gave them the benefit of Maya civilization.

"The Aztec records cover about two centuries prior to the Spanish conquest. The Aztecs ruled their captive tribes with a high hand, taking from them the tribute which enabled them to build their cities."

Saint Is Placed on Retired List

For over three centuries a certain Brazilian regiment has been under the patronage of Saint Anthony, who was appointed its honorary colonel to commemorate an action in which the regiment distinguished itself. The salary attached to the rank was paid to the Little Sisters of the Poor, as related London Answers.

The present minister of war, however, does not consider that Saint Anthony is worth his salary, and has come to the conclusion that it is time that the appointment and the salary should cease. But the economy had to be effected decently and in order, so the following communique was issued and has been causing much amusement in Brazil:

"Col. Saint Anthony of Padua of the —— regiment, having completed three centuries of service, is now gazetted general and placed on the retired list."

Toe Dancing

Toe dancers become accustomed to the hard-toed shoes and the standing and walking on the toes by long practice and exercise of the muscles. The students of toe dancing help to support themselves on bars when they first stand on their toes, after weeks of fancy dancing and exercise of the muscles of the ankles and legs. Lamb's wool is kept in the toe of the slipper to keep the toes from callousing, and the student takes alcohol foot baths and massage to relax the toes.

His Father Belonged

The teacher was explaining the nouns of multitude.

"You say," he said, "a flock of sheep, a flight of birds, a shoal of fishes, a school of whales, a covey of partridges, a herd of cows, a forest of trees, a brood of serpents, and so on. Now, can any boy give me some other examples?"

"Please, sir," said a smart boy, "please sir, yes, an ancient order of buffaloes."—Buffalo Courier.

He Saw the Devil

Claude, age six, was playing in a garage. He came pellmell into the house, crying hysterically, declaring between sobs that the devil was in the machine.

On investigation, an owl was found perched on the back seat. It had evidently gotten there the night before, when the machine was left standing in a country road.

Education and Earning

In three representative areas in Indiana, Illinois and Iowa, tenant farmers with a high school education receive an average annual labor income of $526 a year more than the men with only a common school education. A college education adds to this average $453 a year, making the income of college graduates $979 more a year than the labor earnings of men with a common school training.

CO-OPS SELL A BILLION'S WORTH

According to the 1920 census figures, $721,983,639 worth of farm products was sold through co-operative marketing associations. The greatest growth in co-operative marketing has come since that time, so that it is safe to assume that much more than a billion dollars worth of products are sold co-operatively at the present time. A general survey shows that the larger co-operatives in fruit are handling nearly $200,000,000 worth of business annually. The large scale milk co-operatives do a total business of about $150,000,000 annually, while the tobacco group is doing a combined business of more than $100,000,000 annually. The cotton group has also passed the $100,000,000 mark.

THE ADVOCATE

BACK TO NORMAL

In no period since the war has greater progress in the return to normal business conditions been made by industry, commerce and finance than during the past year. This reestablishment of normal conditions has been brought about by the working of purely economic influences. These influences and this result completely refute the arguments and pretensions of opportunist politicians and radical demagogues who have sought to bring about readjustment by political measures. These measures were aimed to give gratuitous advantages to the special interests and classes which the proposers assumed to represent, to the detriment of the general good.

The virtual disappearance, by natural economic processes, of the abnormalities that have persisted, as the long drawn out aftermath of the war, has removed whatever justification their presence seemed to give for governmental paternalism and for special measures of relief for particularly distressed classes. At best these measures were merely sedatives for psychological conditions and not real remedies for economic conditions. To that extent they served a purpose, but there is no further public good that they can serve. With normal conditions once more established it should be the resolute determination of all business men to resist any further effort at political interference with economic processes.

The time is at hand for a thorough-going return to a free play of private enterprise and private initiative under unhampered competitive conditions. Government influence and political interference in respect to business should be reduced to an absolute minimum. We as bankers ask no special privileges for ourselves. Equally we are opposed to special privileges for other groups at the expense of the general welfare. The experience of the past few years has been one of the greatest demonstrations in history of the validity of the view that the community interests of a people are best served by the maximum degree of private enterprise and private initiative with the minimum of government regulation.—Declaration of the American Bankers Association.

The 1925 Field Trials

We were recently handed a copy of "Bloodlines" the offical organ of the dog breeders of Southern Michigan published at Kalamazoo and we will say that while we have often heard of this paper through Eugene McBain we found it exceeded expectations. [Not only is it full of "dog stuff" bu] here and there are innocent little jokes which make one laugh in spite of himself all of which puts spice into life even of a dog fancier. Among other things we note the head quill pusher remarks:

"A committee has also been appointed to call upon the president of Southern Michigan Bootleggers Association and have them hold their convention in Hillsdale upon the same dates as the field trials. This committee was instructed to put on a "cellar to cellar" campaign which would get results. The committee was also instructed to buy a barrel of cider, seal it and bury it in the presence of the President and it is not to be opened until the 1925 field trials."

He also says:

"L. H. Barber of North Adams Michigan peered into the green tea grounds in his cup and says he can plainly see a Field Champion but he can not tell if it was in 1925 or 1935.

"A brother fancier sends in the pedigree of his wife and wants the U. K. C. to pass on it, as she has not asked for a new fall hat and he fears insanity. He says he has examined her pedigree to the best of his ability and can find only one crazy ancestor in it and that was his mother-in-law.

M. A. C. To Send Farm News By Radiophone

Regular agricultural programs will be sent out from the M. A. C. radio station, WKAR, ,after the first of the year, according to tentative plans being formulated at the college now.

☐A new and more powerful transmitter, a gift from the Detroit News, is being installed at East Lansing and will be ready for use after January 1. This station will be able to reach all of Michigan, as well as other mid western states regularly, according to radio engineers. The agricultural programs planned directly for farmers,, will probably be sent out once a week, the programs being planned by the college extension division.

Plan Big Egg Show For Farmers Week

Aristocrats of the hen fruit world gathered from nests in Michigan as well as other states, will enter the show ring at M. A. C. during the annual Farmers week February 2 to 6. The occasion will be the first annual egg show, to be held under the auspices of the poultry department at the college.

Classes for the show will include commercial class, producers class Boys and Girls Club class, and student class. Any farmer or poultry raiser will be eligible to enter his product in the show. Standards by which the eggs will be judged include size, quality evenness, color and other more technical points of little interest to the layman.

Similar egg shows are held by a number of other state agricultural colleges. A year ago, entries from the M. A. C. poultry flocks took a number of high awards in eastern egg show.

State Farmers Win Again At Chicago

Michigan entries scored heavily in all classes of the recent International Livestock, Shows in Chicago. A summary of awards, just completed at the M. A. C., shows that state farmers won even more awards than they did a year ago.

Outstanding among the crops winnings was a clean sweep in hay and classes, Michigan entries winning all top places in Alfalfa, Red Clover, Timothy, Mixed, and "Other" hay classes. The first three places in yellow soy beans and field beans; first in field peas; the first eight places in soft red winter wheat; the first three in Flint corn for region 2, eight places in rye, the first three places in junior corn exhibits for region 2, including the first two the first four places in flax; ten of thirty places in oats for region 2; and eleven places in yellow dent for region 2 were among the most notable of the crops winnings made by Wolverine farm exhibitors.

A. W. Jewett, Jr., of Mason, a graduate of M. A. C. won the hand some silver cup offered each year at the Hay and Grain show for the best farmer exhibitor. This was the third year that Jewitt won the highest award possible in the show.

Prominent among the livestock winnings were the ribbons brought back by the M. A. C. entries in the livestock classes. In addition to many awards in sheep, swine, and beef cattle exhibits, the state college horse herd scored one of the biggest winnings ever made by a single exhibit at the famous International.

Pervanche, star Belgian mare of the M. A. C. string, was returned grand champion of the show for the third consective year. Leila a Percheron, was first in her class and reserve senior champion of Percherons. The six horses entered by the college collected three firsts two seconds, one third, and two championships.

Of particular interest to crops men from all over the country who attended the combined shows was the special educational exhibit shown at the Hay and Grain show by the Michigan college. Centering around the adaptation of corn to more northern sections, this exhibit told the graphic story of moving the corn belt northward, a crops development which is meaning much to Michigan agriculturists.

The Non-Advertising Merchants

Every few days we note that some little paper in some part of the country has suspended publication and gone up the spout because the business men and merchants refused to patronize their home paper which is the life blood of the town and it is not strange that things of this nature occur.

Our business men seem perfectly willing to put thousands of dollars in taxes into expensive roads which are a sea of mud in the wet season, they seem quite content to advertise in the Hillsdale Daily or some other distant sheet which has several thousands of subscribers 50 and 60 miles away who wouldn't come here to trade under any circumstances, but when it comes to helping build up the home paper which always stands for our schools and our own personal interests they side step the issue. At present those advertising in our columns and who should be patronized by the trade of the vicinity are as follows:

Clyde S. Wertz, John Williams Hardware, Payne and Green hardware, Merton N. Wolcott, Insurance, F. I. Williams and Son, Coal and Feeds, Graves and Ford Lumber Co. Greendale Eairy butter and cream, William Corey Battery and Tire Shop, Young and Son, Furniture and Undertaking. Those who do not advertise in their home paper and thereby help to build up the village are R. A. Barber, Shoes and groceries, Rex Northrup Groceries, Eber C. Williams Groceries and Drugs, W. W. Clingerman, meats and Groceries Ray Walters Garage, Sharp and Son Garage.

Now we have no fault to find if our home merchants want to cover a little more territory while using the home paper, as many of them do,

Neither do we claim the Advocate is a great big county paper but we do claim a pretty good force of readers in and about this village who would naturally come here to trade. Don't get the erronious idea into your head that people are coming here from the other side of Moscow or Jerome to trade because there are other towns where they can go much nearer, so the extra circulation you pay for in the Hillsdale Daily is a dead loss to you. When they soak you a cent per word for each issue and space rates 40 cents per inch you are paying for a big circulation which goes to trade with the other fellow. We are not at all particular and will take anybody's ad be it white, Yankee, male or female and we should like to see the business men of the town all get into our columns. Some of these merchants who have never spent over a dollar or two with us in the past five years get our trade right along so no one can say we repudiate in the least. We should calculate that a business which will stand a clerk hire of from $10.00 to $15.00 per week besides the proprietor's salary, could well take care of the expense of advertising, at least it can pay for such in other papers.

Just stop a moment and calculate how long your town would be on the map if the railroad and the newspaper should suddenly decide to pull stakes? We are not certain but both of these things could happen here as well as in other towns. How long would it be until the festive blackbird would roam your corporation and all that would stick up would be the brick pile where once stood your municipal power plant?

EXPERIMENTAL WORK BEGUN IN TWELVE STATES

Eleven Farms Have Electric Service at Red Wing, Minn.—Several Lines in Alabama.

With the general co-operation of the National Committee on the Relation of Electricity to Agriculture, the great fundamentals of farm electrification are being thoroughly studied in ten different states in various sections of the country. Within the next few years—for it can hardly be done much sooner—both the agricultural and the electrical interests will know with scientific accuracy just what the American farmer can hope for in the way of permanent, extensive and profitable electric service on his farm, supplied from the power lines of electric light and power companies.

The first of the state investigations, and at the present moment the most advanced of them all, is the co-operative experimental line at Red Wing, Minn., built by the Northern States Power Company and to be operated for at least three years by a joint co-operative committee.

Cooking Electrically in Home of B. I. Melin, Near Red Wing, Minn.

This line now serves eleven out of a possible total of nineteen customers. All of these eleven farms have been wired for electric lights in the farm houses, out-buildings and yards. The electrical apparatus put into operation consists of electric ranges, ironing machines, irons, washing machines and vacuum cleaners, as well as electric feed grinders, cream separators and pumps. There are also on these farms three electric incubators and three electric brooders.

Equipment Loaned to Farmers

The activities still to be undertaken comprise electric silage cutting and blowing, electric threshing, electric wood sawing and electric milking. An effort is also to be made to plow fields electrically.

Electrical manufacturing companies have loaned to the farmers for three years the equipment which is being used. From the beginning of this enterprise electrical manufacturers have followed it keenly. The General Electric Company, displaying a co-operative attitude as to policy, has both engineers and commercial men regularly in touch with the work in Minnesota.

The installation of electrical devices has meant, on several of the farms, the necessity of solving incidental problems. When running water was installed in the house a whole electric water system, including piping and pumps, was naturally involved. Also in kitchens where the stove had been relied on for heating as well as for cooking, the introduction of an electric range meant making over the house heating system.

Alabama Also Investigating

States adjacent to or near Minnesota are completing plans for conducting experimental lines of their own, particularly in Wisconsin. In Alabama a very thorough program for gathering authentic data for the benefit of the Southern farmer has been worked out and is partly under way. A careful survey of existing conditions on 800 farms in 25 different communities has been made, and no less than four experimental power lines are in operation, all extending out of Huntsville.

On a Red Wing Farm This Autumn

From these lines twenty farms, one nursery, one gin and two secondary agricultural colleges are receiving electric service. The total length of the four lines is slightly more than twelve miles.

Early in the spring of this year investigations were begun to determine the actual cost and returns from the use of electric power for the different appliances on the line. For this purpose each piece of equipment was metered separately.

These States Are the Centers

In twelve states of the Union active investigations are either contemplated or in progress of the whole broad question of supplying the American farm with electricity on an economical basis. Either by laboratory study, experimental electrical lines or surveys to obtain a knowledge of farm needs and farm sentiment (in some states by all three methods) a thorough analysis is being made, which will not cease until the basic question is solved, no matter if it takes several years. The states where these investigations are going on, in the order in which progress is the most advanced, are as follows:

Minnesota, co-operative experimental line in operation.

Alabama, four experimental lines, laboratory study and survey.

Wisconsin, experimental line about to start operations.

Iowa, studies of several existing projects.

Kansas, state-supervised experimental line mapped out.

South Dakota, co-operative study planned and experimental line under construction.

Oregon, laboratory study.

Virginia, general investigation planned.

California, survey of existing electrical farms.

New Hampshire, plans still in formative stage.

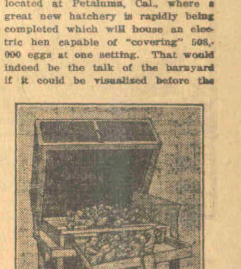
Illinois, making plans.

Pennsylvania, organizing.

ELECTRIC HEN AT WORK

"Covers" 508,000 Eggs at One Setting on Big Poultry Farm.

Undoubtedly the largest electrical chicken-hatching plant in the world is located at Petaluma, Cal., where a great new hatchery is rapidly being completed which will house an electric hen capable of "covering" 508,000 eggs at one setting. That would indeed be the talk of the barnyard if it could be visualized before the eyes of the common two-legged variety of hen.



Typical Electric Incubator

The Petaluma hatchery is electric throughout, and its new plant will be able to ship 25,000 chicks daily. The output for a single season is three million chicks. Thirty of the largest egg farms in the vicinity are kept busy supplying eggs for this hatchery.

The owner of this super-hen studied electric incubation for two years, both in this country and abroad, and finally came to the conclusion that hatching by electricity is the last word in artificial incubation. He holds that it produces a sturdier, healthier chick and one that matures more rapidly to the producing age.

Throughout the heavy hatching season, from the first of February until June, the temperature in each of the twelve hundred incubators is maintained at 103 degrees without the slightest variation. In the new plant of this hatchery, electric heaters are to be installed in the offices, so that it will be an all-electrical plant, using no other kind of fuel.

Booklet Tells Function of Electricity on Farm

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

Resolutions Adopted By the Jubilee Convention

The training of our youth for real citizenship is the acknowledged need of the hour. We will cooperate with our educational institutions in arranging a program for such training by urging the reading of the Bible and the study of Christian morality in all of our schools and colleges.

We urge the women of our organization to work for the ratification of the Child Labor Amendment by the various state legislatures and that an intensive campaign of education to this end be inaugurated immediately.

Realizing the educational value of the motion picture and the importance of carefully selected films that the young people of our nation and the world may be surrounded by such a moral and spiritual atmosphere that they may become loyal citizens and help bring the nation up to a higher standard of morality, to this end we pledge our organization to cooperate in a campaign to secure such Congressional and state legislation as will result in the producing of clean films.

We declare for an intensive campaign of education against habit forming drugs. The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union records its commendation of the United States government in sending representatives to the International Opium Conference now in session in Geneva for the purpose of putting into practical effect the resolutions presented by Representative Stephen G. Porter on behalf of the United States Government at the meeting of the Opium Advisory Committee held in Geneva last June, namely: "Resolved that if the purpose of the Hague Convention is to be achieved according to its spirit and true intent, and the ever increasing menance of drugs to be checked that the production of the poppy and coca plant be restricted to the medicinal and scientific need of the world. We believe that in this restriction lies the logical solution of the problem.

War cannot be prevented while it is legal and sanctioned. We therefore pledge our support to the proposal of the President for participation by the United States in the Permanent Court of International Justice, believing this to be a step toward international cooperation which is necessary to prevent war. Since it is "righteousness that exalteth a nation," we believe that the most effective way to rid the world of war is for Christian nations of the world today to exemplify the teachings of the Prince of Peace.

Because of the benefits that have accrued under the Prohibition Law in the United States we pledge ourselves to supplement the work of the W. C. T. U. in every country, to promote an educational campaign which will lay foundations for national prohibition and hasten the day of world wide prohibition.—Union Signal

Knocking Down the Fences

One of the greatest dangers to the moral life of individuals and the community is the thoughtless use of familiar phrases and proverbs, which are never closely examined and which are, in many cases, only crystalized lies.

For instance, a young man came to me some time ago, and after I had reproved him for his misconduct toward a young woman, he excused himself and his action by citing the Bible which says: "All is fair in love and war."

I have heard General Leonard Wood say that wars will never cease because you "cant change human nature." We repeat this in the face of the fact that the core of the Gospel message is: "Ye must be born again," and it can be done, even if Nicodemus doubted it.

Such phrases as "A hundred per cent American," "My country right or wrong," need to be carefully examined for their validity, and for just what they imply in a Christian man's attitude toward his own country.

The art of advertising has made us pceuliarly susceptible to phrase or slogans, and "Ask the man who owns one" and "There's a reason" have caused us to by things which we did not need, and for which there is no earthly reason.

"LYING MADE EASY"

A mattress recently put upon the market has this slogan to recommend it: "Lying made easy." This is the function of most catch phrases and slogans, and they keep us from straight thinking and rational action.

Selfishness colors our vision and too often determines our actions, as one can see in the antagonism between capital and labor, and in the competive struggle of modern business; also in the difficulty we have in thinking well of our neighbor, whose chickens have invaded our vegetable garden.

We are farthest away from straight thinking in human contacts because we have not yet learned how to be loyal to our own family, business, city, nation or race, without hating or deprecating the other group.

From the Catholic Standpoint

We have never found ourselves able to be in full accord with the idea that parochial schools are indispensable to the maintenance and growth of the Roman Catholic church. We think that quite possibly both the shepherds of the church and the enemies of Popedom overstress the schools.

A church that has within itself the self critical faculty that keeps a body of its scholars always at work pruning away vain accretions the tendencies to mere folk lore and popular superstitions from the body of its traditions, is a church that can readily enough meet and answer and overcome and march on beyond criticisms. even sound criticisms, directed at it from outside. We like to recommend a little book that Princeton University Press issued in 1922, "The work of the Bollandists," to those, Catholic and non Catholic alike, who are too little aware of this critical faculty in the church. We believe Catholic parents have every right to know their children are in Catholic schools.—Free Schools Exponent.

Insurance Agents Interested

Electric light, telephone, gas and street railway companies have been the pioneers in developing the plan of customer and employe ownership of their stocks and bonds. They have popularized their securities to such an extent through sound management and consistent and satisfactory earnings that other companies are now considering the idea when new capital is needed to take care of growing demands for service.

A Fable For Builders

Last summer a good citizen of a town not over a hundred miles distant from almost anywhere, built a wooden house for a woman and her children. He built the chimney of brick because he had to do so. The chimney was able to stand alone, so he did not have to prop it with wood. But the floors of the house would not stay up without props. The good citizen saved a dollar by using the chimney as a support for the floors. He nestled the ends of the joist nicely into the bricks of the chimney. He then covered up the job and got his money.

The rains fell and the winds blew in the most biblical manner and winter came after its usual fashion. The chimney settled a little and there was a tiny crack.

One morning the woman woke up with fire all round her. She tried to get to her children. If she got to them no one eyer knew it. The good citizen who built the house was arrested for manslaughter. He is still building other houses of the same kind for other women and children. Of course he wasn't convicted.

In another place a contractor in the habit of building roads for a compensation said "Yes, we'll build your road for a little less than the other fellow. We've got men and tools galore. We've got gravel right handy by, and will agree to finish the whole business by next Septober." And so 'twas done! But ye Gods! What a nice dry weather road it was! 50,000 of the taxpayer's hard earned dollars went into that Volstead act road and to-day (five years later) the poor autoist carries a flat-boat when he travels over it in the fall and spring. The contractor—aw what's the use?—he's still building roads for flat-boatmen.

WALL STREET WANTS COOLIDGE

Big Business 88 Per Cent For Republican Candidates, Magazine's "Straw Ballot" Shows.

New York, October.—Wall Street is 88 per cent for Coolidge!

The Magazine of Wall Street has taken a straw vote and ascertained how the international bankers, bond speculators and stock manipulators stand. The crooked canyon of concrete where Big Business congregates is a Coolidge storonghold. The offices where protective tariff schedules are devised and furnished to Republican Congressmen ready made, the directors' rooms where the railroad lines of the country terminate in the fingers of a few magnates who operate the roads not for transportation but for profits on their stocks and bonds, the banking offices where panics are conceived and born, the back room where monopolies are formed and combinations in retraint of trade are brought about—all of these record a walloping big majority for Coolidge.

The center of modern financial intrigue which O. Henry used to call Bagdad on the Subway lacks only a little of being solidly for the Republican party and its silent candidate.

True, a scattering twelve per cent of the votes are cast for the other candidates but, as the Magazine of Wall Street says in suming up, the vote shows "a sufficient preponderance of favorable sentiment to indicate—so far as straw votes can indicate—that, if our investors and busines men control the outcome, the Republican National Party will sweep to victory on a veritable tidal wave of votes."

This is taken as a telling answer to those who have been pretending to believe that John W. Davis is the "candidate of Wall Street."

WHAT ARE FEDERAL RESERVE NOTES?

Way in Which Currency Is Increased or Decreased According to Business Needs.

Federal reserve notes are direct obligations of the United States and are receivable by all national banks and member banks and by Federal reserve banks, and for all taxes, customs and other public dues, but they are not legal tender for private debts. These notes are redeemable in gold upon the demand of the holder at the Treasury Department of the United States in Washington, or in gold or lawful money at any Federal reserve bank.

The means by which Federal reserve notes are issued and the security behind them is of considerable interest. Any Federal reserve bank may make application to the Federal reserve agent (the local representative of the Federal Reserve Board) for such amounts as it may require, accompanying its application by a tender of collateral equal to the amount of notes applied for. This collateral consists of notes or bills acquired either by rediscount from member banks or by purchase in the open market, or gold or gold certificates.

Against its Federal reserve notes that are in active circulation a Federal reserve bank is required to hold a gold reserve of 40 per cent. But any gold deposited with the Federal reserve agent as collateral may be counted as part of this required reserve. In order to redeem its notes in gold when presented at the United States Treasury each reserve bank must carry a gold fund with the treasurer of the United States of at least 5 per cent of its outstanding notes not covered by gold collateral, but this redemption fund counts as part of the required reserve of 40 per cent.

Federal reserve notes, then, are secured as follows: (1) they are a direct promise or obligation of the United States and of the issuing Federal reserve bank; (2) they have collateral behind them of at least 100 per cent, consisting of eligible paper or gold; (3) a gold reserve of 40 per cent is required; (4) they are a first lien on the assets of the issuing Federal reserve bank.

One of the prime reasons for providing for the issuance of Federal reserve notes was to secure an elastic currency—that is, a currency that would expand and contract with the needs of business. This was accomplished by permitting the issue of these notes largely against commercial paper. For example, when member banks are being called on heavily for loans they rediscount with their Federal reserve bank some of their eligible notes. The reserve bank in turn deposits this paper with the Federal reserve agent, receiving from him a like amount of Federal reserve notes which may be turned over to member banks in return for the notes it has rediscounted, or circulated in some other way.

Contraction is practically automatic. If the needs of business diminish there is less need for currency and less borrowing at the member banks. These in turn reduce their rediscounts at their reserve banks by turning over to it funds received from the repayment of loans and from deposits. In times of declining business it is usual for the member banks to repay much of their borrowing with Federal reserve notes deposited with them by their customers.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON MAKING SAVINGS EASY

Helen met Aunt Emmy on the street. "Where are you going, Aunty? May I come, too?" she asked.

"Of course you may, dear. I'm just going to the savings bank with my weekly deposit."

"Oh, Aunty, I didn't know you saved money regularly. I wish I could."

"Anybody can who really wants to." said Aunt Emmy dryly. "It's easy enough if you have some system about it."

"But it doesn't seem at all interesting to go to the bank once a week with just so much," Helen said. "There's no fun in saving that way."

"Nonsense!" replied Aunt Emmy. "It's good fun to see your interest marked up on the book. But if you want an interesting way to save I'll tell you one. You and Maud do it together. You put away a cent for each day of the month. Suppose you begin today. This is the sixth. All right, then, you each put six cents into a little box. Tomorrow you put in seven cents and so on up to the thirty-first of the month. Then you begin again with one cent. The most you will have to put away any one day is thirty-one cents, and you know how easily that goes for candy or some other useless trash."

"Yes, but how much would we save by the end of the year, Aunty?"

"Enough to pay for a nice little vacation or to make a fine Christmas—about sixty dollars, without knowing it almost," Aunt Emmy said.

"Why, Aunty, that is a great plan. I shall tell Maud tonight," Helen said. "If we do it right along at the end of the year we shall have more than we ever had in our lives all at once."

Sometimes alone, or with George, she lunched in the neighborhood of the jail, and went back to it immediately. Always she saw her husband twice a day, and was back in Port Washington in time to read the paper to the old captain before dinner.

Mary Cutter, the doctor's lovely daughter-in-law, had taken it upon herself to befriend Ellen, and during these terrible days she had never failed her. And when the trial began she was always at Ellen's side. George called at the Main street house on the first morning, and Mary met them at the courthouse.

Ellen had never been in a courtroom before, but she said to herself: "That's the jury-box—that's the witness stand," even with her first quick glance.

George came in, talking in an undertone with his associate. He nodded reassuringly to Ellen. When he went away again, and disappeared through one of the doors behind the judge's bench, she saw Ryan come in.

He had the air of a man who had breakfasted well, and who was full of confidence. Ellen felt a wave of sheer hate shake her. How free he was; how comfortably ready for the day's work! And Gibbs—Gibbs would come in between two guards—

"This is merely the paneling of the jury," George had told them; "it may take several days. It's a long, stupid business."

With a great stirring and murmuring in the room, Gibbs came in, with a court officer. He was pale, but seemed neither self-conscious nor nervous, as he came quickly to his seat at the end of one of the tables. Then he saw Ellen, who was only ten feet away, and who sent him a brave smile. Ellen's heart was torn within her. Gibbs, with that little new droop to his broad shoulders, a spectacle for this staring roomful!

Everybody rose, and she rose, too, dizzily. The clock was on the stroke of ten, and his honor came promptly and quietly through a door at the back, to his large chair. A clerk leaned over him to murmur some message: he nodded quickly; the clerk went out. The case of the State versus Thomas Gibbs Josselyn was called.

For days the paneling of the jury dragged on, and the long hours in the courtroom were wearisome and uneventful. Then suddenly there was a full jury, and the trial began. Ellen was dazed by the preliminaries, and the cross-questioning seemed to her singularly irrelevant. George would ask an apparently unimportant question, and nodding, sit down. The district attorney would jump up with another, leading nowhere, as far as Ellen could see. Between George and Ryan there was a running fire of hot words. Ellen was amazed to see them speak civilly to each other the moment court adjourned. At luncheon she would eagerly question George as to the significance of this point or that.

The trial lasted for only a day less than three weeks. Ellen had moved her place to Gibbs' side, and although they rarely spoke, she knew he was as much comforted as she was by this arrangement.

For two days, cruel and exhausting days, she was on the stand. Mary Cutter and George Lathrop were amazed at the courage and strength she found for the ordeal. She had promised them she would not break down, but she did for a moment, when Tommy's name was mentioned. And perhaps that moment, when the sensitive mouth quivered, and the blue eyes brimmed with tears, was as favorable to Gibbs' cause as any logic or any eloquence could have been.

For it slowly became evident that no eloquence and no logic could avail in defense of a man, young and rich and handsome, who had turned from this devoted little wife to another woman, who had quarreled with the generous father who was that other woman's husband, who had threatened and brooded over the quarrel.

Day after day the net tightened about him. Ellen, listening and watching, sometimes felt as if she were in an oppressive dream. Oh, it could not be Gibbs who was trapped here; it could not be Tommy's father who was the chief figure in one of the sensational murder trials of the day!

On the afternoon before the final summing-up, when all the testimony was in, and it remained only for the prisoner's counsel and the district attorney to present to the jury their versions of the case, Ellen was spending an hour with Gibbs. His months of confinement and mental distress had affected his constitution, and a poor appetite and wakeful nights had added to the misery of his situation.

"I jump from one extreme to the other, Ellen," he told her. "Sometimes I think they'll bring in a verdict of guilty—plain and flat. And then sometimes, I let myself think that all this has impressed them more favorably than we—than we fear, you know, and that I'll walk out of the room a free man—with my girl on my arm—"

His voice broke, and Ellen burst into bitter sobbing. He put his arms about her, and kissed the top of her soft hair.

"Look here, dear," he said, after a while, "I want to talk to you for a few minutes. We don't know what's ahead of us, and I want to say this while I have a chance."

They sat down on the bed, side by side, and he locked his arm about her.

"One thing I want to say is this," Gibbs said, slowly, "I wasn't a good husband to you, the last year, but it was only that I was a fool, Ellen. I never was untrue to you even in my thoughts."

"I know it!" she said fervently, raising her wet eyes to meet his. "Oh, Gibbs, my own sweetheart," she burst out, her eyes brimming again, "what haven't you given me?—a little country girl who never had anything in her life until you came along! Paris, and my boy, and my little girl—and your love, Gibbs, that made life seem a miracle to me—!"

"Don't cry, Ellen," he pleaded, and she made herself be calm again.

"There's one thing more I want to say," Gibbs said. He got up and walked about the little room, Ellen watching him distressedly. "I want you to remember this, and when you tell the boy about it, tell him this, too. I've no reason to lie to you, Ellen, and what I'm telling you I say as if I were a—a dying man. It may be my last talk with you, and I think—I think of that, when I say it. I think of what you have done for me, and of what you are to me. By my mother's memory, Ellen, and by the memory of the little girl—we named for her!—I never fired that shot. I never had my hand on that revolver in my life!"

For a minute she stared at him without a change of expression. Then he saw an extraordinary look almost of madness come into her eyes, and saw her breast rise with one great breath. She made an effort to speak, with dry lips, and failed, made a second, and succeeded.

"Gibbs!" she stammered, in a whisper. "You—you!" Her voice failed her, and she made a gesture as if for air, still clinging tightly to his arm, which she had grasped when first he spoke. "You say you didn't—!" Ellen whispered, with a sudden pitiful trembling of her lips. "But, Gibbs—but, Gibbs—why didn't you tell me so before?" And suddenly she slipped to her knees, and he felt her face, streaming with tears, pressed against his hands. "Oh, my God, I thank Thee!" he heard her sob. "Oh, my God, I thank Thee!"

A second later she was upon her feet, pressing against him as she clasped his hands, and looked with wet eyes into his face. She was trying to laugh through the sobs that racked her.

"You didn't do it—my darling!" she said, again and again. "You didn't do it—I always knew that you didn't!"

"But, Ellen," he said, holding her tightly, and almost dazed by her vehemence, "you didn't think that I did it, dear?"

"No, I didn't think so!" she said, sobbing more quietly, and interrupting herself to laugh, and to press her wet face against his for one of her quick kisses. "But, Gibbs, I've thirsted so to have you tell me just that—I needed your word to help me! I felt as if I was all alone! Now—now it'll all be so different! I don't mind anything, now. I—" She laughed again, broke into quick tears, and buried her face against his shoulder. "I'm so happy!" she sobbed. "L-l-let me cry, Gibbs. I'm crying because I feel so much happier!"

Abruptly she stopped. A bewildered look was in her eyes as she drew herself away from him, and faced him still holding his arms. She stared blankly at him for a moment; then the clear brows met in a puzzled frown.

"Gibbs," she said, in a whisper, "who did do it?"

CHAPTER XVI

Who did it? The question burned like a fever in Ellen's veins, and her passionate determination to answer it swept all lesser consideration from her mind. She could face anything now. Somebody, other than Gibbs, had fired that shot. And she was Gibbs' wife, and she was free to search and hunt, and study the strange facts surrounding old Thomas Josselyn's death, until somehow, somewhere, her hand fell upon the thread that should lead her to the truth. Her simple faith that the truth must come to light helped them all.

"If we could find some one who saw Gibbs on that walk that night!" George said.

"We will!" Ellen assured him confidently. "Gibbs," she added, tightening the hand that lay over her own, "don't you feel it? Don't you know that you and I will look back at this some time as a dark, hideous dream? I know it!"

And yet she had turned dizzy when an officer coming quietly to the door cell announced that the jury had found a verdict. She put her hand on Gibbs' shoulder and raised her ashen face for his kiss. They had time for no words, even if there had been words to say. Blindly Ellen followed George to the courtroom. With quick efficiency the officials were filling their places. The faithful newspaper men, their dinners left to cool, hurried in.

It was seven o'clock; the cold February dark had closed down hours ago. The courtroom was brightly lighted, and warm. His honor, who had also been dining, came in. He had addressed this same jury in his kind, wise voice five hours ago. After Ryan's furious tones he had seemed all temperance and justice to Ellen. He had charged them that if there was a reasonable doubt as to whether the crime of murder in the first degree had been committed, they were in duty bound to give the prisoner the benefit of that doubt, and to find for murder in the second degree, or manslaughter.

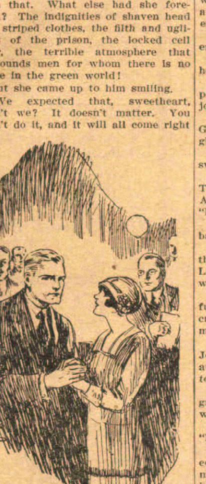
Now the old man looked benignly over his glasses at the twelve tired men who filed back into the box. And Ellen looked from face to face with agonized surmise.

The blow fell with merciful quickness. It was only a few minutes before the whole thing was over. Gibbs preserved the quiet dignity of manner that had marked him all through the trial. If a sickening fear of the future swept over him he gave no sign of it. He looked with concern toward his wife, but Ellen had mercifully lost consciousness and had quietly dropped against George's shoulder.

She recovered immediately, and they saw Gibbs again: a criminal now, convicted of murder in the second degree. All the freedom of their recent intercourse would be ended; she had foreseen that. What else had she foreseen? The indignities of shaven head and striped clothes, the filth and ugliness of the prison, the locked cell door, the terrible atmosphere that surrounds men for whom there is no place in the green world!

But she came up to him smiling.

"We expected that, sweetheart, didn't we? It doesn't matter. You didn't do it, and it will all come right some day. Try not to think of it now—think of the time to come. Just lift yourself out of all this—"



But She Came Up to Him Smiling. "We Expected That, Sweetheart, Didn't We?"

"Oh, we'll make a fight of it!" George added. Immediately afterward he took Ellen away.

They went to the Port Washington house, and George came in to talk to her aunt and grandfather. Ellen hardly spoke. She went to the door, to say good-night to him, and thank him. He thought she looked ill.

But she was in her place in the courtroom a few days later when Thomas Gibbs Josselyn was sentenced to penal servitude for the term of his natural life, for the peculiarly atrocious crime of murdering his own father.

"And somehow, one lives through it all, George," Gibbs said later. He was behind bars now, but astonishingly serene and strong. He was nervously anxious to have the events of the next week over, when he should be transferred to the big prison. "I want you to take Tommy, and get away from this, Ellen," he said, firmly. "Write me, and send me pictures—"

"Oh, Gibbs—!" she whispered, with a sudden stoppage of breath.

"Yes, I know," he said quickly, sympathetic for her distress. "But you must remember this. If I can think of you, living quietly somewhere, not too unhappy, it's going to brace me. I'm not any better than lots of other fellows who have been up against it, Ellen. And if, as you say, something new comes to light, why then we'll be glad we faced the music with some—some decency,don't you see? Now take her away, George. I don't like her to be here."

"I have never seen a man change as Gibbs has changed," George said, as they drove home. "I am amazed at him. Always fastidious, exacting, autocratic—he's got a new viewpoint now. Well, now, we've got to do our share. We mustn't lose heart. The game isn't up yet, by a good deal."

Like Gibbs, Ellen was impatient to have these few days over. She could not gauge her present strength for the hideous ordeal of parting with him, and of having Tommy say goodby to his father. Her soul shrank from the mere thought, and she dreaded a breakdown on her part, or on Gibbs', that should undo them all.

Lizzie had written her every day: of the pretty house they had found in Bridgeport, of the walks and talks she had with Tommy, and of Joe and his new work. The little stories of Tommy, the assurance that he was well and happy, the pictures of a well-capped and wrapped Tommy playing in a glitter of snow, were an interest for Gibbs as well as herself.

Joe never wrote, but both Joe and Lizzie brought Tommy to Port Washington in answer to Ellen's wire a day after the sentence had been pronounced. The child looked rosy and well, and leaped into his mother's arms, instantly distracted from his first embraces by her unfamiliar clothing.

"Why 'J'buy all black things, mother?"

"Because grandpa is dead, sweetheart."

"Grandpa is!" he ejaculated. He pointed to the old captain in the adjoining room. "There's grandpa!"

"Dad's father, Tom. You remember Grandpa Josselyn, with the gold glasses?"

"Is he dead?" said the child, in a sweet, incurious voice.

"You start your stumps out here Tom, and come and eat something!" Aunt Elsie said from the doorway. "How are you, Lizzie?"

"Oh, I'm fine!" Lizzie, who looked bad, said mildly.

"Is she really?" Ellen asked, when the old woman had taken Tommy and Lizzie into the kitchen. "I've been wondering. Tell me about Lizzie."

"She's all right." He smiled, ruefully. "She's a sad little thing! She cries, and she's sorry she's wrecked my life; all that sort of thing."

"And do you feel your life wrecked, Joe?" Ellen asked with a great ache at her heart for his quiet, hopeless tone.

"Oh, no!" he said impatiently and gruffly. "What's the difference, anyway?"

"Joe," Ellen said hesitatingly, "I'm—sorry."

"I'm sorry for the whole thing," he echoed. "It's a rotten morality that makes a girl feel that there's no going back. No matter how sorry, and how good, she is, there's always the feeling—why, Ellen, I know respectable girls in this town that aren't fit to tie Lizzie's shoes! Girls clever enough to make their bargains in cold blood—so much loving for a ring and an income for life! Lizzie's a loving little thing—she was starved for someone to really care for—she reached out for love the way a scared kid might reach out for a kitten! And now she'll never see herself quite like the others"—he gave his sister a dubious smile—"she hasn't let me put my arms about her!" he confided.

"Hasn't!" she echoed, amazed.

"No," Joe smiled, got to his feet, and sighed. "It's a fine old world!" he remarked drily. And then with an abrupt change of subject: "I'm so sorry for all this, sis. I wish to God I could spare you this afternoon. When do we go?"

"George calls at three," she answered quietly. "I think I can get through it thinking of Gibbs. I'm praying—I'm praying—that I can! It's the last pull, you know—and after this—after this I can faint or be sick or do anything else, for awhile!"

Wearily, she turned to go upstairs with Lizzie and Tommy. Tommy was to lie down and have a favorite book read to him for an hour; the little boy was presumably tired from his trip. Ellen left him when George arrived, and came downstairs.

George, coming in at the hall door, and Joe, who opened it to him, and Aunt Elsie, who came to the dining-room door to greet him, looked at her in amazement and vague alarm. Her face was pale, she was breathing hard, and there was a strange, feverish glitter in her blue eyes; she made a wild gesture that detained them all, and caught George by the wrist. He was instantly given the impression of exhaustion, of desperate determination to say what must be said, before the collapse.

Buried Chinese City Place of Importance

The remains of an ancient Chinese city, the walls of which, before it was destroyed by China's first emperor more than 2,000 years ago, seemingly inclosed more territory than is within the spacious walls of Peking, lies beneath three or four feet of earth about fifty miles south of Peking, awaiting the archeologists, writes the Japan Advertiser.

About 100 years after Alexander the Great conquered Egypt, or late in the Second century B. C., there arose a king in the then comparatively small China who compared favorably with Alexander in conquests and empire building and whose empire lasted almost until the present day. This was Ch'in Shih Huang, or Shih Huang-Ti ("the first emperor") whose rule, ending in 109 B. C., marks the close of the feudal period and the beginning of the empire in Chinese history.

Shih Huang-Ti subdued the feudal princes, built the famed great Chinese wall and successfully defended the country against the Tartars from the north, standardized money, transportation, writing and other things which aided centralization and destroyed as much of the ancient classics and traditions as possible, with the idea that the history of the Chinese empire should begin with his reign.

For Patent Leathers

Patent leather shoes should be wiped first with a damp sponge to remove the dirt and then thoroughly dried and polished with a soft cloth. A very little oil or fresh butter may occasionally be used as a dressing.

There is always a tender connection between the locomotive and the train.

Too Much for Him

An officer in one of the Seventh street banks says he answers questions all day long and is always glad to be of service to clients.

"But I wish you would tell me," he said, "what I should have told the woman who came up to my desk this morning. I was rushing to get a statement finished that was already overdue, but I left off and asked her what I could do for her. And in an anxious voice she replied:

"'Please have you seen in here this morning an elderly lady with near trouble?'"

THE SPIRIT of CHRISTMAS

by SARA LOCKWOOD

IN THE little village below the hill the snow and ice-covered houses seemed snuggling up together among the fir trees in order to keep warm. The fir trees locked their long arms together and moved restlessly to and fro, moaning now and then. Other trees, hopelessly bare and cold, shivered in the wind and crackled their icy branches. The beautiful Lady of the Snow with all her Snowflake Imps in attendance flitted about the village street, sliding gayly down the shop windows and flirting with passers-by.

The Man and the Child made their way through the drifts toward the group of houses. The Child ran and danced about, now in front, now behind the Man, shouting and laughing. She loved the white old Winter and in return Winter had commanded all his subjects to be kind to her. So the Snow Lady kissed and caressed her and the Snowflakes played about her merrily, touching her cheeks softly and making them rosy.

But the Man hated Winter and now he hurried along, giving no heed to the beauties about him, wishing only for the warm fire in his cottage. The Snow Lady tried all her charms on him, but he only pulled his muffler tighter about his throat and his cap more firmly upon his head and went on. Then the Snowflake Imps flew at him furiously. They stung his face and buried themselves inside his muffler. The North Wind tormented him, too, blowing up his sleeves and twisting his great coat about his knees until he stumbled and muttered under his breath. When the Child laughed at him and would have thrown snow in his face, he reproved her gruffly.

The Man was threshing over in his mind a question he had discussed with the Woman only the week before. They had decided to have no Christmas this year. It was foolish, very foolish to wear one's self out thinking and planning presents for all one's relatives and friends for months before, and then perhaps not be ready when Christmas came. They would not allow their child to keep her belief in the foolish Santa Clause myth which they had told her so long ago.

This was the hardest part, for both the Man and the Woman dreaded to tell the Child, and they put off the task as long as possible. Now it was Christmas Eve and the Man had promised to tell the Child as they visited the shops. But she had been so delighted with the array of toys heaped in windows and on counters, so happy in thinking Santa would bring her some of these wonderful playthings, that he could not bring himself to tell her Santa would never visit her again. And yet he must. She would soon get over the disappointment and be happier than ever, he told himself. Yes, it was the sensible thing to do, but he would wait and let the Woman tell her.

As they neared the cottages the Child threw out her arms joyously as though she would embrace the whole world of Snowflakes before she left them. And they, wild with delight, fought for a place upon her little hood and shoulders that she might carry them away with her.

"Oh, Mother, Mother, the Snowflakes have played with me and have told me the prettiest stories," cried the Child as she drew the Woman's hand across her cold, damp cheek. "And I have seen Santa Claus. He is visiting the shops now but he promised to come here tonight." She stood on her toes and clapped her hands in her excitement, and the words tumbled over one another as she tried to tell of all the beautiful toys she had seen.

The Woman sighed and looked reproachfully at the Man. So he had not told the Child. Why did he always put it off and leave it for her to do? The long discussions on the subject, the dread of spoiling the Child's happiness and the arguments as to which should tell her, had unsettled the Woman, usually so gentle and even tempered. She was vexed. She turned to the Child wearily, a little impatiently. She would tell her now.

"Dear, haven't you learned yet that there is no Santa Claus? You will not hang up your stockings tonight, for he isn't coming to fill them."

Then as the Child stood looking at her with wild, wondering eyes, she exclaimed, "Why do you stare at me so? Don't you see we have been playing make-believe with you all these years? There is no Santa Claus, and you are old enough now to forget such foolish stories. It is expensive and tiresome to keep up this farce and we have decided never to have Christmas again."

To the Child it was all a strange muddle. Something dreadful had happened, but as yet she could not understand what it was.

"No Santa— But I have just seen him, Mother. He talked to me this afternoon at the shops."

Wrought up as she was, the Woman's voice sounded cold and unfeeling. "Go to bed now. You will understand better in the morning."

The Child obeyed silently. All her joyousness was gone. The laughter had died out of her eyes and in its place there was wonder and hurt. But she could not talk about it now.

When the Woman left her in the white bed by the window, she cautiously opened it so the Snowflakes could come in. And then, with a great sob, she told them her troubles.

In the big room with the bay window, the Man paced restlessly back and forth and the Woman sat by the table with workbasket and mending.

Once her face brightened and she murmured aloud, "But Father and Mother never forgot us, and of course they will send something for the Child—"

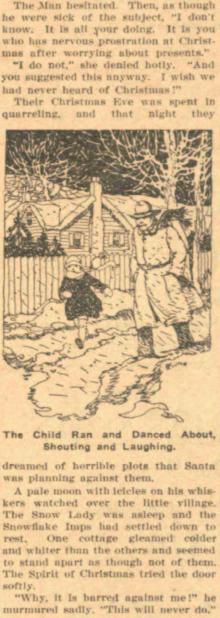
The Man wheeled about with a scowl. "We won't receive anything from them. Do you think we would accept presents, when we are not sending any? I have written them that we are not to have any more Christmas celebrations."

"Oh," gasped the Woman. "You do not mean we must send back everything we get?"

The Man hesitated. Then, as though he were sick of the subject, "I don't know. It is all your doing. It is you who has nervous prostration at Christmas after worrying about presents."

"I do not," she denied hotly. "And you suggested this anyway. I wish we had never heard of Christmas!"

Their Christmas Eve was spent in quarreling, and that night they dreamed of horrible plots that Santa was planning against them.



The Child Ran and Danced About, Shouting and Laughing.

A pale moon with icicles on his whiskers watched over the little village. The Snow Lady was asleep and the Snowflake Imps had settled down to rest. One cottage gleamed colder and whiter than the others and seemed to stand apart as though not of them. The Spirit of Christmas tried the door softly.

"Why, it is barred against me!" he murmured sadly. "This will never do."

So he walked about looking for a place to get in until he came to the window where the Child slept. Tenderly he sprinkled happiness and joy upon her until her lips parted in a smile. Then he flew past her to where the Man and the Woman slept. To them he gave of all his essences.

The Woman wakened first, and with strange new feelings, she called the Man. They gazed long at each other.

"Merry Christmas," whispered the Woman.

And with wonder and joy, peace and good will all mingled together, the Man took her in his arms.

"We must have Christmas, after all," he said. And the Woman nodded, her eyes beaming with happiness. "I must go to the shops and bring Santa Claus for the Child before she wakes."

"Wait," cried the Woman, and laughing, she brought from their hiding place an assortment of beautiful toys. "Mother and Father sent them and I just couldn't send them back."

With shining faces and happy hearts, the Man and the Woman hung stockings by the fireplace and heaped them with playthings.

"We will tell her she had a bad dream," said the Man.

"No," said the Woman softly. "We will tell her that Santa is the good Christmas fairy, who will always be welcome here."

As Two Aged Men Saw Approaching Yuletide

I WAS feeding the pigeons at the end of one of the park benches when two old men sat down. One, ruddy-cheeked and jolly looking, made me think of a winesap apple; the other, thin, dyspeptic, and with a frown between his eyes.

"Well, sir, almost Christmas!" began the ruddy one cheerfully. "Funny how a body can begin to feel it in the air this time of year."

"Don't believe in Christmas!" snapped the other crossly.

"What about gifts?" asked his friend. "How do you get around them?"

"Don't believe in this swapping of presents, either."

"And Christmas trees and children—can't very well wipe them off the face of the earth."

"Don't believe in any of this hullabaloo about Christmas—what's it all amount to?"

"Well, John," said his friend, "you are losing a lot, I can tell you that, and I'm glad you are not my grandfather. If you don't look out you'll get old; yes, sir—old!" Why, you haven't left yourself anything but the Monroe Doctrine! Back of this 'swapping gifts,' as you call it, human hearts are getting closer to each other than they do at any other time. And back of it all are the Three Wise Men, and the Star in the East. No, sir, you are missing out on the whole business—you mark my words. The world needs Christmas—downright needs it, and whether you believe it or not, I reckon we'll go on getting it!"—Anna Deming Gray.

Fox Was "On His Own"

Mrs. Solomon Barnhart of Connoquenessing township, Pennsylvania, saw a strange animal in her yard with one of her chickens in his mouth. She killed it with a shotgun. The animal proved to be a large fox, which was identified as one that had escaped from a neighbor 18 years ago. A worn leather collar and a piece of broken chain were proof of the identity of the former pet, which had been suspected for several years of raiding chicken yards in the community.

Gilded Goggles Good

Goggles of gilded glass, consisting of yellow glass with a coating of gold, recently have been invented by Dr. A. H. Pfund, associate professor of physics at Johns Hopkins university, to protect the eyes of workmen who are exposed to the intense glare and heat from furnaces. The gold-coated glass is said to eliminate the heat and glare from light, while permitting sufficient for clear vision. The gold passes the light waves to the eyes, but casts off the heat waves and ultra-violet waves.—Popular Science Monthly.

Graft Killing the Dog Game

The dog game is a precious game it is a clean game, it is educational, full of recreation, it is a blessing to the old as well as the young. It is an inspiration. It is rightfully named the pleasure and profit game but there are many kinds in the name who forget the "pleasure" part of the game and "graft" enters in and the dirty lice always have their hand out and all they can see in the game is money, money, money. If a fancier plays even in the game he should be satisfied as he has had his pleasure for nothing. There are a few channels in life where one can get leisure without paying a good price for it. so if one can derive pleasure in the dog game and come out even he is ahead of the game.

Dr. F, E. Caswell of North Adams Mich., was called as the official Vet. for the U. N. B. C, Field Meet and he looked after all the dogs, and when he was asked how much his bill was he said: "NOT ANYTHINC. I am pleased to do this for U. K. C. boys and the goodof the gam ." The shock was so great that 7 of the fanciers nearest to the Doctor who distinctly heard the report had to be rushed to the hospital and as we go to press they are still there and it is doubtful if they will recover.

This, you understand was a terrible shock as nationally the "graft" is so firmly seated in the minds of so many "grafting lice" that of course all fully expected that the doctor's bill would range between $1,000 and $2,000, possibly $3,000 No man can work for nothing, no man is expected to work for nothing, but perhaps in the doctor's training, he was taught "As ye sow so shall ye reap." and this Journal does offer to Dr. Caswell a few inches of advertising space free to run indefinitely, if the good doctor has anything he would like to put on the market.--Bloodlines

Dr, Lugan Visits A. O. Smith

Bloodlines Journal—"I recently visited A. O. Smith, Winchita, Kansas, and I must say I never expect to see a better kept Kennel and a finer bunch of dogs than I saw at Mr. Smith's kennels. Mr. Smith wants to get hold of my good dog Pilot and he ran the price up into five figures, but I think a lot of Pilot and refused his offer. Smith is a great entertainer. We stepped out a little one evening, as a fellow can't worry himself to death over a pawn ticket, a woman and a dog kennel. Smith took me to a (I should judge) Bartender's ball.

It was an informal affair, so I was able to get through though my laundry was in awful shape. I met some of the most charming young women and one of them—a blond—went so far as to call me "sweetie" Guess Agnes would have worried some had she been there. I find I will have to take some dance lessons as I danced too much with my feet. They don't use their feet so much any more. The punch that was served had a familiar taste (reminded me of Sayre, Oklahoma) it also had a familiar kick to it, that made it necessary for Smithie and five others to convey me to the hotel. Outside of my own kennels I think Smith has the best dogs in world.—Bloodlines.

Dr. Beck of Washington, D. C., who is a traveling veterinary for the United States government, was in North Adams last week and gave some very interesting statistics concerning the spread of tuberculosis among the domestic animals of the country. He relates some very interesting tales of his adventures in far corners of the United States, especially the great Southwest, where roam countless thousands of ranch cattle. While here he did a little demonstrating by dissecting a hen afflicted with tuberculosis. He says there is good reason for the embargo on shipments of poultry and stock from this section of the middle states.

What you GET here depends on what you GIVE here

Did you ever stop to think that what you get in the milk pail you must first put into the feed box?

When production falls off it's easy to blame the cow. But she isn't a magician. She can't make something out of nothing.

A good cow, rightly fed, will pay for herself over and over, year in and year out.

But no cow, wrongly fed, will produce milk profitably for any length of time.

That's why it pays to feed Larro. Larro will produce more profit, dollar for dollar, than any other feed, however little you pay for it.

We can prove this by the actual experience of other dairymen; or by a test with your own cows

NEW YEAR, 1925

By JOHN DICKINSON SHERMAN

THE New Year about to enter A. D. 1925—pressing eagerly forward up the steep slope to see what is revealed by the rising sun on the other side of its high crest. That's what the artist was told to draw. That's what he has drawn. It's an old picture. Doubtless it has been drawn untold times on untold New Years' Days.

Yet it is a telling sort of picture. The traveler in a flat country may be charmed by its beauty, but after a while he ceases to expect anything except a continuation of that beauty. In a rolling country his interest quickens as he approaches the top of a rise until experience has taught him that nothing out of the ordinary will meet his eye. But in a country of high ridges his imagination persists in painting the landscape on the other side as something new. Among the mountains the temptation to see what the next valley contains is always strong.

Traveling through life is much the same. In prosaic times and out of touch with the news of the day, man loses much of his curiosity about the future and concerns himself largely with his immediate environment.

But in these latter days there are no prosaic times; history is making so fast that we do not appreciate the changes. And nobody is out of touch with the news. Telegraph, telephone, newspaper and radio thrust the news of the world before us almost the instant it happens. Not only are great things taking place but the news of them is spread everywhere. The news sheet without a sensation is a disappointment; it must have first page staring headlines to gain our favor.

So the New Year of 1925 must step lively to keep with the pace set by 1924. And it finds a world expectant of great things and eager to press on to the top of the next high ridge "for to see."

YES; history is in the making all over the world in 1925—from Cape Town, Peking, Tokyo, Ottawa and Washington to London, Paris, Berlin, Geneva and Leningrad. Will the far-flung British empire stand intact or will its English-speaking dominions unite with the United States in a new Pacific ocean alliance—the White against the Yellow? Will Japan continue to maneuver diplomatically behind its inscrutable oriental mask or will it show its teeth? Will Germany accept its fate and settle down to its dreary work of reparation? Will France calm down and do teamwork with the rest of Europe? When will Europe show that it intends to pay its World war debts by making a beginning of payment?

As to the League of Nations and the Geneva protocol: Will the disarmament conference summoned for June lapse because enough nations do not ratify it by May? Will the protocol itself lapse because that conference fails to arrange for the limitation of armaments? And will the United States call a conference of its own?

Will the civil war in China fight itself out or will it involve other nations? How long before there is an explosion in Russia, with its anti-Trotsky movement and its growing war between classes? Is the new flare-up in Egypt to result in European complications?

Interesting and momentous questions these, and questions that press for an answer. The New Year will not see all of them answered, of course. But it may see some of them answered. And it is often the unexpected that happens.

NOBODY can say just what it will be of course, but 1925 is extremely likely to see something new in the way of a scientific discovery that will make the world sit up and take notice. Scientists all over the world are working on specific momentous problems that seem all but solved. Moreover, the world is literally full of scientists engaged in pure research, without thought of utility. The importance of this is seen in the fact that utility steps in where pure research leaves off. Thus Hertzian waves, discovered through pure research, have become radio; Pasteur's bacilli have brought about the end of yellow fever; Faraday's electromagnets have become dynamos and telegraphs.

The New Year is therefore full of promise. We may see on the market a French device which will bring about the death and funeral of the gear-shift and differential in automobiles. The radio has now been set at work exploring underground for oil, gas, water and gold. The financial world is just a bit disturbed over the announcement of a German scientist that he has made gold from quicksilver, although at a prohibitive cost.

The astronomers have discovered a new planet closer to the earth than is Mars. They also announce that the spiral nebulae in the heavens are in reality stellar systems, so distant that their light traveling at 186,000 miles a second takes a million years to reach us. A new microscope has been made that magnifies 600,000,000 times, as compared with the 360,000 times of present instruments; if a tennis ball could be viewed through the new microscope it would appear about a mile and a half in diameter.

And sometime during the New Year, according to the Berlin inventor, Anton Flettner, the new rotarship under power furnished by its wind-driven revolving funnels will come triumphantly into New York harbor.

IN THE United States 1925 will see a new President, a new house and a changed senate. To be sure the President is the same Calvin Coolidge. But he will be President in his own right—which is likely to make a difference.

Of course Mr. Coolidge is not going to rock the boat because of that. And there will be a new presiding officer of the senate—"Hell Maria" Dawes, who can be as suave and parliamentary and diplomatic as anyone, when he wants to be. And it will be fun to see him and Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart of Iowa—if the latter succeeds in holding his seat against the contest to be made by Steck. The house will see a new speaker; Madden of Illinois is an active candidate for the place and at this writing Longworth of Ohio a receptive candidate. The familiar figure of Henry Cabot Lodge will be missing from the senate; the new Republican leader may be Butler of Massachusetts, Curtis of Kansas, Watson of Indiana or Borah of Idaho.

Will the new senate discipline LaFollette and keep him in the Republican party or will it read him out? That's what nobody can say at this writing. But the new congress is quite likely to let the railroads alone. And one thing is sure—it will be an economical congress, if it pays attention to the man in the White House.

IF THE lot of the farmer is not made happier in 1925, it will not be because we do not know what ails him. The administration is putting agriculture first in its program of constructive effort. The President has appointed a commission of capable men and has told them to get the facts in the situation if it takes all winter. They'll get the facts. And with our brains and our resources it'll be queer if the agricultural complications are not straightened out.

It looks also as if we may have an adequate forestry policy. The National Conference of Utilization of Forest Products, a thousand delegates strong, has been getting the facts in our forestry situation. They were told by the President that 745,000,000,000 cubic feet of timber is still standing, with an annual cut of 25,000,000,000 and an annual growth of 6,000,000,000. He also told them that we hold the natural resources as a trust, to be used for the benefit of the present generation but neither wasted nor destroyed. The coming generations also have a vested interest in the forests. So it's up to the experts to devise ways and means to bridge the "fatal gap between cut and growth." And it looks as if the people were scared enough over the situation to insist that it be done. In any event the timber shortage is already acute enough to force competition in better methods.

PUBLICITY of income taxes is a much-vexed question which will presumably be settled this coming year. Double-barrel action is promised. Legal action by Attorney General Stone will secure a court decision as to whether publication in newspapers is or is not a violation of the law. Congress, from the present outlook, is likely to enact legislation repealing the tax publicity provision.

Whether or not the child labor amendment of the Constitution is to be ratified by the states is likely to be shown in 1925. Thirty-four have sessions of their legislatures. Arkansas has ratified. Georgia, Louisiana and North Carolina have refused to ratify, states' rights being the determining issue. Massachusetts, which next meets in 1926, did not act in 1924, but the people rejected the amendment in a referendum.

The General Federation of Women's Clubs and most organizations of women are working for the amendment. The American Federation of Labor is carrying on an active campaign for its ratification. The National grange is as squarely against the amendment. The A. F. L. attitude is this:

"It is not only for economic reasons that the citizenship of our country is urged to ratify the proposed amendment to the Constitution. It is one of the highest duties of the men and women of our time to safeguard the childhood of America."

AN INTERESTING mile post in woman's march to full citizenship will be reached in 1925 when women are seen as governors of the states of Wyoming and Texas. It is a fact, of course, that in many of the states women do not stand in exact equality with men before the law. This due to two things: Old laws that discriminate against her and new laws that give her special privileges because of her sex. The women leaders have split into two camps on this issue. Both camps want new legislation. The League of Women Voters is campaigning to secure action through the state legislatures, thus retaining special privileges already granted. The National Woman's Party would have an amendment to the Constitution giving exact equality before the law, regardless of existing laws.

The Texas election apparently settled one vexed question. A legal battle was waged against the eligibility of the woman candidate on the ground that women were not qualified, in the absence of special enabling legislation, to hold the office of governor, the law invariably using the pronoun "he" instead of the qualifying phrase, "he or she."

How about the poll tax that obtains in many states? In New Hampshire a woman went to jail as a public protest against the payment of this tax. Unfortunately a sympathetic—or unsympathetic—friend paid the tax, so there was no legal decision on the issue raised.

In the meantime the United States War department has begun a study intended to give American women a recognized place in the army "in all branches of the military service in case of future emergency involving a maximum effort." That would seem to include everything from making Red Cross bandages to womaning a machine gun. And of course everyone knows that the American woman can fight if she has to and will not be satisfied until she has the right.

THE New Year will see an increase in the number of motor vehicles and in automobile traffic. Five million new vehicles are likely to be made and sold. There are now approximately 17,000,000 motor vehicles. Four million of these, more than six years old, will go to the junk pile. Net increase, one million.

The New Year will also see a corresponding increase of the appalling slaughter of the American people—unless the nation bestirs itself quickly and vigorously. In 1923 the loss from traffic accidents was 22,600 human lives, 678,000 serious personal injuries and an economic loss of $600,000,000. The year 1924 saw about 24,000 fatal accidents; 1925 will probably make a new slaughter record of about 26,000.

Speeding and violation of the rules of the road are the greatest contributing factors where motorists are at fault. Pedestrians cause almost as many accidents as motorists in cases where pedestrians are killed. There is an obvious necessity for systematic effort to gain accurate and complete data concerning traffic accidents, their types, causes and methods of prevention. Sooner or later a mental and physical test will have to be applied to all applicants for licenses. Doubtless inferior intelligence, slow minds and muscles and defective eyesight are responsible in large part.

Illinois may pass a licensing law providing for mental and physical tests; such a bill will be introduced in the legislature in January and pressed. Other states will probably consider similar bills. Nine states have already made a beginning in the testing of eyesight.

"Greater Love Than This Hath No Man"

A sermon preached in Westminster cathedral by Father Dunstan Sargent has turned public attention to the women who give up their lives to nurse in leper communities. There are such communities in England, he says, according to London Tit-Bits.

"The number of lepers in the world is astonishing," said Father Sargent, "but more astonishing still is the heroism that inspires women of all ages and all types to give up their lives to attend them.

"The youngest girl I ever knew to devote her life to nursing lepers was only nineteen. Many are nobly born, wealthy, and singularly attractive. The life they lead is one of complete abandonment of all physical comfort and all the things that make life worth living to ordinary people.

"Many of these brave women contract leprosy themselves. They not only give up their lives, but willingly risk disfigurement and, ultimately, a terrible death."

Apple-Core Philanthropy

The back yard of a little St. Louis boy adjoined an orphanage, from which it was separated by a high wall. One day the boy's mother discovered him out by the apple tree eating one apple after another and tossing the cores over the wall. Fearing that he would have a stomach ache, she ordered him not to eat any more, but he called back earnestly: "I must, mother. It's for the orphans! They're waiting for the cores!"—Youth's Companion.

Bristles on Head

The African crowned crane derives its name from the curious fan-shaped straw-colored crest of wiry bristles that adorns the back of its head, says Nature Magazine. This crest, with the long neck, bare face, and bushy black feathers of the top of the head, give the bird a striking appearance.

Grand Rapids—Ed Nieboer, 37, former postmaster at Reeman, Newaygo county, was sentenced in district court to serve three years in Leavenworth penitentiary and pay a fine of $200 for embezzlement of $6,000 in post-office funds.

Mt. Clemens—The Wolverine Bus company's application to increase bus rates to 2½ cents a mile will be fought by the city commission, it has been announced. The raise in fares would injure Mt. Clemens residents seeking a livelihood in Detroit, is the basis of the commission's argument in opposing application, which has been placed before the Michigan utilities commission.

Ann Arbor—The City Council has passed a resolution giving the Peoples' Bus Co. a right to establish eleven bus lines, and give 20 minute service to all points in the city. Lines will be established before March 1, and will replace the present street car system of the D. U. R. The resolution provides that the city may return to street car service within a year if the bus system is not satisfactory, but if satisfactory and the people vote a franchise for the company, the street car tracks will be torn up.

Owosso—The League of Michigan Municipalities will seek the enactment of legislation that will return part of the automobile license money to cities and villages, instead of splitting it evenly between the counties and the State, according to Van R. Pond, city attorney of Owosso. The Committee has discussed the question with Frank F. Rogers, State Highway Commissioner, who suggests possibly the cities could be allowed the same amount on each mile of trunk highways passing through them as the counties.

Petoskey—The Petoskey lighthouse on the outer end of the breakwater was wrecked during recent storms which drove high waves against the structure.

Lansing—A report by the attorney general absolves former Sheriff Noble A. McKinley, of Newaygo county, of all blame in connection with the death of Herman Hoppa. Sheriff McKinley shot and fatally wounded Hoppa, a Newaygo county farmer, during an argument over dog taxes, in April, 1923.

Saginaw—Peter Andrusek, Swan Creek township, sugar beet weeder, pleaded guilty in Judge C. M. Browne's court to a charge of manslaughter in connection with the slaying of his wife with a hoe last August. The prosecutor's department recommended that Andrusek be given a five-year sentence.

Alma—J. W. Boody, 60 years old, a truck farmer living about three miles west of Ithaca, killed his daughter, Pauline, 16, wounded his wife, and another daughter, Mrs. Norman Fleming, 26 years old, and then killed himself at the home of his wife here. Family trouble is said to be behind the tragedy.

Flint—A jury before Judge Fred W. Brennan was deadlocked and discharged without reaching a verdict in the manslaughter trial of William Leyer, Clio bus driver. Leyer faces the charge as a result of the death of Daniel D. Layden, 76 years old, from injuries he received when struck by defendant's machine.

Detroit—Judge Frank Murphy sentenced Elmer Merritt, 18 years old, and Orren Knolton, 22, to five to 10 years in Ionia reformatory for robbery armed. The pair packed their viciousness into a single week. In that time they staged two holdups, one burglary, stole two automobiles, and assaulted a Providence hospital nurse.

Holland—S. J. Ward, a resident of this city and a confirmed globe trotter, has returned from an extensive tour of Egypt and Palestine. He covered 10,000 miles on his recent tour, 1,000 of which he covered on foot, according to a pedometer which he carried in his pocket. One pertains to the laws for criminal court procedure, a second to criminal offenses and penalties, a third in addition to codifying and revising will be to simplify the election laws, the fourth and fifth are for revision and codification of the highway and school laws. There will also be a bill for the revision of the workmen's compensation act.

FARM POULTRY

DUCKS USUALLY ARE HARDIEST OF FOWLS

Ducks as a rule are hardy. They do not have gapes. The weakest part of a duck is its legs. Indigestion is apt to show itself in the young, if coarse sand is omitted in the food. It is always best to put a handful of sand in a pail of mash food, mixing it thoroughly. This will aid digestion. The oily nature of the feathers makes the ducklings vermin proof. Exposure to hot suns is fatal. There should always be a partial shade to the runs.

The market term "green duck" is of late innovation. The cognomen is applied for the reason that the bird has not yet matured. It should weigh not less than four pounds, and be not over ten weeks old—eight weeks would be better—and should never be allowed bathing water. As an article of diet, if provided by a competent chef, the green duck resembles the famous and fast disappearing canvasback duck.

The Runner duck is not inclined to fatten so readily as other varieties. Its name originated from the fact that this duck has a running rather than a waddling motion. In color it is a light brown or fawn shade and gray. At the joining of the head and bill there is a narrow band of white. The legs are orange. In carriage it is erect, with a long, narrow body, well elevated in front, and closely feathered. The neck is long and slender, and the head rather flat. The bill is long and broad.

Duck eggs are in demand by confectioners, as they impart a glaze to their icing, which cannot be had with hen eggs. For making plum puddings, duck eggs are more economical than those of fowls, being both larger in size and richer. In the household duck eggs are used in making all kinds of cakes, omelette, cooking generally, and they are also relished fried.

Production of Eggs Is Where Most Profit Made

Probably the greatest hindrance to the profitable keeping of poultry on the ordinary farm is the retention of a lot of fowl that are poor layers, due either to their being too old or of a type to produce meat rather than eggs. The production of eggs is the end of the poultry business in which the most profit can be made, so that a heavy egg producing type is best suited to ordinary farm conditions.

Generally speaking, the pullet year is the most profitable period of a hen's life. It is advisable, therefore, either to mark the chicks when hatched, using a different mark for each year, or to band the pullets when they are put into winter quarters, so that at culling time the age of the different birds can be seen at a glance and only those that are required for breeding purposes retained after the first year's production.

The trap-nest is the most reliable means to use in culling the flock, but the ordinary farmer does not use trap-nests, so that reliance must be placed on physical characteristics. The high producer will be of an active disposition, early off the roost in the morning and late to go on at night and always busy. Her head will be clear cut, face smooth and free from wrinkles, with bright, prominent eyes; skin soft, pliable and of fine texture; and a general appearance of health and vigor.

Feed in Severe Weather

Many successful poultrymen follow the practice of supplying a little more feed than usual when the weather is unfavorable and some of them change the ration slightly, supplying a little more of the heat and fat producing elements. This is done on the theory that the fowls are warmer and more comfortable when so fed and there is no doubt but that this is the case. In any event special attention when the weather is bad is the best way to avoid the beginning of disease and disorders which may throw the entire flock out of condition for an entire season.

Poultry Notes

Show your best fowls at the fairs.

* * *

Feed the hens to force them through their molt.

* * *

Cull all undeveloped pullets and old hens from the flock.

* * *

Grain will put on flesh and that is the ideal that one should strive to attain.

* * *

Have you some chickens to sell? Tell your customers that poultry is as cheap as other high-grade meat.

* * *

Killing a crippled chick is an act of greatest kindness and ought to be done as soon as the deformity is discovered.

* * *

Of course egg shells are more brittle at the end of the hatch than at the beginning. If they weren't, how could the chicks break their way out?

* * *

It is better to discard hens with defects the moment they are detected than to hold them at a loss until late summer, or until the end of the year, when there is a general culling.

* * *

Males with frosted combs and wattles will require four to six weeks to entirely recover. If your birds are badly frosted the first of January, good fertility cannot be expected before the first of February.

* * *

The chief value of sprouted oats comes from its green or succulent condition. It does not contain a greater aggregate amount of nutriment, but presents this nutriment in a form that is more digestible and satisfies the fowl's need for green food.

MINISTERS CALL SCHOOL BILL BAD

DETROIT PROTESTANT CHURCH HEADS UNITE IN CONDEMNING PROPOSED AMENDMENT

THEY UPHOLD PARENTAL RIGHTS

Measure an Infringement on Citizens' Liberties, Unnecessary and Un-American, They Declare

Almost unanimous opposition of Detroit ministers of all faiths to the proposed school amendment to the state constitution, which aims to abolish private and church schools in Michigan, is revealed in a survey made by the Michigan Association of Private and Church Schools committees.

Rev. Chester B. Emerson, pastor of the North Woodward Congregational church, sounded the note echoed by his contemporaries when he said, "We have always reserved the right to trust children to their parents and to put them into what schools they choose. There is no reason why we should change that liberty. I am sure the best argument against the amendment is that it is out of consonance with American traditions and with the kind of spirit America must maintain in the future."

Rev. Harry Midworth, rector of the Church of Our Saviour, Episcopal, said, "The amendment, if adopted, would not be conducive to the best interests of the public. While the publicly supported schools may be perfectly satisfactory, there would be no redress in case of dissatisfaction. I am a lover of freedom and claim the right to exercise that freedom in the education of my children."

Rev. Andrew S. Gill, of St. Matthias Episcopal church, declares: "What we want and need is more religious education, not less," and he asks, "Does not the proposed amendment involve a form of state tyranny? Will the state next be telling us which of our children may be doctors, which lawyers, which merchants, etc?"

Rev. Henry Veaduin, of the First Christian Reformed church, charges that the amendment opens the way for the state to invade the domain of the church and the home and that it proposes to compel parents to give all children an education which must of necessity be void of all positive religious and ethical training.

Rev. William L. Torrance, of St. Andrews' Memorial Episcopal church, holds that the amendment is inimical to education and a violation of American principles.

Rev. George Lahe, of Epiphany Episcopal church, says, "I am against any such shortsighted, ill-digested, illogical attempt to impose unworkable theories on the body public."

Rev. Ludwig Havel, of Holy Trinity Lutheran church, declares that "the passage of the amendment would mean bigger school taxes for all, and it could close schools that pay particular attention to educating the heart of the child."

Rev. Philip Schenk, of Christ church, Dearborn, states, "I am against the nationalization of children, which this amendment implies. Besides, the amendment would close institutions that maintain high standards and are of inestimable value in the mental and moral training of our youth."

"If liberty means freedom to worship God according to one's conscience, it also means freedom to have children taught how and whom to worship," says Rev. Harold Snartt of St. Barnabas Episcopal church.

Rev. H. T. Weber, of St. Mathews English Luthern church, argues, "Parents have a right to say whether their children shall be taught religion or not and what form of religion they shall be taught; and inasmuch as the state is in no position to supply religious education in a form which would be satisfactory to all, it is necessary that church schools and independent schools should be allowed to do so."

Rev. Lynn Harold Hough, pastor of Central Methodist Episcopal church, aserts, "No group should be deprived of rights which are inherent in citizenship in our United States" and that, therefore, he is opposed to the proposed amendment.

Other clergymen, who have voiced their opposition to the amendment are: Rev. Gaius Glen Atkins, First Congregational church; Dr. Russell H. Bready, West Grand Boulevard Methodist church; Rev. S. S. Marquis, St. Joseph Episcopal church; Rev. Minot C. Morgan, Fort Street Presbyterian church; Rt. Rev. Herman Page, Episcopal Bishop; Rev. Morton C. Pearson, Executive Secretary, Detroit Council of Churches; Rev. Augustus P. Reocord, First Unitarian church; Rev. Henry J. Veldman, First Reformed church and others.

PARENTAL RIGHTS

"I believe in the parents' right to send their children to any school, tax supported or non-tax supported, providing the school meets all of the state's requirements as to housing, sanitary and other material conditions and the minimum state requirements as to ability, training and experience of its teachers."—Mrs. E. L. Calkins, state president, W. C. T. U.

LaFollette secured the passage of the law creating the railroad commission of Wisconsin, which provided for the physical valuation of the railroads, gave the commission power to regulate rates and charges and saved to the consumers of Wisconsin $3,000,000 a year.

LaFollette secured the passage of the corrupt practices act, designed to purify caucuses and elections.

This brief survey of his stewardship as governor of Wisconsin may be taken as an earnest of the lines of policy he would follow if chosen a nation's executive. His recent platform suggestions are in line of greater regulation of monopoly, of a larger voice of the people in their own government, of old-fashioned honesty and integrity in administration of affairs, of higher ideals in public service

CHRISTMAS SEALS COME HERE FROM DENMARK

DANISH POSTAL CLERK HEARS SANTA WHISPER PLAN TO HELP TUBERCULOUS.

When Santa Claus was looking for someone to give the first Christmas Seal to the world, he picked on this big benevolent Nordic as a perfect personification of himself. On Christmas Eve, 1903, Einar Holboell, a postal clerk in a small Danish town, stopped a minute to hear Santa whisper in his ear the plan of selling penny stickers to help tuberculous children.

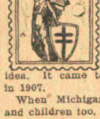
His enthusiasm for a plan which would benefit humanity brought men of distinction and influence to his cause. A committee was formed. Mail clerks agreed to work overtime to sell the seals. The people of Denmark liked the idea. It came to the United States in 1907.



When Michigan men and women, and children too, buy Christmas Seals, they are but carrying on Holboell's happy holiday thought which has since brought health and smiles to the faces of hordes of children, men and women, among people of every race, color and condition throughout the civilized world. A German "Beast"

Hanover, Germany, has the murder sensation of the world in the shape of a degenerate who it is claimed has butchered 26 men in the most devilish style. The news of the trial has stirred all Germany and in fact there is no country on the globe but is wondering end speculating on the outcome. December 19th in the German courts this human monster was sentenced to the block by the judge who was also moved to pass the death sentence on the first man's accomplice. Both men must pay the penalty and it is peculiarly interesting to consider that two countries of the old world today still retain the old punishment of beheading. Germany has for centuries used this form in the crudest style by hand and France does it by means of the guillotine.

This German murderer by name ri z Haarman, is a peculiar comin tion of shrewdness, cunning nd degeneracy, and it is said he welcomes the headsman's axe. "I go to the decapitation block joyfully and happily" he is quoted as saying. "Don't send me to the insane asylnm" he pleaded "I would rather not live" and judging from what we have learned of German insane asylums he is about correct in his taste. One notable incident of the trial was the statements of the attorney for the defense who deplored the tendency of German newspapers to advertise the crime as possible only in Germany. He called the attention of the court to the famous Leopold and Loeb case in Chicago as being fully as notorious, an unfortunate circumstance when criminal specialists in other lands point with shame to our own country.

The attorney pleaded that Haarmann was the "master mind" in the series of murders and that Grans was but his tool, who did not know the real purpose of luring the young men to Haarmann's room.

Fritz Haarmann, a Hanover butcher, was shown at his trial to be a criminal degenerate, who lured men and boys to his lodgings and there killed them by tearing their throats with his teeth and sucking their blood.

The crimes were committed in his room in the top story of a decrepit tenement house facing the River Leine, and the bodies were disposed of by throwing them into the stream. Many human bones were fonnd when the bed of the river was dragged after his arrest early last summer.

The testimony at the trial which aroused intense horror throughout Germany, was revolting, much of it to the extent that witnesses were heard behind closed doors. Among the aliegations was that the murderer as a butcher had offered his customers human flesh for consumption.

His accomplice, Grans, was charged with encouraging Haarmann in his crimes and of buying the clothing of the victims.

Ford's New Enterprise

Ever since he acquired the Detroit Toledo and Ironton Railroad Henry Ford has been busily engaged in cutting off useless appendages in the shape of overpaid employees, useless figureheads of departments etc., and now that he has the line trimmed down to his taste he is beginning on the motive power. If you have ever noticed Henry's locomotives all have a personality of their own—inasmuch as every one of them are kept spick and span, so much so they look like new. All cylinder heads are nickeled and other parts are very nicely kept. All of this seems like a white elephant on the hands of other roads but it has its purpose. Now Mr. Ford has entered into the building of giant electric locomotives, the most powerful in the world, each with 28 drive wheels, so arranged that they can run ahead or back with no difficulty. It is claimed these mammoths are capable each of dragging 150 loaded freight cars, an achievement which has never been accomplished by steam power The new electric locomotive is one hundred feet in length and has 14 main axles all drivers, and is finished in good shape on the inside so that the crew can ride in comfort, Ford undoubtedly has the world beaten inasmuch as the new contrivance is much more economical in upkeep, less damaging to road bed and rails and has more tractive power than a steam locomotive. Added to this is the great economy of operation. The current can be supplied either from overhead wires or from charged rails beneath where it is safe to do so. It is likely Mr. Ford plans to electrify his railroad as fast as possible more especially within short distances of Detroit. And while the Detroit, Toledo and Ironton has not been a heavy dividend payer from the start, there are better times ahead.

Granges To Sing At M. A. C. Farmers Week

Local Granges from all parts of Michigan will compete in a special rural community singing contest at the M. A. C. on Wednesday, Feb. 4, in connection with the annual Farmers Week at the college,

The contest, which will be the first of its kind, is to become an annual event. An endowment fund given by Mr. R. E. Olds, of Lansing, will provide cash prizes from year to year, the contests to be M. A. C.

The various local Granges in the state were considered best organized to put on a singing contest on short notice, and so were invited by the college to stage the Farmers Week event, the first under the Olds Fund.

Each Grange entering must have not less than eight singers, and just as many above that number as possible. Each group will sing three songs, one of which is to be "America". The cash prizes for the three winners will be seventy five, sixty, and forty five dollars, while a fifteen dollar award will be made to each group scoring sixty points or more in the contest. Recognized musical judges will preside over the awarding of prizes.

Entry blanks were mailed out this week, and a large number of local Granges are looked for when the master of ceremonies starts the songfest on February 4th.

M. A. C. Students Win Poultry Judging Cup

First place in student poultry judging at the National Poultry Show, held recently at the Coliseum, in Chicago, was won by the team from the M. A. C. composed entirely of Michigan boys.

Competing against men from fifteen other states, the local judges went through to first place by consistent work all through the various events.

The men on the winning team were C. E. Norton, Tekonsha; R. E. Meek, Manton; and F. H. Williamson, Pontiac. Williamson was also high man among all individuals. The team was coached by Professor Card, acting head of the M. A. C. poultry department.

Farm Short Course Graduates Get Jobs

That graduates of the special winter agricultural courses at the M. A. C. are in demand for positions in the various phases of the farming industry for which they prepare, is shown by a survey recently completed by R. W. Tenney, director of the winter school.

The "short course" work is said to be of a very practical nature, essential instruction being condensed into the few weeks the courses run. A half dozen of these special courses open at M. A. C. on January 5, running for from four to twelve weeks, according to the course. Any resident of the state over 16 years of age is eligible for admission.

Eleven of the 18 graduates of the dairy production course a year ago went out as cow testers, and all made good, according to the college dairy department. Graduates of the dairy manufacturers courses won first prizes at the Michigan State Fair last summer in both butter and cheese classes. Graduates of the poultry, horticultural, beekeeping, and farm engineering and general agricultural courses also find positions of merit quickly, according to the survey. Information regarding the above courses, all of which open on January 5, may be had by writing to: Director Short Courses M. A. C., East Lansing.

The American flag which flew over Fort McHenry during the bombardment by the British and which inspired Francis Scott Key to write "The Star Spangled Banner," is preserved in the Smithsonian Institution at Washington. There were originally fifteen stars in the union, but one was cut out and presented to President Lincoln.

ZONA GALE

URGES WOMEN TO BACK LA FOLLETTE

Zona Gale, Distinguished Authoress, Says He Has Earned Their Support.

By ZONA GALE
Author of "Miss Lulu Bett" and Winner of Pulitzer Prize.

It was only after living for five years in New York, where I had an association afar off with the great humanitarians and social workers of the country, that I awoke to the fact that in my own state LaFollette had been fighting their fight almost single-handed. Plenty of remedial agencies were at work, but these were not their concern, nor his. His magazine was in my home—my mother and father had understood and revered him; and I shall not forget my naive astonishment when I opened that magazine casually and saw there so passionately advocated the labor legislation and the social measures which I had been feebly trying to follow. If he had dealt in remedies the powerful machine would not have questioned him. It is when the good Samaritan tries to find out the identity of the thieves among whom the traveler fell that the trouble begins. Who cares how much his wounds are bound up with oil and wine, so long as the thieves make their escape?

Senator LaFollette is first of all a great humanitarian, a believer in the infinite worth of the human being, and in the "infinite improvability of the human race." That the greatest business of the human being, like that of all other life, is to grow, is a fact which has been hidden from the majority of politicians, but Robert LaFollette miraculously knows it. And all his political life, whenever he has seen a man or group of men seated comfortably on a stone beneath which other human beings struggle to live, he has tried to move either the man or the stone, and sometimes both.

LaFollette, the Candidate.

This is why, if ever there was a candidate who deserved the support of the women of the United States, it is Robert LaFollette. Not chiefly because he has always stood for them and championed woman suffrage 20 years before it was respectable to do so. Not chiefly because he was one of the first governors to appoint women to state boards. Not because he has so consistently fought for the cause of the woman in industry. But because, in some clairvoyant fashion, he understands the value of human life above that of every commodity; understands, too, the pathos and the passion of its heroic climb. It is women who have always known its value best. But they have been inarticulate. Not even in terrible moments—of disaster to their husbands, the workers, or to themselves as workers, or conscription of their sons, or in the waste of war or the battles of peace have they often been able to say to their governments: "You talk always about property. What about the cost to us? What about human life? What about our aspiration for our children?"

He campaigned for suffrage, which was lost in Wisconsin in 1912; and years before that, as governor, he, with Mrs. LaFollette, opened the executive residence to the delegates to a state suffrage campaign, when all that the public and press as a whole had for them was ridicule. Which is a reminder that if Mrs. LaFollette goes to the White House she will be one of the first women there whose grasp of economic conditions is keen. Also, she is a member of the Wisconsin bar and a brilliant orator.

Foe of War and Monopoly.

I believe that all women, and all other believers in internationalism, would elect Robert LaFollette if only they could be made to understand how intimately allied are private monopoly and war. If only they would imagine the absurdity, the impossibility of Ramsay MacDonald, premier of England, and Robert LaFollette, President of the United States, blundering into a war with each other's countries, or with anybody else's country. The platform says "except in case of actual invasion." Can anybody imagine either of these men failing to use their brains to quiet the profiteers who are back of a war?

In the lives of this generation there has never been such a chance to serve democracy by living for it for three months.

LAWYERS CONDEMN SCHOOL MEASURE

ATTACK CONSTITUTIONALITY OF PROPOSED EDUCATIONAL AMENDMENT

CALL IT UN-AMERICAN

Legal Authorities In All Parts of State Join to Safeguard Freedom

From legal authorities in all parts of Michigan there is coming a storm of condemnation of the proposed amendment to the state constitution, which, if adopted by the voters on Nov. 4, would abolish all private and church schools. Following are excerpts from letters received by the Michigan Association of Private and Church Schools Committees, which is leading the fight against the measure.

Henry M. Butzel, Detroit:—I regard the amendment as pernicious, un-American and unconstitutional. If it should carry, and I trust it will not, you may call upon me to give you any assistance possible in order to defeat it in the courts.

Stephen H. Wattles, Prosecuting Attorney, Kalamazoo County:—I feel that the proposed amendment is a terrible invasion on the liberty of the individual. It seems to me that the proposal is in line with the other intolerant legislation now being put forward and can only be construed as a part of the program of some of the organizations who are engaged in the present campaign of intolerance.

A. H. Brown, Niles:—If the amendment is not unconstitutional I do not know the test.

Harry W. Jackson, Prosecuting Attorney, Muskegon County:—Each of us is a free moral agent. Under the fundamental rights given us by the constitution, we are each entitled to freedom of thought, speech and worship, which certainly carries with it the right to parental and educational freedom. Under the Fourteenth Amendment, I do not believe the state can legally compel more than the standards of education.

Edgar G. Gordon, Monroe:—Unless the parent has a right to continuous determination of the question of religious education of the child, we shall have come near the standard of the Russian revolutionists, who have summed up their whole attitude toward religion, Christian standards, education and ideals in that false declaration, "Religion—the opiate of the people."

M. W. Underwood, Traverse City:—I consider the amendment unconstitutional and the tampering with our state constitution as narrow, unfair, and a high-handed aim at the basic principles of the family rights and personal liberties vouchsafed by the founders of our government.

Guy A. Miller, Detroit:—As a citizen, I am opposed to this amendment, both on the grounds of expediency and principle. I am also strongly impressed with the idea that it is an invasion of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States constitution, as being a deprivation both of liberty and property without due process of law.

John F. Baker, Flint:—I believe the amendment would be held to be unconstitutional. This opinion is based on my study of cases involving the construction of the constitution in many other similar acts that have gone before the courts for construction, and their decisions based upon a fair and liberal interpretation of the fundamental law of the land.

Virgil A. Fitch, Prosecuting Attorney, Mason County:—The schools may be public but the child is not. The state may require the attainment of a reasonable standard of education in all schools, but freedom of education, aside from this should be unlimited.

Herbert F. Goodrich, Ann Arbor:—This is pernicious legislation, masquerading as a means to better Americanism, while it embodies the very opposite in its intolerance and unnecessary interference with individual freedom. It throws the highly gifted child, the cripple, the nervous child, the backward child, the stammerer, the invalid, all into a public school system that has difficulty, however well managed, in providing facilities and teachers for boys and girls requiring no special or individual attention.

Francis T. McDonald, Sault Ste Marie:—The amendment, aside from its vicious tendencies, is clearly unconstitutional.

George S. Lovelace, Muskegon:—I do not believe the proposed school amendment should be adopted. It is wrong and is a step backward to the bigotry and intolerance of the Middle Age.

Torval E. Strom, Escanaba:—So long as the private schools furnish the children attending them with an education equal in standard to that provided by public schools, I am firmly of the opinion that the amendment is wrong in principle, and unsound under American theories of self-government.

A. B. Goodwin, Carson City:—Article XI of the constitution guarantees that the "means of education shall forever be encouraged." I believe the proposed amendment to be in conflict with it and void.

Knocking Down the Fences

Patriotism too frequently feeds upon the superiority complex; unless we think ill of the other peoples of other countries we do not believe we are loyal to our own country. In our teaching of patriotism we have the superlatives in describing our own ideals and institutions as the best, finest, greatest; which leads our young people to despise or discredit the gift which other nations have had put into their keeping.

Too frequently in these strife ridden days, we believe we cannot be good Protestants unless we hate the Catholics, and many ministers have found this to be the one appeal to which they receive ready response; so have enlarged upon the ills of the Catholic Church, thus unconsciously growing unfair in their comparison and untruthful in their statements. If the Catholic Church and its clergy were half as bad as they are often said to be, they could not have stood the nearly two thousand years of which they have served, inadequately no doubt, the Kingdom of God.

A fair appraisal of the doctrines of the Catholic Church, honest criticism of its methods, and resistance to its encroachments upon the functions of civil authority, are possible, without overstepping the bounds of the truth or fighting it with dirty weapons.

One can even be a good Methodist, loyal to the inspiration received from both Christ and John Wesley, and at the same time see the good as well as the ill of the Roman Catholic Church, without stooping to vile slander or inflaming the passions of an un-Christian mob.

It is possible also, to be loyal American without despising the Japanese, or if you please, hating the Germans.

It is possible to believe that our institutions and our growing culture are the best for us, without decrying the values of those which have grown up on another soil.

It is possible to have faith in the Capitalistic System without believing that everyone who protests against its ills is a Bolshevik.

BLIND, FANATICAL LOYALTY

The greatest hindrance to straight thinking is a blind, fanatical loyalty to one's own group. It lies in the fact that a mind poisoned by hate, believes the unbelievable reason becomes submerged in a wave of emotion, and civilized man sinks back to the level of primitive man, if not to that of the beast.

This was strongly illustrated by this generation's experience during the great war. If I were the Almighty and wanted to punish the war makers, and those who fanned the flames with breaths of hate, I would have them all—historians, lectures, and ministers of the Gospel, read their own books lecturers and sermons, throughou eternity. Hell could hold no more terrible punishment, for sensitive souls at least.

Men became atrocity mongers, distorters of a few facts, libelers of the whole human race. They did it to be loyal. To die for one's country, to strike and be struck fairly and heroically, may bring an immortal halo. To lie for one's country leaves a bad odor like that of a putrid sore. The wound is self inflicted, and the integrity of the human spirit is lacerated, which nothing but repentance and the forgiveness of God can heal.

We endowed our enemies with super human power; they were everywhere, could do everything with a super diabolic quality, which could do the impossible wicked things.

KEEPING POISON ACTIVE

This did not help to win the war, except perhaps that momentarily it fanned the fires of hate, which ultimately was the greatest damage the war inflicted. The hate opened deep chasms in the human souls and filled them with poison. Mankind is suffering from its effects now, more than from the depreciated currency, the redrawing of boundaries, or the premature death of ten million vigorous young.

The poison engendered then is at work now in our country which is fast drifting into civil conflict. Let the following suffice to illustrate how great the evil has grown.

A graduate of a college, a woman who teaches history in a city high school, told me at the time when the Non Partisans League was controlling the legislature in North Dakota, that a law was passed there, nationalizing women. I was horrified and asked her if she knew what that meant; she didn't quite know, but she knew it was so.

Here then, a college graduate, a teacher of history believed that men in their senses, men who are the most selfish mates of all animals, wanting their mates for themselves—that they passed a law making their wives and daughters common property. She believed or at least circulated a story, which implies that women, the most loyal mates, who zealously guard their privilege and their honor, would permit themselves to belong to any man at his will. She said: no matter if I didn't believe it, her brother told her, and he lived in North Dakota, and hates the non Partisan League, one believes everything about the object of his hate, even those things which are patently impossible.

Norway Pine Has Bumper Crop

A bumper crop of Norway pine cones this fall has kept the seed extraction plant of the Cloquet Forest Experiment Station busy ever since the cones came piling in to the total of over 500 bushels. In the Lake States Norway Pine has proved itself to be an excellent tree when planted on a large scale for forest purposes, according to Federal foresters. The main difficulty with raising the tree in the nursery has been the high cost of seed due to its scarcity. The Norway pine bears cones only at intervals of several years. The present large crop is therefore a matter of considerable interest to all engaged in reforestation projects. Most of the cones sent for extraction at Cloquet come from the Minnesota State Forest Service and the seed produced will be used in the state nurseries.

A bushel of Norway pine cones yields roughly a pound of seed, according to local estimates. The seeds are small and light and run from 55,000 to 70,000 to the pound of which, in the case of good average seed, about 85 to 90 per cent can be counted on to germinete under normal conditions. This means something like 39,000,000 little Norway pines growing up in the Minnesota State Forests in the next few seasons from the seed extracted this year at Cloquet.

White Pine is Coming Back

Although western white pine has in many localities earned a reputation for successful reproduction naturally following a single fire, no metter how severe the burn may have been. it appeared to U. S. Forest Service officers in the "upper St. Joe country" north of Avery Idaho, that an exception to the rule was evident there. Following the 1910 fire that swept through the region at the head of the St. Joe River. local foresters reported that the white pine appeared not to be reproducing at all, and that nothing but relatively inferior lodge pole pine was replacing the old original white pine, fir and larch forests. However, records made in the St. Joe country the past summer by a member of the station, indicates that even here white pine is running true to form.

In a more painstaking examination than it had previously been possible to give this tract, quite a lot of white pine was found coming in. This is only 6 to 36 in. tall at present and is largely hidden by the brush, whereas the young lodge pole pines are already up seven or eight feet. It is believed that enough white pine is present to restock the burned area generously except possibly for severely dry south and west slopes. Such restocking promises well for the perpetuation of this valuable and rapid growing species.

Sixty-seven Logs to the Car

A pulp and paper company in the lower Columbia River region recently set the new record of timber utilization by using hemlock logs so small that 77 could be loaded on one logging car, reports T. T. Munger of the Pacific Forest Experiment Station. This record was made in the course of relogging a forest that not long ago had all the timber taken out that could be profitably hauled with big donkey and high lead logging, says the experiment station. The company is now getting out some 10,000 feet per acre additional with a Lidgerwood skyline skidder capable of bringing in the little hemlock trees tops and small pieces of spruce, as many as six at a time being handled with this rigging. These are loaded upon specially constructed cars accommodating usually 30 to 35 pieces to the car. This in at least one instance 77 hemlock logs were loaded shows how small many of them were. Indeed, small logs even down to four inches at the top, are being taken.

Rafted down to the mill, this material makes as good paper as the larger material—in some cases better, say the paper makers. At the same time the relogged area is being left in admirable shape from a fire-protection stand-point. This according to foresters is good fire protection, good conservation and good forestry.

In connection with this article, we note that the State of Michigan is after many years of talking, taking steps to re-forest the desolate lands and sand areas in various parts of the state, Gov. Groesbeck has caused several thousand dollars to be appropriated to carry on the work.

The school attendance officer went to a house over on the west side and interviewed the woman bending over the wash tub. "And how many children have you altogether?" he asked. "Well, there's Harry and Olive and Anna and James, and Willie and Neil, and Grace and Tim, and Joseph and Jane and Tom and John and Leonard and Elsie, and Horace, and—" and here she stopped for breath and the officer who was hadn't been able to get his for some time gasped out "Cotton Cæsar! Wait till I get another pencil." Finally he told her it would do if she gave him the number. "Number indeed" said the woman wiping her dripping handa on her apron, "we aint got 'em numbered. We haven't run out of names yet, by a long way."

Is It Too Much Lew

One of the causes of lawlessness in this country is that there are too many laws. The more laws there are the more chance there is of people breaking them. But the trouble with most laws seems to be that no sooner are they on the statute book than some one comes along with another law calculated to sap and undermine them and render them innocuous or useless.

A gentleman by the name of Bumble once declared in a moment of irritation that the "law was an ass"—which was rather a sweeping statement, as Bumble included all law in his classification. But if Bumble was right, it only goes to ahow that the law only partakes of the assigninity of its makers. But even so, as long as a law stands on the statute book it ought to be respected. And if it is not a good law, no shorter way of proving its fitness can be found than of enforcing it.

Every state upon analysis of its statutes, weuld find many enactments that have become obsolete, or have proved impracticable. A judicious reading up of the accumulated legislation of the last hundred years or so might do much to clear the way for a better state of things. What is good and sound and workable may be retained, and all that makes for the public good.

That there is an alarming slackness in the administration of the law in this country cannot be denied. There are too many sources of defeating justice which are get at-a-ble by those interested. Pressure is brought to bear in quarters where it should never be tolerated, and in many cases goes unpunished. Better to have a few laws that are effective and properly enforced, than a conglomeration of half baked legislarion that is worse than useless.—Dearborn Inpependent.

PEOPLE WOULD PAY IF RAILROADS WERE GOVERNMENT OWNED

Third Party Plan Would Take Revenue From States Involved.

If the railroads of the United States should be taken over, owned and operated by the government, the vast taxes now paid by the railroads would have to be paid by the people, according to Will R. Wood, member of congress from Indiana and chairman of the Republican National Congressional committee. Mr. Wood has made a careful analysis of the situation, noting the tax payments by the railroads to the several state governments last year.

If the roads were owned by the government they would be tax free just as the post offices now are. The states would still need the money, just as they do now, and as a result additional taxes would have to be levied on the citizens.

Mr. Wood's complete analysis follows:

"Robert M. LaFollette, the Socialist-third party candidate for President, is trying to convince 6,000,000 farmers that the surest cure for their ills is to bring about government ownership of all the railroads in the country; that, if this is done, transportation rates of all kinds would be immediately reduced.

"There are a lot of things, however, that would transpire if this scheme were carried out, that Senator LaFollette is woefully silent upon. He is not telling the farmers that the government pays no taxes on its properties and that it would pay no taxes on the railroads of the country if it owned them. He is not telling them that the railroads are paying into the various county and state treasuries of the United States more than $300,000,000 annually, which sum would have to be paid, in large part, by the farmers, once the government began the ownership of the railroads.

"Take the state of Wisconsin for instance: Last year the railroads paid the state of Wisconsin $7,321,976 in taxes. In the state of Minnesota the railroads paid, last year, a total tax to the state of $8,425,982. In Iowa they paid $6,849,703; in Kansas, $6,739,346; in Indiana, $13,094,627. In these five states alone the railroads paid $42,431,634 of the public tax burden. I have taken the figures in the above named states because they are largely agricultural and in the event that the government became the owner of the railroads of the country the farmers of these states would have to bear the greatest part of the burden in paying these additional taxes.

"In the state of Iowa if the LaFollette scheme were carried out, it would mean an increase of $32 in taxes annually levied against each farm in the state, or $2.80 for each man, woman and child in the state. In Kansas the burden would be $40 against each farm or $3.90 for each resident of that state. In Minnesota, where Mr. LaFollette is making a strong appeal for votes, he would take away from the farmer, under the government ownership plan, a tax income now paid by the railroads and place it as an additional assessment of $47 against each farm in the state, or $3.80 against each person residing in that commonwealth.

"I am told that, in one county in Montana, the total tax paid by the railroads amounts to 38.51 per cent of the entire levy. In midsummer of this year there was $104,102 of the total tax assessed in that county delinquent, upon which a penalty had been laid. This is convincing evidence that this county was already taxed much more than it was able to pay. Yet Mr. LaFollette would take away 38½ per cent of the tax revenue of this county, now being paid by the railroads, and place it as an additional burden upon the individual taxpayer.

"In my own state of Indiana, the railroads pay $13,094,627 in taxes annually. The total tax of the state is $124,860,790. The railroads share of this tax is over 10 per cent. If Mr. LaFollette's scheme were put into effect, the individual taxpayer of Indiana would have to pay this additional sum of $13,094,627 each year. In Marion county the railroads pay annually $715,388 in taxes, a very substantial item in the total of the taxes paid in that county.

"The figures that I have given, applicable to the five agricultural states named, differ only in degree from those that might be given for every other state in the Union.

"Not only would the farmers be burdened by the payment of these additional taxes, should the government become the owners of the railroads, but they would also have an additional burden to bear, the size of which it is hard to ascertain, in the shape of deficits occurring in the operation of the railroads of the country for maintenance, extensions and upkeep.

"Some idea of what this burden would be, may be had, however, by recalling the experience during the period of government operation of the railroads under the management of William G. McAdoo, when the amount of the deficit over the earnings of those railroads taken over by the government was more than a million dollars a day, exclusive of the payment of exorbitant salaries to an army of officers.

"The farmers of this country, before they accept the panacea of government ownership of railroads, which is but a forerunner of the socialistic state, will do well to 'Stop, Look and Listen.'"

LA FOLLETTE'S AN INSPIRING STORY

Ambition, Fidelity and Honesty Principal Factors in His Success.

By FRED L. HOLMES
Newspaper Correspondent and Magazine Writer.

The career of Robert M. LaFollette is an inspiring story of success due to heroic efforts and faith in one's self, combined with unswerving devotion to principle. Before he entered the senate and thus became a prominent national figure, he had already done a notable work.

Born June 14, 1855, in Primrose, Wis., of French-Huguenot and Scotch-Irish ancestry, he is a product of the people and knows as a part of his life their point of view.

At eighteen he left the farm to obtain a university education. He earned his way through the university.

On graduation he studied law and in seven months was admitted to the bar and immediately elected district attorney of Dane county. He made such a remarkable record in his first term that he ran 1,500 votes ahead of his ticket in the next election and was the only Republican on the county ticket re-elected.

Youngest Member of Congress.

Entering the house of representatives in 1885 as its youngest member, LaFollette, by the sheer force of his gifted personality, soon became a member of the powerful ways and means committee, of which William McKinley was chairman. Before his service ended in 1891 he was a national figure by reason of his stand for the rights of the Indians, his fight for legislation to prevent the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine for butter and his conspicuous service in the preparation and passage of the original interstate commerce act and the McKinley tariff act.

Brined Vegetables

The bureau of home economics of the Department of Agriculture has recently co-operated with the bureau of chemistry in tests on the utilization of brined vegetables. Brining has long been used as an easy method of preserving various vegetables for use in pickles. These tests showed, however, that green tomatoes and green peppers could be kept successfully in brine for as long as six months and then be used in a number of new ways. Mock mince meat, bordeaux sauce and pickle were all made from the green tomatoes, and the peppers were satisfactory for stuffing.

Radium Rays From Animals

Living plants and animals are radioactive, giving out rays like radium, according to Albert Nodon, French scientist, says Popular Science Monthly. Recently Nodon exhibited three photographic plates on each of which were unmistakable light impressions. These, he asserted, were caused by the rays emitted by a radioactive mineral, an insect and a green leaf that had been placed on the emulsion side of the plates in a dark room.

Traced to Fourth Century

Archbishop Trench says the proverb that one should not "look a gift horse in the mouth" is as old as Jerome of the Fourth century, who, when some one found fault with certain writings of his, replied that they were free-will offerings, and that it did not behoove one to look a gift horse in the mouth.

To Ellen the air seemed suddenly thick and soft: she felt it pressing against her.

"No—wait a minute, Auntie!—George—and Joe, too—come in here—don't go!" she stammered. She half-dragged, half-led them into the little parlor. "All stay," she said in a dry whisper. Joe had run for a glass of water, and now beside the chair into which George had put her, and held it to her lips. "Thanks, dear," she whispered. Her eyes moved about from face to face, and her lips moved drily. Then suddenly she made a great struggle, as if for air.

"My God, she's dying!" Mrs. Baldwin exclaimed But Ellen herself answered her:

"No, auntie—no, I'm all right!" And tightening one hand on Joe's, and with the other clinging to George, she said at last: "I've found out who did it, George! I know who fired that shot!"

A silence spread like a fog over the little sitting-room They all looked at her without speaking

"I'll tell you about it—" Ellen said, after another drink of water. "It happened—I mean my learning about it—half an hour ago. But I didn't dare do anything until George got here." She had so far recovered her composure that she could rise now, and she spoke in an almost normal tone. "George," she said, "I want you to sit here, and Joe and auntie, will you go back into the back room: just behind the curtains, so that you can hear everything?" And, as they bewilderedly but eagerly obeyed her instructions, she stepped to the hall door, and called "Lizzie!"

Immediately Lizzie came downstairs, as white as Ellen was, with Tommy clinging to her hand. The little boy came running in to his mother, and Ellen caught him in her arms.

"Here's Uncle George, dear!" she said. Tommy indifferently felt himself drawn between the man's knees. George looked dazed at Ellen. "Now, Tom," his mother said casually, "I want you to do something for me. And if you do it nicely, I'm going to read to you for—one—whole—hour—tonight!"

"Will you really, moth?" Tommy asked, his eyes dancing.

"Yes, I truly will. Tommy, I want you to tell Uncle George about that night at Wheatley Hills, when you came down—you know—tell him all about it!"

Tommy was looking at her with a guilty child's doubt of his reception.

"Grandpa told me to!" he asserted, in self-defense. "I was a captain, and he told me to!"

George glanced at Ellen: they exchanged one look.

"I was telling Tommy a little about the reason why we left Wheatley Hills," Ellen explained. "And he told me why he liked Wheatley Hills. Go on, dear."

Tommy, encircled by George's arm had his mouth close to the man's ear. He spoke in a half-proud, half shamed voice.

"I said I was sorry about grandpa, because I liked to play in his study! And I said he let me fire his pistol."

And the man and woman exchanged a look of consternation.

"Come! A kid like you couldn't fire a real pistol," George said scoffingly.

"Well, I did fire it!" Tommy burst out boastfully. "With two fingers on the trigger! I said I was a captain and he said I oughtenter be afraid of my gun. I fired it two times. He told me to!" Tommy illustrated with a dramatic gesture.

Ellen saw George swallow, with a dry throat. She heard him whisper "My God!"

"But, Tom—how's that? You mean to tell me you fired the revolver like that about the room?" he asked the child.

"Well-a," Tommy stammered, "it never went off those first two times; it didn't make any noise. And he said 'Good boy, old Tommy!'"

Ellen caught a quick breath. She had heard him call the child that a hundred times.

"He said 'Good boy!'" George repeated, "and then you pointed at him?"

"No, then he told me about spies. He told me all about them. And then I said, 'If you were a spy, grandpa, I'd fix you!' And he said, 'All right. I'm a spy. I surrender.' And he said to me I must say, 'Have you anything to say for—that—,'" Tommy stumbled. "Why he shouldn't be shot, you know," he explained.

"I see," George said, glancing at Ellen.

"So I said that, and he said no, he didn't have, and I took the pistol again and shot at him. But that time," Tommy went on serenely, "it did go off! I thought it had burst. And some smoke came out. And grandpa sat—like this—"

He dropped into a chair in terrible verisimilitude to the still form they had found in the study three months ago. Ellen glanced again at George: he was as pale as she.

"And then what, Tom?"

"Then I went over to him, and shook his arm, and he didn't wake up. I thought he was fooling. And I took the pistol and threw it away in the basket. I said: 'Grandpa, please wake up!' but he wouldn't. So I ran to the door and called for Lizzie. I called seventy or twenty-five times, I guess."

"I see. I see, of course, but tell me," said George, "where was Lizzie?"

"Why, she was up in mother's room. I wasn't sure that grandpa was fooling, though maybe he was. I was afraid purraps I'd hurt him—"

"Then why didn't you run and tell mother at once if you thought so?"

"Well-a I didn't think I could have hurt him much because he didn't say 'Ouch' or anything," Tommy elucidated cheerfully. "And then I thought maybe Lizzie would be cross at me for getting out of bed."

"Getting out of bed?"

"Yes, when I went downstairs. But she was still in mother's room when I got upstairs, so I got into bed and thought I'd tell her grandpa wanted to see her when she came back."

"And why didn't you, Tommy?"

"I don't remember. I guess I went to sleep."

"And what made you go downstairs in the first place, Tommy?" his mother asked, her voice trembling in spite of her effort for control.

"I couldn't go to sleep because you and Lizzie were talking so loud and Lizzie was crying. I looked out into the hall, the door was open—and grandpa was there and I asked him what he was doing and he said he was sending a telegram—"

"Yes, that's perfectly correct," George said. "We found it on the hall table."

"So then he said, 'Come on down and pay me a visit, old scout!' and I went. And mother told me next day he was sick," Tommy went on pleasantly, as he worked busily with the swivel of George's watch chain, "so purraps that was when he was beginning to feel a little bit sick. If I was a spy, and they caught me," Tommy added vaingloriously, "I'd shoot so fast, and my horse would ride so fast, that I'd get away from them, whether they liked it or not! I'd—"

"Listen, Tom," George said. "Down at my place at Sands Point, do you know what I've got? I've got a shaggy little gentleman who came from the isle of Shetland—"

"A pony!" Tommy whispered, his eyes alight. "Mother, has he really got a pony?" he asked, digging his dark hair into his mother's shoulder, and smiling in bashful delight.

"I suppose he has," Ellen answered, smiling.

"And that pony," George said impressively, "will be your pony if you'll do something for me.

Tommy glanced at his mother, actually pale with joy.

"Mother—he is going to give me that pony!" he said, on an excited breath. "Oh, mother, can I have a pony? He can stay at Hewlett's," he decided swiftly. "Until we can have a little stable built for him! I could build it—or if a man came to do some of it, I could help him. All you need is planks and nails—"

"But how about doing something for me?" George asked.

"Sure!" said Tommy, in the manlike, careless voice befitting the owner of a pony. "I'll do anything."

"I want you to come over to Mineola with mother and me," George said. "And tell all this to a man there—a friend of mine—all about your grandfather, you know, and the whole thing!"

"Why?" asked Tommy, round-eyed.

"That's just what I don't want you to ask, Tommy, and just what I can't very well explain to you. I don't ask you why you want this pony," George said pointedly. "Now, this man will ask you lots of questions," he went on, "and you must answer them. And if you can't remember anything, just say so."

"All right!" Tommy agreed indifferently. "Has he got a saddle?"

"Mother's going to give you a saddle," Ellen promised. She called Lizzie. "Lizzie, will you take Tommy upstairs and read to him, and talk about the pony?" she asked, with a significant look. And when they were gone she turned to George, and she and George and Joe stared at each other.

"That is the most extraordinary thing that has come to me in the entire course of my profession," George said, slowly, as if he had been stunned. "I must get hold of Ryan at once. There's a point or two—what do you make of his saying he fired the pistol twice?"

"Lizzie's story agrees with that! She had loaded it with only one shell," Ellen supplied quickly. "All the chambers but one were empty;"

"It was like the old man—I could hear his voice," George mused, "'I surrender!' If I can get hold of Ryan! Ellen, could you take the child over there at once?"

"Anything—anywhere!" Her face clouded. "But, George, they won't take that baby into court—they won't cross-examine Tommy?"

"No—no!" he said, smiling. "He'll simply talk to him, and it will be taken down. You may trust Tommy to me."

"And, George—do you think?—is there any hope? Might they really clear Gibbs for a thing like this?"

He put a hand on her shoulder, as he stood looking fearfully up at him. Ellen never forgot the joy, the tenderness, the sympathy in his eyes.

"My dear girl—my dear girl—I think that in a few days Gibbs will walk into this house with you to have dinner with the captain and Aunt Elsie!"

The ecstasy of real hope, after the weeks of pretense! The joy of action and hurry after so many days when there had been nothing to do! It was a lowering winter day, but to Ellen it seemed as if the sun of June were shining.

It was a strange drive, over snowy roads, and between bare fields. It was Sunday, and in the villages young people were laughing and talking, as they lounged about station platforms and candy stores.

Tommy talked incessantly, and everybody talked to Tommy with unusual graciousness. Every foot of the eight-mile trip had long ago become drearily familiar to Ellen, on her daily drives to and fro, but it had never seemed as long as it did today.

"George," she said, at parting on the courthouse steps, "I had better not say anything to Gibbs?"

"I certainly would," he answered, after a moment's thought.

"Then—then you're pretty sure, George?"

They exchanged a long look. The man nodded.

"So sure," he answered, "that I would not take Tommy to see him today. I wouldn't have that association in Tommy's mind, it seems to me."

"Oh, George—but I can't believe it!" she said dizzily. "If anything happens now—I don't think I can bear it!"

"I don't think anything will, Ellen," he said in his quiet way. "Lizzie had better come with me, for they might keep us waiting, and I don't want Tommy to be frightened." He gave the child his hand. "Come on, Tommy!" he said. "You come with us, Lizzie, will you? By the way, what are you going to name your pony?"

Ellen watched them up the steps. Then she turned to Joe, and went quickly through the familiar doors and gates.

"Will you wait here, Joe?" she asked, as they came to a sort of central hallway where a sergeant sat reading at a desk.

"You haven't got the little boy?" the sergeant asked.

"No," she said, flustered. "I—we thought it better not to bring him!"

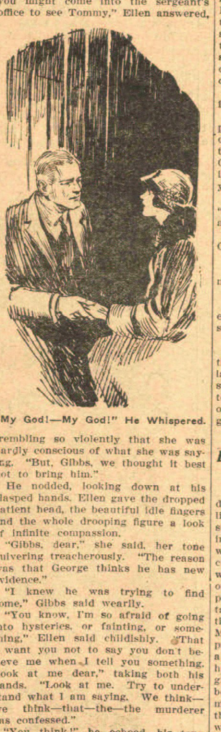
The man looked grave, came about his desk and said something in a low tone of which Joe only caught the words "tomorrow morning." Ellen answered with a nervous murmur of assent, and went hastily away, Joe watching her go: the big jail was very still in the winter afternoon.

She was familiar with every step of the way, now, the small corridor smelling of cement, the longer corridor beyond, the door of Gibbs' cell. It was unlocked for her, she always went inside.

He was sitting on his bed, in the narrow space, and she sat beside him. He looked ill and wretched, and did not rise as she came in, nor move except to raise his haggard eyes. The guard, at the door, walked away.

"Hello, dear," Gibbs said lifelessly. "Did Tommy come?"

"I had an order from the court that you might come into the sergeant's office to see Tommy," Ellen answered,



"My God!—My God!" He Whispered.

trembling so violently that she was hardly conscious of what she was saying. "But, Gibbs, we thought it best not to bring him."

He nodded, looking down at his clasped hands. Ellen gave the dropped patient head, the beautiful idle fingers and the whole drooping figure a look of infinite compassion.

"Gibbs, dear," she said, her tone quivering treacherously. "The reason was that George thinks he has new evidence."

"I knew he was trying to find some," Gibbs said wearily.

"You know, I'm so afraid of going into hysterics, or fainting, or something," Ellen said childishly. "That I want you not to say you don't believe me when I tell you something. Look at me dear," taking both his hands. "Look at me. Try to understand what I am saying. We think—we think—that—the—the murderer has confessed."

"You think!" he echoed, his tone suddenly harsh. "What do you mean? Don't you know?"

"We will know," she said, trembling. "We will know in a little while now. Gibbs, I'll tell you just how it all came about. Lizzie and Joe and Tommy came down from Bridgeport this morning, and it was while I was keeping Tommy quiet—for it's a long trip for a child—that he suddenly said something about grandpa. Lizzie and I were not listening exactly, but the words seemed to come back to me—as words do, you know, and I said, as quietly as I could, 'What did you say grandpa let you do?'

"He said, 'Fire his revolver.'" Ellen's words fell in a tense silence. Gibbs looked at her with awakening eyes.

"My God—my God!" he whispered.

"Well, we looked at him, and I was so afraid I'd frighten him, or make him self-conscious, that I could hardly get any voice. But Lizzie asked him when this was, and he told us the whole thing. That he had wandered to the top of the stairs in his nightgown, and grandpa was walking across the lower hall: he had just put a telegram on the hall table, for Torrens to take in the morning, and he called Tom down. Tommy said that he wanted to play with the chessmen, and he opened the table drawer—Gibbs, you would be amazed how clearly he told it! He said grandpa was sitting in that very chair, and Gibbs, he even took the attitude—! He said that he saw the pistol, and grandpa said, 'Take it out, Tommy, it's not loaded.'"

"He couldn't possibly have loaded it, dear, with dad looking on. And my father surely wouldn't have had it loaded—!"

"But, Gibbs, Lizzie had loaded it that morning!"

"G—d!" Gibbs said again, under his breath.

"And this part, Gibbs, is so strange! He fired it twice, your father directing him. He fired first at some target over the mantel, and then somewhere else—"

"Couldn't pull the trigger—!" Gibbs said breathlessly.

"Oh, indeed he did! He fired twice, but you see those chambers were empty. And, Gibbs, he says that grandpa said to him, 'Good old Tommy!' You remember how he used to say that? Then they had some talk about soldiers, and finally your father was a spy—and the amazing thing is, Gibbs, to hear Tommy tell it—every few minutes he would put in something that the testimony had developed, and Lizzie and I would look at each other! I couldn't realize it—the importance of it, but I knew George was on his way, and that he would know! Well, and then Tom got frightened, and he tried to rouse your father, and threw the pistol in the basket, and ran out and called for Lizzie. But Lizzie, of course, didn't hear. He wasn't sure whether your father was fooling or not, but the noise of the report frightened him. He was afraid he'd be scolded for getting out of bed and going downstairs so when he found Lizzie was not in the room, he got into bed and before she came in, he fell asleep. The next day, of course, we carefully kept any of the excitement from him—"

"What does George think about it?"

"Well, I don't know. But he telephoned the district attorney immediately, and Ryan is here now talking to George, and to Tommy. Oh, Gibbs—Gibbs!" she broke off feverishly. "It's made me— I can't tell you—so nervous!—I can't tell you—"

"I know!" he interrupted nervously. "We mustn't allow ourselves to think about it—!"

"Could a child Tommy's age testify, Gibbs?"

"I don't know, dear."

"And—if they believe this, does it mean a new trial?"

"It might, I don't know."

"We can only wait." Ellen tightened her fingers on his, and they sat silent.

A messenger came to the officer at the cell's door who spoke a moment later to Ellen. Would Mrs. Josselyn step into the warden's office a minute, to speak to Mr. Lathrop? Ellen, with one quick flutter of breath, smiled a goodby to Gibbs and was gone.

Early Locomotive Did Not Operate in Rain

Nearly all the great inventions and discoveries which have made modern life so wonderful and at the same time so strenuous have been produced within the last century. A huge step forward was made, something about a century ago, when the steam engine was adapted to haul trains of "wagons" on railroads. A copy of the Philadelphia Chronicle of that period contains this unique advertisement: Notice—The locomotive engine (built by Mr. W. Baldwin of this city) will depart daily when weather is fair with a train of passengers; on rainy days horses will be attached." This engine, "built by Mr. Baldwin," was the beginning of the great Baldwin locomotive works, which is now one of the biggest things of the kind in the world. Mr. Baldwin made the astonishing boast that his original engine would "draw 30 tons on a level road." Now a single freight car will hold twice that much.

Strength of Pigeons

The power of a pigeon has been investigated. French scientists recently made flying pigeons unwind a thread wrapped around a reel equipped with a brake, and measured their "horse power." A one-pound pigeon developed the equivalent of one horse power for thirty pounds weight. The experimenters complain, however, that the pigeons were evidently not doing their best.

Selected Best of All Traveling Companions

The Chinese have a fable of a man who was once summoned to appear for trial under an unjust accusation. The place where he was to be tried was far distant and the journey was long and hard. Just before starting, three disguised figures suddenly appeared and asked to accompany him.

Said the first, "I cannot promise to go with you all the way, but I will see that you have comfortable lodgings and plenty to eat and drink so long as I am with you." The second said, "I cannot promise you these things, but I assure you you shall have pleasant companionship, laughter and conversation so long as I am with you." The third said, "I cannot promise you money, nor even pleasant companionship, but I will go with you all the way, plead your cause before the judge, and testify on your behalf."

After listening to the offer of all these and weighing carefully their statements the poor man decided to choose the latter. Whereupon the disguises were removed and he found the first to be riches, the second his friends, and the third his virtues. Is there any doubt that his choice was wise?

Golden Ideas

I believe happiness comes out of doing things for other people. If all rich people knew the pleasure of giving or helping others they would do so. It is the best medicine I have ever taken. When I die I will leave only a little for my children. I have never figured up what I have given away in the last thirty years. I can not say how much I have left to give away. I know it is too much for me to keep and most of it will go.—Nathan Straus.

Argument Surely Must Have Impressed Jury

Col. Robert M. Thompson, president of the American Olympic committee, said on the America's arrival in New York:

"There was some trouble here and there during the games, of course, but those who growled the loudest were like the lawyer.

"This lawyer was defending a bully who had shot a revivalist in the leg, whereat the revivalist struck him in the face with a hymnal.

"'Gentlemen of the jury,' the lawyer said in low, sad tones, 'my client merely discharged his weapon'—a deprecatory shrug and gesture of the hands—toward the revivalist's leg when—voice raised in rage and horror—'when that bloody-minded miscreant, a disgrace to the cloth he wears, struck my unfortunate friend full in the face with a hymnal.'"

Valuable Knowledge

Girl scouts' headquarters in New York announce that almost 4,000 girl scouts passed tests as cooks last year. "Contrary to the usual opinion, not camping but home-making is the chief girl scout activity," says the national director. "Cooking heads the list of the 55 things for which merit badges were awarded, and 3,764 girls passed the examination under a domestic-science teacher. That means that nearly 4,000 girls know, among other things, how to build and regulate a fire in a coal or wood stove, how to select meat and prepare it for boiling, roasting or stewing, and how to plan the menus for a family, using left-overs for at least three dishes."—Youth's Companion.

Rail Vs. Motor Highways

Since 1831, when railroads began to be developed, only 263,031 miles of railroad tracks have been built. While automobiles have only been in the course of development on a commercial basis for barely twenty years, there are today more than 430,000 miles of surfaced or improved roads.

Hickory Has Rival

Woods found in certain parts of India are likely to become rivals of the American hickory, long preferred for ax and hammer handles. The government in India is making exhaustive tests of the Parrotia Jacquemontiana with particular reference to its ability to withstand strain, and results to date show that it compares favorably with hickory and it is now being cut on a commercial basis.

Gleaners Notified

In many places in England, where agricultural reaping machinery is not used, the gleaner's bell may still be heard in harvest days. The bell notifies the village folk that they may begin to glean the fields. It is rung from the church tower as soon as harvesting is sufficiently advanced for gleaning to be permissible.

"You can't change the world so change yourself" was the title of an article in the American magazine written by Dr. Frank Crane and even though we have a great deal of respect for Dr. Crane's ideas, here is one instance, at least where he himself is a living denial of his own declarations, for Dr. Crane has done much to change the world by means of his four minute essays which have been published in the leading papers of the U. S. Several years ago, the Dr. was one of America's greatest preachers, with an audience of some two thousand people, but Mr. Crane resigned his pulpit, in order to write for the press, because he thought he could reach more people by the latter method. In other words, Dr. Crane believed he could change the world more easily by the way of the press and his experience has proven that you can change the world and not yourself.

NATIONAL HIGHWAYS
ASSOCIATION

New Highway Commissioner

"Important if true" was the comment that A. L, Burridge, candidate for state highway commissioner against Frank F. Rogers made when shown an item that appeared in a Detroit paper saying that Governor Groesbeck had visited Mr, Rogers and had promised the present commissioner his support in Mr. Rogers' campaign for renomination by the republicans of Michigan. Mr. Burridge just returned from a ten day trip through the lower peninsula in the interest of his candidacy and had not before seen the article.

"There is one part of that article that I want to comment upon" said Mr. Burridge. "It's that portion which says that Alton T. Roberts sought to trade off O. B. Fuller for me at the time of the republican state convention last fall. That statement is a falsehood cunningly and viciously circulated for the purpose of injuring Mr. Roberts. It's a piece of as dirty politics as I ever saw. Neither Mr. Fuller nor Mr. Roberts are in this contest and I cannot interpret their being brought into the picture in this way for any other than an ulterior purpose.

"I cannot believe that Mr. Rogers had anything to do with this underhand attack. Upon my return home this morning I found a letter from Mr. Rogers, written to me while I was absent. It was in reply to a letter that I wrote him telling him of the announcement of my candidacy. In this letter Mr. Rogers says. I assure you that on my part there will be no personalities in this contest.

"In view of this declaration for a clean campaign by Mr. Rogers I shall certainly expect from him a public disavowel of any part in the furnishing information or in aiding or abetting the publication of the statement complained of."

Upon being requested to say something as to the encouragement he received while in the lower peninsula, Mr. Burridge said that he is well pleased and greatly encouraged by the many and generous offers of support that he got. He regards the statement that a combination has been made between Gov. Groesbeck and Mr. Rogers as "pure bunk."

"I found a lot of friends, particularly among the ex-service men and also among the party workers who are not only talking my candidacy but are out working for its success."

He "Peached"

A wealthy young man called at the undertaker's and identified the corpse as his father, who had been killed in an accident. He gave orders for elaborate burial. Just as he was leaving he took a last look and observed that the lower jaw had fallen, exposing a set of false teeth. "That's not my father" said he, and immediately left.

The undertaker was a little roiled and he yanked the body out of the handsome metallic coffin and slapped it down on the slab saying: "You d——m fool! If you'd kept your mouth shut you'd got a first-class funeral."

HAPPY NEW YEAR

There was a period when men went about in the barren lands of the Stone Age without any reckoning of time whatever, simply one day after another, month after month and year and year. In the course of ninety years the Great Dinosaur got old. Its skin cracked like parchment and its joints creaked like a lumber wagon and it lay basking in the sun. Primitive man saw a chance to improve his business. As the Dinosaur lay sleeping the Stone Age man grabbed a chunk of char coal and engraved in bold face characters on the animal's side "Use Mica Axle Grease" and this was the first adevrtising. Since that time everybody has been doing it.
